As results from the seven precincts trickled in well after midnight, Senator McGovern emerged the victor in all areas of the city. His unofficial total was 6,365 votes, to 2,920 for the ticket of Nixon Agnew. Socialist Worker Party candidate Linda Jenness had an unofficial total of 68 votes.

Democrat John Olver, ran well in his home town against incumbent John Barrus (R) in the race for state Senator, collecting 6,472 votes to Barrus' unofficial tally of 2,146.

In the State Representative race, James Collins received 5,814 votes; Reed, his closest opponent, 4469, and incumbent James Nolan (D), 3,049.

U.S. Representative Sylvio Conte (R), and Register of Probate, Frank Tuit (D) were uncontested in their respective races.

McG, Brooke Take State; Hicks Tight

BOSTON (AP) - George McGovern carried heavily Democratic Massachusetts Tuesday, winning the state's 14 electoral votes by a substantial margin, while Republican Sen. Edward W. Brooke won a comfortable victory over Democratic challenger John J. Droney.

At least one of the state's incumbent congressmen appeared to be in trouble.

McGovern carried Boston two-to-one, and with 522 of the state's 2,042 precincts reporting, he had 281,967 votes, or 61 per cent, and President Nixon had 180,974 votes, or 39 per cent.

With the same number of precincts reporting, Brooke had 240,636 votes, or 60 per cent, and Droney had 162,266 votes, or 40 per cent.

Brooke had been expected to handily win reelection to a second term over Droney, the Middlesex County district attorney, but two of the state's incumbent congressmen were caught in tight races and an anti-war Democrat bid for another congressional seat.

Rep. Robert F. Drinan, a Newton Democrat and the only Roman Catholic priest in Congress, was challenged for his 4th District seat by GOP state Rep. Martin A. Linsky of Brookline and Independent-Conservative John T. Collins of Newton.

With 34 per cent of the vote in, Drinan had 20,328 votes, compared to 17,691 for Linsky and 3,827 for Collins.

Democratic Rep. Louise Day Hicks, in the 9th District, was seriously threatened in her bid for a second term by Independent John J. Mokley of South Boston in a four-way race.

With 78 per cent of the vote in, Mrs. Hicks had 40,704 votes compared to 40,494 votes for Moakley.

John F. Kerry, 28, who gained national prominence as a leader of Vietnam Veterans Against the War, fell behind in early returns in his bid for the vacant 5th District seat against Republican Paul W. Cronin.

The 12th District race was neck and neck in the early counting.

Conceding the Senate race shortly before midnight, Droney said he thought he did "very well against one of the toughest opponents in the state." He said he thought Brooke waged a "clean, hard campaign."

A poll published just prior to the election gave McGovern a slight lead over Nixon in Massachusetts, where in 1968 Sen. Hubert Humphrey piled up a 700,000 vote margin in winning 2-1.

Even while stressing party unity, candidates like Mrs. Hicks, a conservative, and liberals Kerry and Drinan avoided much mention of McGovern who made two campaign stops in Massachusetts, while Nixon made none.

Mrs. Hicks, who gained some national attention with anti-busing stands in two unsuccessful Boston mayoral runs, attacked Moakley as one who had left the party fold, and she stressed her record, taking credit for Social Security increases.

Kerry and Drinan, both of whom gained attention with anti-war stands, harped on economic and moral issues as their once healthy leads dwindled slowly in pre-election polls.

In other congressional districts, a tight contest for the 12th District seat vacated by retiring Republican Rep. Hastings Keith was waged by Democrat Gerry Studds and Republican William Weeks, both of Cohasset.

Liberal Democratic Rep. Michael Harrington of Salem easily won a challenge for his 6th District seat by GOP state Rep. James B. Moseley of Hamilton, a staunch Nixon supporter.

In the 7th District, Democratic incumbent Torbert Macdonald handily warded off a challenge by Republican Joan M. Aliberti, a member of the Malden School Committee.

Democratic Rep. Thomas P. O'Heill of Cambridge, the House majority whip, had faced only token opposition in the 8th District, and won easily.

Unopposed were Reps. Silvio O. Conte, a Pittsfield Republican, in the 1st District; Edward P. Boland, a Springfield Democrat, in the 2nd; Harold D. Donohue, a Worcester Democrat, in the 3rd; Margaret M. Heckler, a Wellesley Republican, in the 10th, and James A. Burke, a Milton Democrat, in the 11th.

Despite the lackluster nature of all but a few congressional campaigns in Massachusetts, state election officials reported that 3.1 million residents, a record number, registered to vote. A turnout of about 2.7 million was predicted.

The only time Massachusetts voted Republican in a presidential contest since favorite son Calvin Coolidge carried the state in 1924 were the Eisenhower years of 1952 and 1956, when Nixon ran as vice president.

Nixon lost Massachusetts by a two-to-one margin to Humphrey in 1968. The vote that year was 1,469,218 for Humphrey, 766,844 for Nixon and 87,088 for Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

The President, on his few campaign trips this year, bypassed Massachusetts, although Mrs. Nixon appeared briefly for a rally.

McGovern made only two brief stops in Massachusetts-both for rallies-since winning the Democratic nomination.

The South Dakotan's Massachusetts organization, observers felt, was not as well oiled as the group which led McGovern to a lopsided victory in the state in the April primary.

GOP Bids For Senate Control

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans dropped a Senate seat in Kentucky Tuesday but moved into an early lead in four states held by Democrats to keep alive their hopes of capturing control of the Senate.

Needing a net gain of five seats to end 18 years of Democratic control, the Republicans appeared to have a good chance to pick up two of them in Virginia and Oklahoma and were also running strongly in New Hampshire and North Carolina.

Mounting returns from congressional districts indicated the Democrats would retain control of the House. Nearly all Democratic incumbents were winning and the Democrats also picked up two new seats in Florida.

All 435 House seats were at stake in the election and 33 of the 100 Senate seats. The Democrats held a 255 to 177 lead in the House, with three vacancies, and led the Senate, 55 to 45.

Walter "Dee" Huddleston, majority leader of the Kentucky Senate made the Republicans' task more difficult when he defeated former Gov. Louie B. Nunn for the seat vacated by John Sherman Cooper, a Republican who retired.

But strong bids by William L. Scott in Virginia, ex-Gov. Dewey F. Bartlett, in Oklahoma, former Gov. Wesley Powell in New Hampshire and Jesse A. Helms in North Carolina, revived GOP hopes.

Huddleston's strong showing also cast doubt on the pulling power of President Nixon's expected re-election sweep. Nixon romped to an easy victory over George McGovern in Kentucky.

All incumbent Democratic congressmen were also re-elected in Kentucky, but early returns from other congressional districts around the country were too fragmentary to indicate a trend for either party. The Republicans need to gain 41 seats to gain a majority in the House.

The Democrats got off to a fast start in their bid to retain control of the House when they elected 36 unopposed candidates as soon as the polls closed. Only seven Republicans were without opposition.

All 435 House seats are at stake, while 33 of the 100 Senate seats have to be filled. The Democrats now control the House 255 to 177, with three vacancies, and the Senate, 55 to 45.

Not since Dwight D. Eisenhower was swept into office by a commanding majority in 1952 have the Republicans controlled Congress. They lost it the next time out in 1954 and have been in the majority ever since.

The last time control of Congress was divided was in 1930 when the Republicans were in harge in the Senate while the Democrats ran the House.

Among states where Republican Senate hopes ran highest were Oklahoma: New Mexico, Georgia and North Carolina, four seats held by the Democrats in the 92nd Congress, but in which there is no incumbent running due to retirements and primary defeats. They are regarded as the most vulnerable to Republican capture.

Other states where the Republicans think they have a good chance to oust Democrats are Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Virginia and Montana.

However, the Democrats appear likely to win the South Dakota seat vacated by ailing Republican Karl Mundt and are making strong challenges against Republican incumbents in Texas, Michigan, Maine and Delaware. The Republicans can't afford to lose any of them if they are to make a net gain of five seats and get control.

The key to success in each of the battleground states, in the view of GOP campaign officials, is an overwhelming Nixon victory. The Democrats generally share that view and most of their candidates have avoided tying themselves too closely to McGovern.

In the House, where local issues tend to overshadow national ones and incumbents have a number of built-in advantages, the pulling effect of a Nixon sweep would be diluted, but could still prove influential.

A more important factor in the House elections is the unusually large number of districts with no incumbent-59, or nearly 14 per cent of the House. Retirements, primary defeats, redistricting and resignations to run for other office account for the vacancies.

Republican Governors Look To Coattails

WASHINGTON (AP) - Most of the Republican candidates in the 18 governorship races Tuesday looked for a ride on President Nixon's coattails to help them to victory over their Democratic opponents although strictly state issue dominated the campaign talk.

Early political predictions, however, indicated Democrats had a chance to increase their already hefty margin in the nation's statehouses.

Going into the elections, Democrats held 30 governorships and Republicans 20. In the 18 states electing governors, the pre-election division was 10 Democrats and 8 Republicans.

Nine of the gubernatorial races were comparatively wide open, with the current governors retiring, unable to succeed themselves by state law or defeated in the primaries. Three of these-Indiana, New Hampshire and Vermont-were held by Republicans. The six held by Democrats were Missouri, Montana, North Carolina, North Dakota, Rhode Island and Texas.

In the nine states where the incumbents sought reelection, five were Republican and four Democrats.

Here is a brief look at each race:

Arkansas: Democratic Gov. Dale Bumpers largely ignored his Republican opponent, former state welfare commissioner Len E. Blaylock, during his campaign. Bumpers relied on his record of building a healthy state financial surplus.

Delaware: Both GOP Gov. Russell W. Peterson and Democratic challenger Sherman Tribbitt had their campaign troubles in a close race. Peterson suffered from a fractured state Republican party after defeating Atty. Gen. David P. Buckson in the primary. Tribbitt, minority leader of the state House of Representatives, was handicapped by limited finances and an inadequate campaign organization.

Illinois: Republican Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie billed himself as "the governor with guts" for putting an unpopular state income tax through the legislature. Democratic opponent Daniel Walker, who stumped the state in a 1,200-mile walking tour, said Ogilvie was a hypocrite because he earlier had said no income tax was needed.

Indiana: Republican Dr. Otis Bowen and Democrat Matthew E. Welsh both campaigned in favor of increased statewide taxes to ease local property taxes and voiced markedly similar views on other issues.

Iowa: GOP Gov. Robert D. Ray had a united state Republican party behind his bid for a third term against Democrat Paul Franzenburg, former state treasurer. Franzenburg accused Ray of failure to relieve the property tax burden. Ray countered that his opponent's program to increase welfare payments would require a huge tax boost.

Kansas: Democratic Gov. Robert Docking stressed his record of tax reform and claimed his GOP opponent, Majority Leader Morris Kay of the state House of Representatives, shied away from touchy [illegible] issues in the legislature. Kay proposed his own tax reform program and said the state needed a Republican governor to work with a GOP-controlled legislature and the Nixon administration.

Indians Begin Negotiations To Vacate Federal Building

WASHINGTON (AP) - As protesting Indians tightened security around the federal building they seized nearly a week ago, government negotiators met with Indian spokesmen in hopes of convincing the protesters to leve peacefully.

"We're supposed to be negotiating an agreement for our departure," from the Bureau of Indian Affairs Building said Hank Adams, an Indian lawyer, moments

"We're supposed to be negotiating an agreement for our departure," from the Bureau of Indian Affairs Building said Hank Adams, an Indian lawyer, moments before the talks began at noon.

But Adams cautioned that longstanding Indian grievances, as well as for "provisions for allowing our people to return to our communities," would also be brought up by the Indians.

The meeting was scheduled after a U.S. District Court ordered the federal government to oust the protesters. The ouster was delayed until 9 p.m. Wednesday by the U.S. Circuit Court here.

The Indians seized control of the building Thursday after coming to Washington to protest government policies. The Indians, coming from all parts of the country, described their journey as the Trail of Broken Treaties.

They strengthened security around the building following the federal court eviction order. Windows were taped, presumably to prevent shards of glass from flying about if the windows were broken, and doors were barricaded.

Unconfirmed rumors also have circulated that the protesters have planted explosives or gasoline in the building and plan to destroy it if they are forcibly evicted. Asked whether the rumors were true, one Indian replied, "All I know is they restricted smoking to the first floor."

Scores of curious onlookers walked down Constitution Avenue to view the symbolic teepee in front of the building and the Indians sitting on the front steps.

Writer Says Men Oppressed

LONDON (AP) - The American male is the most oppressed man in the western world, says the author of a book that also argues men are really slaves and women their exploiters.

Esther Vilar, author of "The Manipulated Man," also thinks that women are stupid and getting more so every day; that men are brilliant but locked into stultifying jobs; that housework is a pleasure and men are deprived of it and that all of this stems from mothers who condition their children into manipulative and slave roles.

The book was originally published in Germany where it made the best seller list before it was launched in seven other European countries.

Now Miss Vilar has added a special chapter devoted to the American male and is preparing for a lecture and publicity tour in the United States.

She actually wrote the book in New York almost two years ago during a five-month visit in which she lived in an East Village Hotel and made research trips to suburbia.

The book is, she said, an illustration of a theory she calls "the pleasure of nonfreedom."

Basically her theory is that the male is brilliant and capable of doing great things with his freedom but his intelligent thought frighten him. He seeks the security of the enslaved and marries.

Conditioned by his mother from childhood to believe that he is smart and responsible and that girls are incapable and helpless, he easily assumes his responsibilities. He is therefore bound for life in stultifying jobs. For the American male this is all compounded by the high standard of living and the emphasis on success.

"In no other country do mothers so pitilessly train the male infant to perform. No other society exists where the male sexual drive is exploited for money so unscrupulously," she wrote.

Girls, though born intelligent, Miss Vilar says are taught they don't have to think because men are going to work for them. Their goal is to find a man to do this. Some women may work or go to college but only to make themselves attractive to men.

Handful Of Chicanos Organize For Nixon

SAN JOSE, Calif. (LNS) - The local Spanish Speaking Committee to Re-Elect the President is the brainchild of Ben Fernandez. In private, Fernandez prides himself on being "the nation's foremost Mexican-American economist." Friends are of the opinion that he has been in the $100,000-a-year bracket for about the last dozen years. His main stock in trade has been the organization of savings and loan banks, three of them in California--in San Fernando, Los Angeles and San Jose. He has taken substantial fees for organizing banks in other cities where they have not come into existence.

The enterprising Mr. Fernandez will undertake a bank organization for a fee of no less than $1,500 from at least 10 would-be board members. Often the fee is higher and the number of paying takers greater. His center of operations is Research, Inc. in Chatsworth, where he owns a substantial home, with several servants. "I always go first class," Fernandes boasts.

As founder of the federally-funded National Economic Development Agency (NEDA), promoter Fernandez placed himself in a unique position. NEDA has offices in 10 cities and is instrumental in dolling out loans and grants to new ventures in "Brown Capitalism." Perhaps it was contact with business applicants to the federal trough that allowed Fernandez to "pledge $1,000 from 1,000 Mexican Americans." With that promise to Nixon, Fernandez became chairman of the Hispanic Finance Committee to Re-Elect the President. His small business loan contacts should also be helpful in finding new comers willing to plunk down $1500-$2000 to get on the board of a bright new shiny bank.

Six months ago, Ben Fernandez sat down with some local Mexican-Americans and convinced them that their future was with the Nixon Administration. Campaigning for Nixon was to pay off in new and increased loans and grants to Mexican American businessmen. The nucleus of the Nixon group was then formed of an assortment of people hoping for the new millenium of federal windfall money. A small number of federal jobseekers and hopeful free enterprisers fell into line with those regulars who jump from payroll-to-payroll in government jobs.

The first venture of the group was a dinner for Romana Banuelos. The $1,000 a plate banquet was not to celebrate her successful exploitation of Mexican nationals in her Los Angeles sweatshop, but rather to honor her as Nixon's Treasurer. The dinner was held at the home of Severo Ozuna, senior member of a family which has just opened two new furniture discount houses, having fallen heir to substantial sums from the Small Business Administration. Ozuna Food Products, another family company, shares notoriety with Mrs. Banuelos. According to reliable sources, the Immigration Department turned up low-wage nationals (illegally in the U.S.) at Ozuna Food Products in 1969, 1970 and 1971. The dinner turned $24,000 into the Nixon coffers and laid the basis for formation of the Santa Clara County Spanish-Speaking Committee to Re-Elect the President.

Charles Esparza is the national chariman of SSCRP. Until he was discharged by San Jose's Model Cities Community Board, he served as Director of that program. He has held a number of jobs in federally-funded "community organizations" and is currently on a federally backed payroll for the Foundation for Community Research and Development. The Foundation is involved as a conduit in Nixon's scheme of "Brown Capitalism" and is, strangely or not, the employer of three or more of the 14 members of the SSCRP.

Some months ago, word went out along the federal poverty job circuit that any employees taking active roles in the McGovern campaign could look forward to their final paychecks. Yet the Foundation for Research and Development seems to be able to supply cadres for Nixon without endangering its government bankroll.

Esparza, who recently applied for a job with the Office of Minority Business Enterprises is quite frank about the whole thing. "There is no question of ideology in this whole thing..We are tired of doing things just because they are right. We are in this as a business deal, pure and simple. We back Nixon and he will put money into the hands of Chicano businessmen."

Many years ago, Esparza thought of himself as a liberal. "I knew Nixon way back. I worked for Helen Gahagen Douglas when Nixon got his start by lying and redbaiting. I know all that. I used to be called a pinko. Nixon says he's going to screw us and he is screwing us. That's what I like about him--he's honest."

Confusion seems the trademark at the San Jose's Eastside Nixon office. There is a picture of Cesar Chavez on the wall, while Nixon sponsors legislation that would crush the United Farmworkers. And in a single week, long before the McGovern nomination, one member flipflopped out of the Chairmanship of the Democratic Central Committee and into the Nixon committee.

Victor Camacho, Re-Election committee member points with pride to the office operation but his talk doesn't match the facts. "This office is unbelievable. We've made 1,000 phone calls already. We have 1,600 cards of volunteers. Our workers tell us that Chicanos are going to vote for Nixon 3-to-1. That's the fact of it. Look you can see for yourself." What could be seen was that there were some telephones--unattended at 7 PM on a Wednesday, three weeks before the election.

End Rhetoric

Later this month Student Government President Larry Ladd, in his capacity as Student Trustee for the UMass Amherst Campus, will bring before the Trustees a motion to overturn the recent Faculty Senate vote retaining the highly controversial Rhetoric requirement.

The Trustees should overturn the decision. Both the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate and the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate strongly recommended the abolition of the requirement, Academic Affairs (and the full Student Senate) doing it unanimously and Academic Matters doing it by a 14-0 vote with one abstention. Both committees have done their homework on the subject far better than the Faculty Senate, who will have a hard time convincing anyone (including this newspaper) that their action was not completely in their own interests.

As things stand now the Faculty Senate may as well not exist as a Senate, they are little more than a union. Two weeks ago, when the Rhetoric question was first supposed to come up, the Senate spent almost two hours debating such issues as tenure and sabbaticals, then decided that the hour was too late to discuss rhetoric (it was 5:45). This blatant display of lack of concern for students, who are the reason they are here, coupled with an equally blatant display of pure self interest should tell both students and Administration where the Faculty is at, and if the trend continues both parties should know enough to place very little value on any future Fac-Sen deliberations.

What To Do Now

Nov. 3 - Wednesday morning it will all be over but the unpleasant odor that will linger for a few weeks. This year's bad aftertaste will be revived during the Watergate investigation, which is to say Campaign '72 will refuse to die, but the political signs will be taken down, and no one will be asking you to canvass any more. In short, it is both time and opportunity to go back to living a normal life. Bores will have to find something else to talk about.

Does anyone remember the days before Campaign '72? Nixon has been running for four years, McGovern and Muskie for two. Let us make a tacit agreement not to think about campaigns for a year, and we can discuss living again.

The very next phase is going to be winter. If you don't like winter, you're a fool to live in New England, but it's not too late for you to surrender your bummer. Southwest is building a skating rink, where lots of people will help you to learn or to remember how to skate. Skating is just one of those sports indigenous to winter which help you get into this chilly season. Another inexpensive sport is snow shoeing, which is basically truckin' with a couple of feet of snow thrown in to keep you on your heels. Cross-country skiing is also inexpensive, if you're into nature.

Downhill skiing costs more money, but you can always scrounge equipment a couple of times per winter. The type of skiing you favor depends on your personality. If you trip to see god, cross-country is for you. If you trip to see the colors and the rushes, downhill is what you want. If you don't trip at all, try skiing anyway. You'll like it.

The Campus Center is usually warm in the winter, and is more crowded than in the spring or the fall. The entertainment value of the Campus Center increases as the crowd increases. This winter, when you have nothing else to do, you can walk around the Campus Center and look at the people. Remember though that they're looking at you; there is no proscenium in the living theater.

Another thing to do during the long cold winter is to get high. They say that getting high is bad for your physical health. So is air pollution. The difference is that a world producing air pollution is bad for your mental health as well. Getting high can help. If it doesn't help, then don't.

Everyone has the month of January off from school. Talk on your friends incessantly about vacation, and eventually you will figure out a vacation that won't bankrupt you. A month is a long time. You can go almost anywhere, and be back in a month without spending too much money. A reading of Steal This Book by Abbie Hoffman might help your planning along.

Indoor games are also useful during along winter. Boyden and WoPE will be open each afternoon, if you're interested in indoor sports. There are also endless possibilities for dorm activity. Whist, Risk, Monopoly, Bridge, and Poker are old and obvious favorites, but the Tiddly-Wink revival is here, and someone can teach you how to play. Light pastimes aside, however, sex is still the greatest indoor sport.

Sex, as we all should know, comes into several varieties of experience and satisfaction. For some, sex itself is worth the price of emission. For others, sex to be enjoyed must come together with a deep personal relationship. Winter is a good time to fall in love, despite the collected wisdom of Pat Boone and Eddie Rambeau. Running through a field of tall grass in slow motion is difficult in a New England winter, but hot buttered rum in front of an oversized fireplace is just as romantic. Get it on this winter; waiting for April Love is both an illusion and a drag.

Perhaps unfortunately, some people get their biggest kicks out of voyeurism. Mostly they are sport fans, but some of them go to movies all the time, or concerts. These events will continue through the winter. I must admit that I have spectated myself a time or two, but this is a winter for action. Spectation will be available, but let's not overdo it.

Some people who worked on Campaign '72 did so because they are sincere and committed in their desire to see a better world. The polls do not produce a better world; but they do tell us whether or not a better world will be possible through the government or not. There are plenty of problems that will still exist after the election, and unless someone tackles them, they will be ignored, not to mention unsolved. There is a world that needs saving. I salute those who are more tenacious and persistent than I am. I gave up saving the world on a full-time basis last June, and am not ready to take the plunge again just yet. I am not downgrading your efforts; I admire them. There is one more reason, though, that I feel it necessary to have a satisfying if selfish winner.

For over a year now we have been asked to close ranks behind George McGovern. If McGovern loses on November 7, there will be a feeling of emptiness where a feeling of satisfaction should be. Should McGovern win, the skies won't clear up right away, and the dead will not return to life. As McGovern aides have been saying to the press, Congress won't let McGovern get away with his quasi-radical programs. The emptiness stares at you from either side.

I guess the major reason I want a good winter is to recover from the Presidential campaign. Should Nixon win, it's an obvious drag. I'm afraid, though, that whatever the outcome of the election, the climax of the McGovern campaign will be November 7, at which time I am afraid we will be asking ourselves, "What if they gave an orgasm and nobody came?" Hoa binh.

Church and State

The campaign is over. Many issues were passed around many were buried, some lasted through the campaign. One issue which received minimal attention we would like to unearth. It is an issue which is never rigorously debated but still persists. We are referring to the relationship between The Church (meaning organized religious institutions within America) and the State (meaning government, state, federal, or local).

Though The Church has not had the stronghold in American of its European counterparts, its influence has not been without its consequences. The Church-State issue is a latent one in American politics. An issue which is always there, but which is consistently avoided by politicians. If you recall it came up in the beginning of the recent campaign, but disappeared. Nobody wants to touch it. It's too hot. The argument goes something like this: If you come out against The Church in any substantial way, you lose a sizeable portion of the religious bloc vote. However if you avoid the issue, and sweep it aside you disperse the bloc vote amongst other issues. In any case the issue is consistently avoided. The problems do not get solved.

If one is aware of the problems of our cities today, one knows that part of that problem is due to a lack of revenue to run the cities. One reason for this lack of revenue is the tax exempt status of Church property. That of course excludes Church property used for secular purposes. However in cities such as Boston and New York Church property which is non-taxable is extensive. The cities lose a large portion of their tax base.

The Church also receives privileged subsidies to run their schools. How does state aid to parochial schools benefit the majority? It doesn't merely help the upkeeping of the religious corporation. The majority pay for this interest, which is certainly not a public resource.

We find ourselves in one way or the other supporting the power and influence of an institution which in no way represents the majority. The Church is essentially a private interest. The majority pay. We lose out in the quality and amount of services our community can provide, because of the tax dollars lost in Church property. We lose because our tax dollars are used to subsidize The Church. We lose because the State sanctions and enforces prayer in our public schools, thus promulgating and advertising religion in America. What do we get out of it? Nothing, we merely perpetuate the existence of the religious lobby.

It's time to meet this issue. Complete the separation of Church and State. Let religious institutions fend for themselves. If they are to survive let it be by the appeal of their doctrine, rather than by the sanctioned and enforced support of the State. The State whould be allocating its funds and services to uses which benefit us all, not just selected special interests. The money which the Church saps from the government till, is money which could be put to better uses for us all. Doesn't every Church teach "Thou shall not steal".

Letters To The Editor

Victimized

To the Editor:

I am a victim. Of multiple-choice and mechanization. Modernization? Hmph. All right, so in those high school aptitude tests I got a 20 in mechanical ability. I argued with the man at the Registry about the questions on the driving exam, and even (I'll admit it) used to cheat on SRA. What does this all mean - that I'm one of those professional non-conformists? Not at all. It's just that this decade's obsession with standarized/computerized "improvements" has left me feeling lost and somewhat abashed at my inability to appreciate these pillars of progressivism. I guess I'm one of those unfortunate people who need to question and debate in order to understand - difficult if not impossible to do with a computer. This time, however, I refuse to sit back and be intimidated. By voting machines. Today was my very first election. And rousting my usually comatose sense of patriotic duty, I caught the "voter special" and headed down to faded Oddfellows Hall. Half the line of voters was admitted, and the rest of us remained outside for a good fifteen minutes - ample time for someone to have revealed to us the many mysteries of the voting machine. I mean, I'm the chick who'd been wondering whether or not to bring a No. 2 pencil - Well, who knew? Anyhow, we went inside and stood around, and still no one said anything about what lay behind those two blue curtains. The Wizard of Oz, maybe? They simply asked our names and addresses, and handed us a slip. (Is this a pun?) Then, the girl behind me noticed this puny little "replica" of the voting mechanism. Excited (and a little nervous) we didn't bother to fully master the intricacies of the model, just fiddled with the levers, and assumed you pressed the blue one down for "yes" or "no", then moved the red one to the left to record the vote. At least, that's what we thought.

So, without further indoctrination we took our respective booths. I went in, and promptly entered a state of shock: There in front of me loomed this huge board, about 100 times the size of the model, with 3,000 little knobs, and printing you'd need a microscope to read - or so it seemed, in my present state. I took the plunge. Grabbing this giant red lever, I closed the curtains. So far so good. I decided to be systematic, since I'd heard that we might not have time to complete the ballot in the allotted 5 minutes. (Shades of SRA, no?) Then, I read the first little box: It was written in English, and I could understand it! Ecstatic with this revelation, filled with a sense of achievement, I turned the blue knob then threw the red one to record the vote - Right? WRONG! The curtain flew open and I stood there, mouth agape. "What happened?" I breathed. Then I was patiently informed as to how a voting machine works. That was that. The end. Kaput. And no, nothing could be done. Almost in tears, I wandered outside. What would I tell my grandchildren about my first 18-year-old vote? But lo and behold, there in the parking lot were two other shame-faced young ladies - the ones who'd been ahead and behind me in line!

Who ever voted for voting machines, anyway? Crushed, I staggered across campus and burst into the Collegian office: I'd hoped to stick my thumb in the posterity-pie, and instead, got my foot stuck in the IBM—Mouth.

Belchertown Thanks

To the Editor:

On behalf of the children at Belchertown State School and the brothers of Alpha Phi Omega, I would like to gratefully thank all the generous people who participated in Las Vegas Nite which was held on Saturday night, October 28. You have helped to make it possible for us to donate some seven hundred dollars towards the development of a Sensory-Motor Playground at Nursery 2. This amount, coupled with our donation of six hundred dollars in 1971, will help us to begin construction of the playground in the very near future. Plans are currently being studied concerning the best possible turf for the playground and, already, some padded equipment has been purchased.

Unfortunately, we were unable to please everyone who attended, which is so often the case in many similar endeavors. I apologize for this and I hope that future Las Vegas Nites will be able to amend this problem.

I would also like to thank, once again, all eight lovely young women who were willing to put altruism above selfishness by participating in our Las Vegas Nite Queen Contest. These people raised over three hundred and fifty dollars alone. However, the future fate of the traditional, but controversial, Queen Contest has yet to be determined, there being considerable doubt as to whether it will ever be held again.

Lastly, I would like to extend my appreciation and thanks to Program Council for sponsoring Alpha Phi Omega and Las Vegas Nite; and special thanks go to those wonderful people in RSO who were so essential to the success of Las Vegas Nite.

Sincerely,
Jonathan Weiner

Elderly Considered?

To The Editor:

At the White House Conference on Aging, which drew up recommendations that were embodied in the 1972 amendments to the Older Americans Act, Mr. Nixon declared "...any action which enhances the dignity of older Americans enhances the dignity of all Americans, for unless the American dream comes true for our older generation, it cannot be complete for any generation."

Last week while the issues of peace in Vietnam, school busing, amnesty and the Watergate incident were being hotly debated, Mr. Nixon was quietly shafting all elderly Americans when he contemptuously vetoed the 1972 amendments to the Older Americans Act.

While not a minority group as such, our elderly population suffers the same deprivations as the Blacks, Mexican-Americans and American Indians, - segregation, isolation and dehumanization.

With the stroke of the pen Mr. Nixon declared the elderly irrelevant. He vetoed appropriations to support a hot meals nutrition program for the elderly; an act to permit 40,000 elders to work their way out of poverty; an act to help 56,000 workers over age 45 to receive mid-career training; special programs in transportation and housing for the aged; and research programs to study the health problems of older Americans.

Why did he do it? Could it be that he views elderly Americans as a threat since they possess the wisdom and experience that can counterweight his dehumanizing policies? God knows we have seen all too many of them in the past four years.

Write to your Congressmen and Senators today and request that these Acts be resubmitted in January and passed into law as soon as possible.

Editorial Point

The Collegian staff for Tuesday night, November 7 wishes to go on record for all time: Sixteen votes for George McGovern, zero votes for Richard Nixon.

In a democracy, the electorate is rewarded with the choice of its majority. We wish the majority as much luck as we wish ourselves.

Early returns indicate that Massachusetts is going to McGovern. The Chamber of Commerce should make that its primary selling point.

Perhaps we have no cause for alarm. In a democracy, a well-informed citizenry is a must. Citizen Nixon must be the best-informed citizen in history. He even knew what the Democrats were doing, which is something the Democrats cannot say.

The charter flight to Europe business might do well to consider changing some of their charters to one-way flights.

The television breakdowns of votes by socio-economic status indicate that ignorance is a cross-cultural pattern.

Now is the time to begin making sure Agnew doesn't run against Wallace next time.

Estelle Naive?

To The Editor

I would like to make several comments concerning Mr. Estelle's letter of November 6th.

First is was the South Vietnames who, with the approval of the United States, first broke the Geneva Accords by refusing to participate in unification elections with North Vietnam. The initial build-up of American support to South Vietnam came in response to the justified North Vietnames agitation at this boldfaced underhandedness. Some time after South Vietnam broke the Geneva Treaty President Eisenhower admitted that had the unification elections been held Ho Chi Minh probably would have won. It is obvious then, that the U.S. has shamelessly intervened in the self-determination of the Vietnamese people under the false pretenses of preserving their freedom. Whether the United States could have won the war is beside the point. There has never been nor is there presently any moral or political justification for an American presence in Southeast Asia.

Secondly, in regard to busing I am amazed at Mr Estelle's naivete. The seprate but equal doctrine which he appears to believe in and which is nothing more than a disguise form of rascism was discredited decades ago.

Urban University?

To The Editor

As I write, an early morning traffic jam is in progress outside my window...on North Pleasant Street. Pleasant no longer, at least not at this hour. What is remarkable is that 8 out of 10 of the whining growling automobiles have only one passenger. The triumph of convenience, of the selfish thoughtlessness parading, congesting, in the name of individualism. Each student or employee of the megalopolitan university pushing 2,000 pounds of pollution belching steel and rubber toward the crowded asphalt of the 'campus'.

Car pools? Buses? Would these individuals respond or is it that they admire the rapid urbanization of our town? Perhaps it is not too much to say that the University is basic training for middle class anglos in the art of urban dwelling...the massive monolithic ghetto dormitories, the sprawling four lane malls, the mushrooming shopping centers, quickie food stands, traffic lights and jams, the urban garage.

Is it that there are indeed people in the midst of that increasingly threatening sprawl of brick and concrete who are talking about, thinking about, reading and writing about making contemporary America a better place to live while turning the small section in which they do live from rural tranquility to nightmare? I type slowly. The cars are still lined up outside my window.

Medieval Nationalism

To the Editor:

Because Bob Estelle's viewpoint forms, however subtly, the basis for much of the public's criterion in decision making, his extreme solutions do warrant some discussion. This year on campus, many like myself are returning veterans whose experience is both deep and painful. And, as education will do, our view of the world has correspondently broadened. The simplistic solutions put forth by John Birch Society leaders as Robert Welch - whose writings I too have read - and his colleagues as echoed by Bob Estelle are, at best, naive and dangerous. The complex problems of today cannot be solved by following the ideology of the past. The world can no longer afford to conceive of itself in such dualistic concepts as east-west, reds-allies, good guys-bad guys, them-us no more than it can accept the technological solutions of the past for today's technological problems. What is needed is new solutions conceived with new criterion. But, if we continue to create policies based on the medieval concepts of nationalism and hate, to keep the past upon its throne, we shall hardly do justice to the needs of all individuals for life and love.

While the world at large today is too filled with distrust and hate for us to neglect prudent recognition of problems, we must, individually and collectively, make a start toward a more humane and compassionate environment. I, and many like me, will never again allow ourselves to carry the weapon and to kill and waste for a flag or any such symbol. And we hope you, Bob Estelle, will never have to learn to distinguish between the fire of the M-16 and the rattle of the AK-47, or to know the deepfelt wail of the woman whose child lies wasted by the roadside. But, unless we have the courage to see and recognize others as sisters and brothers, we may all, without doubt, hear the roar of hate from the gun muzzle, or perhaps even as a big BANG!

Meatman Convicted

BOSTON (AP) - A 10-year meat inspector for the U.S. Department of Agriculture was convicted by a U.S. District Court jury Tuesday of accepting bribes.

Joseph P. Santosuosso, 42, of Rockport was found guilty of receiving $210 and accepting 174 pounds of assorted meat products in April and May 1969.

Santosuosso was among 40 meat inspectors indicted in October 1971 on charges of bribery and conspiracy. Eight have been acquitted; 16 have been convicted, and charges have been dropped against two others.

Kosygin Demands Curbs On Waste

MOSCOW, Nov. 6—Premier Aleksei N. Kosygin, in an unusually frank appraisal of the Soviet economy, has called for stringent savings and reduction of waste in 1973 in view of the costly crop failure this year.

Reflecting increasing strain on resources as a result of an expenditure estimated at $2-billion for grain from abroad, the Soviet leader demanded more efficient use of industrial capacity, barred new construction unless absolutely needed and said foreign currncy should not be spent for goods that Soviet industry could produce.

He welcomed the Soviet Union's growing tendency to sell advanced technology abroad but urged a more systematic effort to obtain Western licenses for modernization of outdated industry.

Mr. Kosygin made these and other harsh comments in a speech Sept. 30 to a meeting of the powerful State Planning Committee, the economic planning agency, which discussed the draft of the 1973 economic plan.

The speech, not previously published, is summarized in the current issue of the monthly planning journal, Planovoye Khozyaistvo (Planned Economy).

Weather Caused Problems

The fact that the Premier took an active part in the session and delivered what was described as a major speech seemed to suggest that the economy, and industry in particular, remained one of his chief concerns in the division of functions among Soviet leaders.

He made only passing reference to the farm situation, saying that "unfavorable weather conditions this year caused problems in agriculture as well as in some branches of industry and in construction."

In an apparent allusion to the additional expenditures required this year and their future impact, he added that most of the difficulties were being overcome as a result of unspecified measures and demanded that the plan for next year reflect the new situation.

Phone Co. No. 1 In Millionaires

BOSTON (AP) —Three of the eight millionaires created by the first six months of the Massachusetts Lottery were employees of the New England Telephone Co.

The latest to join the ranks of the happily unemployed is Helene Sullivan, 32, of Brockton, a telephone clerk in Boston who won the big prize at Monday night's drawing here.

The second winner, back in May, was Thomas G. Hall, 25, of Salem, a telephone repairman who-like Mrs. Sullivan-announced his retirement when he received his check for $50,000-the first installment of a payment he'll receive annually through 1992.

The fourth millionaire, who took the prize in July, was Cornelius Collins, 42, of Boston's Allston section.

With 18 years behind him at the telphone company, he was the only one of the trio who did not quit. He stayed on as a testman. A company spokesman said he'll be able to retire with pension in seven more years.

In addition to her first check, Mrs. Sullivan also received a kiss from hockey player Bobby Orr.

Then her husband, David, who is keeping his Westwood job at $185 a week as a shipper with General Motors, Inc., had to borrow a dime to call his parents.

They were babysitting the couple's six-month-old son at their home in Brockton.

Mrs. Sullivan said the money would enable her to take a trip to Europe, buy a chalet in New Hampshire and a new car and have "as many children as I want."

33 Die In Bulgarian Plane Crash

VIENNA, Austria (AP) - A spokesman of the Italian Embassy in Bulgaria said Tuesday all passengers on a domestic flight of a Bulgarian airliner died when the plane crashed on Saturday.

The spokesman, who was reached in Sofia by telephone from Vienna, added the embassy learned this from Bulgarian authorities. He said four Italians died.

There has been no official Bulgarian announcement that the plane crashed and that there were no survivors. The last report of the Bulgarian news agency BTA on Sunday was that the plane was missing in dense fog near Plovdiv.

VITA To Hold First Meeting

VITA, the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program, sponsored by the Center for Outreach Programs will behaving its first meeting of volunteers on November 15th, at 8:00 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union. All students interested in volunteering for the program should attend this meeting.

Students volunteering for VITA will be trained to fill out both state and federal income tax forms, and will then be sent to one of several locations to aid low-income people in filling out their income tax returns. They will be enrolled in the School of Business Administration course SBA 385--Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program, and will receive one to three credits for their experience. All volunteers must attend the training sessions which will be held on January 22nd through the 25th, three hours each night. In addition to learning to help others, knowledge of how to fill out income tax forms is a handy thing. And in order to make this program a continuing one, interested students will receive training in a leadership capacity.

After the training period, students receiving one credit will work for two hours a week for an eleven week period, helping people fill out their income tax forms, and will keep a short journal of the experience. Students receiving two credits will work three hours a week and keep a short journal, and students receiving three credits will work four hours a week and write a report of case studies.

Volunteers will work from the hours of 3-5, or from 7-9, at one of three locations in Springfield--the North End Community Center, the South End Community Center, or the Urban League of Springfield.

Sex Drives At Bad Feelings

By Drs. McCashin and Klein

Q. My boyfriend and I have a good relationship in most respects. One problem that seems to be developing concerns his sex drive which is a lot greater than mine. He says I should accommodate his needs but I resent making love when I don't feel like it. Which one of us is selfish?

A. It is not uncommon for the sexual needs of people to be somewhat different. When the differences are significant it is obvious that some sort of accommodation or compromise is necessary. It is our experience, however, that most problems of this kind do not relate to sexual drive per se.

It is often the case that this kind of problem relates to more deep rooted struggles in a relationship. The sexual argument may symbolically play out the fight for dominance and power between lovers. The feeling that one is not adequately satisfied by his lover may be difficult to express openly and may therefore become "translated" into a sense of indifference.

In our work with couples it is not unusual for each partner to experience themselves as the "victim". Their partner is seen as the villain. The man may think of his lover as a "withholding, repressed, castrating bitch" trying in every way to destroy his masculine ego. The woman may well see her lover as "exploiter, chauvinist rapist" trying relentlessly to reduce her to an object for his selfish pleasure. When a relationship is explored in some depth it is rare that things break down this simply. The victim-villain formula usually doesn't apply, but that the larger issues of giving, taking and sharing have not yet been worked out.

Q. I have a bad temper. All of a sudden, for no reason, I find myself angry and yelling particularly at my girlfriend. She says I'm throwing temper tantrums. If I can't learn to control myself I'm going to break up our relationship. How can I stop acting this way?

A. The biggest obstacle to controlling yourself is your insistence that you lose your temper for no reason. Because you deny the circumstances that trigger your anger it seems to you as though intense feelings well up suddenly from out of no where. The fact that your girlfriend sees you as throwing temper tantrums means that you are using an old childhood strategy in an attempt to solve a problem in your relationship. Yet it appears that not only is this method inappropriate but that it may be ultimately self defeating. This behavior represents a need to preserve your psychological integrity in a situation where you feel threatened and overwhelmed. Take stock of your feelings toward your girlfriend and decide what is getting you riled-up. What about your relationship scares and frustrates you. Is it sex, a fear of becoming too dependent, or concerns about being dominated? Knowing the reason for getting angry will open the way for you to assert yourself in a more appropriate manner.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will answer your questions or discuss any issue on your mind. Send or bring your questions to Mental Health, 303 Machmer Hall. All inquiries are strictly confidential.

Voices Of New Africa And Jazz Workshop In Concert

The UMass Jazz Workshop and the Voices of New Africa will present a concert Tuesday, Nov. 14, at 8:00 p.m in the Student Union Ballroom.

All compositions and musical arrangements for the program have been written or produced by members of the Jazz Workshop. This year, with the addition of Dr. Max Roach to the University faculty, the idea of the Jazz Workshop has been expanded to include both large and small ensembles.

At the Nov. 14 concert, the Voices of New Africa will be featured in a 1970 composition written by Max Roach for the choir and instrumental ensemble, "Singin' Wid a Sword in My Hand". The composition was originally performed at the 1970 Montreaux Jazz Festival. Dr. Roach will conduct the choir and Dr. Frederick Tillis, also of the UMass faculty, will conduct the large instrumental ensemble.

Jake Epstein, assistant director, will conduct his piece "Big Bill" and his arrangements of "Sister Sadie" and "More Today Than Yesterday", the latter featuring vocalist Marilyn Dyer. "This Could Be the Start of Something New" and "Super Star", arrangements by Wally Gladwin, a graduate student in the workshop will also be on the program. Dianne Dinucci will be featured vocalist in "Super Star". Dr. Tillis will conduct a new work of his written for this concert, "Blue Stone Diferencia".

The program will also include a variety of music by small ensembles which are a part of the Jazz Workshop.

Presented by the UMass music department, the concert is open to the public without charge.

JOE Struggling To Satisfy Changing, Growing Programs

The Juvenile Opportunities Extension volunteer program for the Westfield Detention Center and the city of Holyoke has spent this semester struggling with satisfying the needs of changing and growing programs. JOE organizes students to work regularly with teenage youth on a volunteer basis. The activity takes place both in the youth's community and in a detention center.

The time volunteers put in at the Westfield Detention Center is on an individual and group basis. Volunteers have been making trips to Westfield to work on the floor of the detention center or do things on a one to one basis with a particular youth. However, some volunteers have organized themselves to program group activities.

The group idea came about when some volunteers sponsored a Halloween party at the center. Soda and food was supplied by the program and the volunteers. Also members of the JOE organization got in touch with people who were musically inclined to play for the party. Overall the party was a success for kids and volunteers to the extent that a party is being planned for Thanksgiving.

Another part of the success of Halloween is the fact that now JOE has scheduled regular bus runs to Westfield every Monday and Wednesday. The bus leaves at 6:00 PM from the Campus Center Circle. The idea is to have regular activities for each evening instead of doing things on a one to one basis.

Keeping in mind the desire to get the kids in the building together for a large group activity the JOE organizers settled on the idea of games of chance. Bingo and other games are on tap for the youth and volunteers with snacks and cigarettes as prizes. As a Monday and Wednesday routine develops it is hoped that a variety of things could happen.

The Holyoke Parole Volunteer Program is in a similar position as the other JOE volunteer component. Currently volunteers are working on a one to one basis with kids on parole meeting several times a week. There are full-time and part-time volunteers putting in a minimum of 20 and 10 hours a week with a youth respectively. The aim of the JOE program is to set up some type of group activity for the volunteers and youth in the city of Holyoke and on campus. Hopefully this will be achieved by next semester.

Generally both programs are in a growth period attempting to match the needs of the Department of Youth Services and youth. JOE needs volunteers to maintain a flexible posture to match the needs of both program components. Therefore, if you are interested in getting into the business of working with youth stop by the JOE-MARY Office in the Campus Center-room 122. If you have questions about JOE call Ruth Noymer at 546-5436 or 545-0438. If you want to see what is happening right off get on tonight's bus to Westfield.

Girls Rampage

BOSTON (AP) - Low attendance and calm were reported at two Boston schools Tuesday in the wake of a Monday disturbance caused by 25 students, mostly girls, from Trade High School for Girls, officials said.

Trouble began Monday when the students, evacuated from the Back Bay-section school while two set fires were being extinguished refused to return to classes when the blaze was out, officials said.

They made their way to Girls' High in the Roxbury section, breaking shop windows en route and in the second school, as well as knocking down teachers and starting fires in Girls' High, police said.

Attendance in the Roxbury school was off one-third Tuesday, a school spokesman said, and off two-thirds in the trade school.

A school committee spokesman said the incident was the first of its kind this year and was a flare-up of similar disturbances, which have occured with decreasing frequency during the past two years.

Young Israeli pianist Daniel Adni will make his American debut tomorrow evening at UMass.

At 20 years of age, Adni is considered one of the most exciting artists of the future. He has received wide critical acclaim for his orchestra appearances, solo recitals, and recordings.

For his debut concert in this country, Mr. Adni has selected a program encompassing Beethoven's Piano Sonata No. 23 in F minor, Opus 57 ("Appassionata"), Sonata No. 3 in A, Opus 28 by Prokofiev and Schubert's Sonata in B flat major, D. 960. On Friday Evening, Nov. 10, Daniel Adni will offer his second recital at the University, and for this occasion he has selected an entirely different program including Beethoven's Sonata No. 26 in E flat, Opus 81a, ("Les Adieux"), Ravel's "Miroirs" and "Variations on a Theme by Paganini", Opus 26, Books 1-2 by Brahms. Both concerts will be at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium (Stockbridge Hall) and are the second events of the 1972-73 Celebrity Series.

Reserved tickets for both concerts are available from the UMass Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Several Topics Discussed By Central Area Council

BY SHELLEY BAKST

At this Monday night's Central Area Council Meeting the topics discussed were: the Area Director job description committee, the Central Area Council and New Africa House Concert on November 17, the Spence/Libscomb concert, Winter Carnival, rink time schedules, ideas from Student Welfare Committee, Program Committee, and the Constitution Committee.

In screening future Area Directors a new description is presently being formulated. Any Central Area residents with ideas about the type of qualifications which an Area Director should possess may contact Bob Focht at 6-9539 late in the evening.

Because of a misunderstanding in contract negotiations the concert scheduled for November 17th with the Central Area and the New Africa House will either be postponed or cancelled entirely. Not much information about the misunderstanding is known.

The Spence/Libscomb Concert will be held in the Franklin Dining Commons this Friday night at 8:30. The admission charge will be $1.50 and there will be a booth in the Campus Center where tickets will be sold and several records of the musicians will be played.

The Program Committee brought up three ideas for Winter Carnival. These were snowsculpture competition between the dorms in the afternoon and a coffeehouse and dance at night. Those with further ideas may contact: Andy Pyenson at 6-9262.

The basketball court/skating rink constructions in the area, have begun and should be finished before the first heavy snowfall. The rink going up near Van Meter will not in any way destroy the open hill, as its location is on the upper corner of the hill. Hockey and free skating schedules will be made by the Area Government.

The Student Welfare Committee for the Central Area discussed four projects which are presently being developed (1) The committee recommended that the council formulate a formal proposal having to do with the idea of sales and solicitations discussed at last weeks meeting. (2) The committee brought up the idea of a cold care center to be located in the Central Area. (3) A student opinion poll about the janitorial services was given to each council representative, who will in turn question the residents of the Central Area. (4) A discussion began concerning the donation of money and solid goods to a foster home for four juveniles. The home, which is located in Northfield, is run by Neal Smith, the former Head of Residence of Hills North. Several ways of raising money were discussed including a Central Area auction and/or raffle.

Back Through Time: From Cows To Now

(Editor's note: This is the second in a three-part series by Steve Crowe tracing the events surrounding the changing of the nickname "Redmen" to "Minutemen". Today Crowe traces the evolution of the various names throughout the years.)

By STEVE CROWE

How far back does the "Redmen" tradition go, anyway, you may ask. It may come as a surprise to many, but the "Redmen" name was only 24 years old before its timely death this fall. Prior to that, the athletic teams were known as the "Statesmen", and way back in the "cow college" days, they were called the Massachusetts "Aggies."

In 1868, Lewis A. Nichols organized the first athletic team at Mass Agricultural College. It was a baseball team known as the "Wilder Nine," named after the man who financed it...Marshall P. Wilder. This team played other clubs in the area. The players didn't have uniforms until 1877. Ten years later, in 1887, the baseball team became the "Aggie Nine" and had "M.A.C." printed on the front of their uniforms.

The transition from "Aggies" to "Statesmen" and that from "Statesmen" to "Redmen" paralleled the transition from Massachusetts Agricultural to Mass. State and from Mass State to the University of Massachusetts.

Aggies to Statesmen

The change from Aggies to Statesmen is an obscure one. In the fall of 1928, students were beginning to push for a big change. They wanted M.A.C. to become a university, or at least a state college. The Agitation Committee, a group of students whose purpose was to do just that - agitate for the change, took the initiative. Finally, on March 26, 1931, the governor of Massachusetts signed the bill that turned Massachusetts Agricultural College into Massachusetts State College.

But the change of the athletic name is not nearly as clear-cut as this. Back in the spring of 1929, the Collegian sports staff suddenly stopped using the term "Aggies" to represent their athletic teams, possibly in conjunction with the Agitation Committee's movement. "Baystaters" simply replaced "Aggies" but there was no explanation for this change. On May 8, 1929, the Collegian even went so far as to put in a headline: "State College Team Scores 1st Victory."

When this school officially became Mass. State, the athletic teams became known as "The Maroon" or simply, "State". (e.g. "State Wins 28-15).

As for the origin of the name "Statesmen"...

There is no evidence (in past issues of the "Index" and the "Collegian") of a definite establishment of "Statesmen" as the official Mass. State College nickname. Most likely, the name evolved naturally. The newspaper would describe the team as "State" and the players as "the State Players" or the "State men." One could almost see the name "Statesmen" sliding into the slot left vacant by the dismissal of the "Aggies."

Finally, on February 15, 1934 (nearly three years after the school officially became Mass. State) the name "Statesmen" appeared in a banner on the sports page in large, bold type. This was the first time that this name ever appeared in any Collegian headline. There was never an announcement or an explanation of "Statesmen" becoming the new athletic name.

Statesmen to Redmen

The most interesting change of all was the change from "Statesmen", the desire for new athletic name was a product of the transition through which the school was going. However, the difference is that there is a distinct change in the name "Redmen."

After World War II, students began to move for the change to a university. When a group wants to show the public they are changing their name, or at least that they are trying to, they often use a mascot. After awhile, the public will readily associate this mscot with that group. A good example of this is the Esso Tiger who has been called back out of retirement to announce to the public that Esso is changing its name. Well, the same thing happened when Massachusetts State was changing to the University of Massachusetts. In this case, it was the Indian on the state seal of Massachusetts leaping off to lead the students in their fight for a university. The Indian starred in skits performed by students at pep rallies; he was illustrated on campaign posters; and at the Winter Carnival he was even carved into ice, pushing a giant U up a hill.

In January of 1947, the change was made official. This school was to be from that moment on known as the University of Massachusetts. Again, the Collegian Sports staff took the initiative in the search for a new athletic name. The writers were tired of the name "Statesmen". They found it stagnant; offering little in the way of catchy phrases and descriptions.

One student wrote a letter to the editor saying, "I think the name of the UMass athletic teams should be Indians...We should be called the UMass Indians..." An editor's note followed: "Good idea - let's whoop it up."

When the students returned to school in the fall of 1947 the Collegian Sports staff launched an all-out effort to supplant the name "Statesmen". They accepted suggestions from the students and printed a ballot in the newspaper with the nominations. on the ballot were: Mohawks, Indians, Bulls, Pilgrims, Pioneers, Yankees, Tomahawks, and Minutemen.

"Minutemen seems to be a popular choice among the football squad," the article said, "but it leaves the way open to a crack like, 'the Minutemen were hours off today as they were trampled all over...'" (This might have been a good lead for Earle Barroll's story on the Bucknell-UMass game).

The Sports staff emphasized that it was necessary for at least 500 students to vote before they could consider making the change. The deadline was set for October 6, but before that date came, another name had popped up and was becoming more and more popular every day. The results of the poll were never announced. Perhaps the staff didn't get the mandatory number of votes, or it might have been that this new name was becoming so popular, that the staff decided to throw out the ballot.

"Redmen" was the new name that was causing all the commotion. The name was proposed by Dr. Doric Alvianai of the Music Department (who was, by the way, still teaching here as of last year). He believed that "Redmen" was the best choice because "it embodies all the Indian tradition that we have been searching for with suggested names as Mohawks, Tomahawks, Chiefs, Braves, and the like."

The sports staff supported this name and decided to take a poll at the next football game. There were only two names on the ballot this time, "Statesmen" and "Redmen." Over 600 students voted this time and the result was: "Statesmen" as the winner by a mere 15 votes.

But the Collegian Sports staff was not about to give up so easily; nor was Dr. Alviani. He composed a fight song, entitled "The Redmen" for a pep rally which was held on December 12, a month before the name was officially changed. The Student Senate, observing that there was a strong movement to replace the name Statemen, decided (finally) to bring this issue forward as a referendum on the Student Senate elections. On January 14, 1948, the long struggle finally came to an end. The result: "Redmen" 620, "Statesmen" 459.

"Redmen" was a very good choice, but UMass still needed a mascot, something or someone who would set the UMass Redman apart from all the other Redmen teams. They needed a specific Redman or Indian from this area...Metawampi.

Little is known historically about Metawampi except that he was an Indian who, along with some others of his tribe, sold some land just north of Mt. Toby to the white settlers in 1674. "But Metawampi is more of a spirit than anything else," writes a reporter in the April 20, 1950 issue of the Collegian. The article goes on to explain how his spirit can be felt in the wind," etc...It might even be speculated that on certain days this spirit acted as a twelfth man on the football squad and was the main reason for the Redmen's victories. Who knows?

COULD IT BE INTERFERENCE? Brigg Owens (23) looks like he's kicking Rich Caster out of the way in Sunday's Jets-Redskins game. All was not lost, though. Owens was called for interference. (AP Wirephoto)

Broken Collarbone Sidelines Brooks

BOSTON (AP) — A practice shot from the stick of teammate Mike Walton broke the left collarbone of the Boston Bruins' No. 2 goalie, Ross Brooks, and sidelined him for at least two months Tuesday, a team spokesman said.

The injury was a serious blow to the defense of the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup champions, who are off to a slow start this year as superstar defenseman Bobby Orr recovers from a knee operation.

Brooks, 35, was undefeated with two wins and two ties in his first year in the NHL, after coming up from the Boston Braves, who won the Eastern Division of the American Hockey League during their first season last year.

First-string goalie Eddie Johnston has a 4-6-0 record this year.

The injury occurred during a "rapid-fire" drill, in which seven or eight players take shots in quick succession to sharpen up a goalie's reflexes, the spokesman said.

Brooks was taken to Massachusetts General Hospital in "intense pain" and surgery was said to be possible, the spokesman added.

It was the second injury for Brooks in little more than a week. He required stitches around his right eye to treat a skate cut suffered in Oct. 29th's game against the N.Y. Islanders.

Hockey Antitrust Ruling Due Today

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - U.S. District Court Judge A. Leon Higginbotham is expected to issue a 200-page opinion Wednesday that may decide whether professional ice hockey is exempt from antitrust laws.

The ruling, in what has become a test case for several pending suits, will decide whether John McKenzie, former National Hockey League star of the Boston Bruins, will be allowed to keep his player-coach contract with the newly formed Philadelphia Blazers of the World Hockey Association.

McKenzie's suit is against the NHL's Philadelphia Flyers, who bought his contract from the Bruins in late summer.

The Blazers and McKenzie have asked the court to rule the NHL reserve clause a violation of antitrust laws.

They charge the National Hockey League has an illegal monopoly in professional ice hockey and that its reserve clause prohibits players from negotiating outside the league.

Several suits currently pending are expected to be affected by Judge Higginbotham's ruling.

These include a countersuit filed by the NHL against the WHA. That suit charges the rival league with conspiring to break their contracts with veteran league teams.

The suit seeks to bar NHL players who jumped to the WHA from playing this season.

Also pending is a suit brought by the NHL's Chicago Black Hawks against Bobby Hull trying to block his jump to the Winnipeg Jets.

Booters Host Tough Springfield

The UMass varsity soccer team will take on fourth-ranked in New England Springfield College at the Boyden Fields at 2:30 p.m. this afternoon.

The Minutemen currently own a 4-3-1 record, after having tied the Vermont Catamounts last Saturday. The Chiefts sport a 7-1 standing.

UMass has never been able to win a soccer contest with the Springfield team, although last year they did manage a tie. "Considering that UMass has never won a game," Coach Gerry Redmond remarked, "it would be quite nice to win today. Also, there are a few seniors for whom this will be the last game but one, and they're keen to leave with a victory if possible."

"Our game with Springfield today will be one of our toughest matches," continued Redmond. "They defeated Connecticut last week three-nil, and as we beat that same team 3-1, we'll be in for a hard-fought contest."

Paul Peloquin, who has been backing up Carl Vercollone in goal, will be out for the rest of the season after breaking a finger in yesterday's practice. He will be replaced by Steve Richer in the last two games.

There are but two remaining contests in the Yankee Conference soccer race. UMass finished off its season on November 11 when it plays UNH at home, while UConn and URI go at it one week later.

The results of both games are of the greatest importance to all four teams, and 11 but UMass still have a shot at first place. UMass can, however, finish as high as second place, if they beat UNH and UConn defeats URI, or as low as fifth place, if they lose to the Wildcats.

Much of the success UMass hopes to enjoy is in part due to fan support. The team hopes to have a large crowd rooting for them when they take the field in the last two home games.

THE REASON BOB MERRILL (center with glasses) is still on his feet is that he's not a goalie. The Minutemen have gone through five this year. (MDC photo by Karasu)

Bench Named NL MVP For 2nd Time

NEW YORK AP - Johnny Bench proved both to himself and to baseball that he could come back and he reaped his reward Tuesday by being named the 1972 Most Valuable Player in the National League.

It marked the second time in three years that the honor had fallen upon the 24-year-old catcher of the Cincinnati Reds who, after a spectacular 1970 season which won him the MVP, went into an abysmal .238 hitting slump in 1971.

"I got a little out of shape on the banquet circuit," Bench said of his 1971 collapse. "I fell behind in my hitting and pressed too much. I kept pressing but still couldn't catch up.

"I said to myself then: 'Maybe 'I'll never have another good season.' "

The rugged, hard-hitting catcher from Binger, Okla., was a strong winner of the MVP award this year, getting 11 first place votes from the 24-man panel of the Baseball Writers Association - two from each league city - and was rated no lower than fourth on any ballot.

Bench received a total of 263 points - 52 more than the runner-up in the voting, Billy Williams of the Chicago Cubs, who got 211. Willie Stargell of Pittsburgh was third with 201 points and Joe Morgan, a Bench teammate with the Reds, was fourth with 197. Steve Carlton of the Philadelphia Phillies, winner of the Cy Young Award as the year's top NL pitcher, came in fifth with 124 points.

The electors named 10 men and points were awarded on a 14-9-8-7 etc. ratio.

Bench batted .270 and led the league in home runs, 40, and in runs batted in, 125. he became the sixth player in the league's history to be a repeat MVP winner.

In 1970, when the Reds also won the NL pennant, Bench batted .293, hit 45 home runs and had 148 RBI.

JV Harriers Take Title

By WALT POWERS

At the start of the season, Coach Ken O'Brien called this year's freshman Cross-country squad "The strongest, most balanced group of freshman I've ever coached". Monday afternoon, they rewarded him with a tremendous, 29 62 victory over an experienced Boston College team in the New England junior varsity championship meet, in Boston. Providence, the defending champion, was third, with 70 points, and Northeastern was fourth, with 135.

The race was held on a cool, calm, overcast afternoon, and this made for a fast race. At about the mile and a quarter mark, Tom Wilson, the team's only sophomore, grabbed the lead. He was running hard, and covered the first two miles in 9:53. He was still pushing at the finish, even with a big lead, and won in a time of 16:08.

Near the mile-and a half mark the entire team moved up and dominated the top twelve positions. From then on they were never seriously challenged. Mike Roy outkicked Mark Harrison of Providence, to take second in a time of 16:12. Mike Conlin beat out Bernie Lancaster of Northeastern for fourth place in a time of 16:14. Mike Gillen finished eighth, in 16:26, and Phil Broughton pulled away from Providence's Keith Gallagher to take fourteenth. Sixth man Joe Martins faded slightly near the finish, but still finished twentieth.

The meet was won on a strong team effort. The squad was confident at the start of the race and went out aggressively. They ran almost as a unit, helping and encouraging each other as the race progressed. About the only one who wasn't involved, was the winner, Tom Wilson. "I never saw the rest of the team," he said. "I just took the lead, and never looked back. I knew I had to push myself all the way, and I did".

Mike Roy and Mike Gillen were ecstatic. "I felt great seeing the whole team out in front", said Roy. "Every time I felt tired, I saw Mike Conlin and Tom Wilson up ahead of me, and they kept me going."

Joe Martins and Phil Broughton admitted that they went out "maybe a little too fast", but each of them built up a good early position, and they didn't fall back very much near the end.

Mike Wilson and Mike Conlin clearly benefited from their varsity experience "It's a shorter, less strenuous race, and running up with the leaders gives you a big psychological lift" said Mike Conlin.

So the UMass JV's are the New England JV Champions. The win culminates a very successful, 6-2 dual meet season, for the young harriers, its been a very, very good year.

Nicaragua or Bust?

Frank McInerney has made a mistake in vetoing the proposed trip to Nicaragua by Mike Flanagan and Eddie McMahon to play baseball on an American amateur all-star team.

It's a mistake which, although it will be of little consolation to either McMahon or Flanagan, is not entirely disastrous.

Because the long-range effect of this decision, the first where McInerney has had a chance to assert himself as AD, is to set a precedent where he breaks from the traditional "our Minutemen, right or wrong" position and can better integrate sports and academics. This is, after all, what he was hired for.

It is good that McInerney has broken from the traditional mold, and it is good that he isn't afraid to make unpopular decisions. This bodes well for the future. But for the present, the time, place, and final result of this particular issue is not appropriate.

It's a mistake in judgement, pure and simple.

It seems that the crux of the matter is that the one month away from studies that the trip will cost McMahon and Flanagan is too high a price to pay in relation to their "education". And you can argue for years on the meaning of education, and the relative values of travel and classroom experience. It's a debate with no real answers. I know that most of what I've learned at this University comes from experiences outside the classroom. But I've never been to Central America so I can't speak about the educational values of travel down there. I will say that I do like bananas.

So I can't buy McInerney's argument that they will lose too much be being away from the classroom for a month. The classroom is of dubious value.

But neither can I buy the arguments of those who say what a shame it is that these boys are going to miss the educational opportunity of a lifetime by not going to Nicaragua. That's also horseradish. They're going down there to play baseball. If it's travel that's the big deal then send them on a world cruise and let them play shuffleboard.

The real tragedy here has nothing to do with education, the greater glory of UMass sports and the USA, or Frank McInerney. It has to do with Flanagan and McMahon.

Flanagan and McMahon are missing the chance of a lifetime, all educational rhetoric aside. When it comes down to talking one month, you put the rhetoric aside. I mean, just how vital is 30 days in a classroom to two guys who have spent something like 120 months in the classroom over the past 15 years.

And this, for them, is probably going to be a lot of fun. Maybe fun is a dirty word to some people who dig overhead projectors more than baseball, but there is something to be said for it.

Flanagan and McMahon are great baseball players, good enough to play pro ball. Ask any scout. This is a great chance for them to show their wares. It is a great plug for the UMass placement office.

I don't know, maybe none of this holds water in the face of the "sanctity of education" or the values of travel. I doubt if it's high-brow enough.

But try simplifying it. Try thinking of it as two guys who are good baseball players and have a chance to play ball (slap mosquitoes and eat bananas, too) somewhere kind of far off and while not exotic, kind of interesting. It's also a good chance for them to show some important people what they can do. You might even call it a mid-term.

UMass is not a school with a reputation for putting sports over academics. It isn't headed in that direction at the present time. Not with McInerney at the controls.

But a fear of emphasizing sports too much should not turn into paranoia. It will be worthwhile for McMahon and Flanagan to go to Nicaragua to play baseball. They should be allowed to go.

Nixon Landslide Stops Short Of Congress

(AP) PRESIDENT NIXON has soared to his greatest personal triumph, but his landslide re-election confronts him with at least two more years of divided government as Democrats kept firmly in command of Congress.

Nixon swept the nation from coast to coast Tuesday in one of history's most massive victories. He caputred 49 of the 50 states and approached the highest popular-vote percentage of any American president.

The President's 521-17 electoral-vote majority over Democratic challenger George McGovern rivaled Franklin D. Roosevelt's 1936 victory of 523 to 8. McGovern won only Massachusetts and the District of Columbia in his party's worst presidential showing.

And Nixon's 61 per cent of the vote was close to the previous record, the 61.1 per cent attained by Democrat Lyndon B. Johnson eight years ago.

But Democrats, ousting four veteran Republican senators, actually gained two seats for a probable 57-43 margin in the new Congress. They lost only a handful of House seats and gained a net of one governorship when Daniel Walker finally edged GOP incumbent Richard Ogilvie in Illinois.

"This is a personal triumph for Mr. Nixon - and not a party triumph," said Republican National Chairman Robert J. Dole.

With 88 per cent of the nation's precincts counted, the popular vote stood:

Nixon 41,537,296, or 61 per cent.

McGovern 25,506,308, or 38 per cent.

Though totals were incomplete, the vote appeared to have fallen well short of the 80 million to 85 million predicted for the first presidential election open to 18-year-olds. A projection by the National Broadcasting Co. put it at barely one million more than the 73 million who voted in 1968.

As mounting returns proclaimed he had won overwhelmingly what both contenders had termed "the contest of the century," Nixon told the nation by television from his White House office that now "it is time to get on with the great tasks that lie before us."

Then, he drove with Mrs. Nixon to a downtown Washington hotel. Joined by victorious Republican running-mate Spiro T. Agnew, he appeared before a crowd chanting the Republican campaign slogan of "four more years" to express "thanks for making our last campaign the very best one of all."

McGovern, who maintained to the last that Tuesday's results would prove wrong the pollsters who predicted he faced massive rejection, wired Nixon his support for efforts to "lead us to a time of peace abroad and justice at home."

But the South Dakota senator told his supporters in Sioux Falls, from where his 22-month quest for the presidency began, that "we do not rally to policies we deplore," adding "so let us play the role fo the loyal opposition."

That opposition is likely to center in the Senate where the Democratic majority that survived Nixon's sweep with increased ranks stands ready to challenge many of the President's programs as it has over the four years of his first term.

Collins, Nolen Win Rep Race

by Robert Medeiros

Democrats James G. Collins, 26, of Amherst and James R. Nolen, 39, of Ware swept to impressive victories yesterday for the two state representative seats in the 2nd Hampshire District.

With all but the town of Hadley and two precincts in South Hadley reporting their unofficial tallies, it appeared that Collins in his first bid for public office would top the ticket with 11,618 votes or 31 per cent of the vote.

Nolen, who won his eighth consecutive term in the House, followed with 10,461 votes. Trailing were Republicans Nat Reed, 41, of Amherst and William "Gerry" Whitlock, 44, of Belchertown with 7,746 and 7,600 votes respectively.

The 2nd Hampshire District includes Amherst, Granby, Pelham, Hadley, Belchertown, South Hadley and Ware.

Collins and Reed, also a newcomer to the political arena, ran one-two in Amherst picking up 5,814 and 4,469 votes respectively, while Nolen totaled 3,049 votes to Whitlock's 2,700.

Collins celebrated his victory by saying that he planned to make a career of politics, but added that he was not going to use his office as a stepping stone.

He said his campaign was "different than anyone else" in that it included a "door-to-door campaign that was issue-oriented and at a low-cost."

His campaign included a canvassing operation to over 2,000 registered voters at UMass. "I don't have a student vote in my hip pocket any more than anyone else," he said during the campaign. "I have to work for it just like the other candidates."

Nolen, an attorney, said throughout the campaign that he was sticking to his record and challenging his opposition to develop issues concerning his legislative record.

While Collins picked up his main strength in his home town of Amherst, Nolen did the same in Ware where he topped the ticket with 3,045 votes compared to Collins' 1,645.

Even though Whitlock was trailing Reed by 146 votes for the third spot, it appeared that Whitlock would gain and gradually pass Reed with only the town of Hadley and two precincts of South Hadley yet to report their votes.

Reed said he would return to his position at Amherst College as Dean of Freshman. He said he didn't know if he would run for office in the future since he "couldn't expect to do better next time," but added that statewide redistricting will change the boundaries of this district creating a new constituency.

Whitlock, who failed for the third time to win a seat in the House, said the Amherst vote delivered his candidacy a "crushing blow."

He attributed the voting pattern in Amherst to an "influential" editorial that appeared in the Collegian this week. He said many students were first time voters, and were influenced by what the Collegian had to say.

"They really don't know who they're voting for," he told a reporter. "You can't

by Bob Medeiros and Nathan Gorenstein

UMass professor on leave John Olver upset incumbent John Barrus to win a seat in the Massachusetts state senate.

Barrus conceded at 7 this morning. He said he had a 865 vote pluraflity going into South Hadley but he received a, "resounding," defeat there and in Easthampton.

Olver said the margin of victory in Amherst and South Hadley gave him the necessary votes to carry the election.

Olver is the first Democrat to represent Franklin-Hampshire District in the state Senate. He added: "Anytime you beat out an incumbent, it is a bit of an upset."

Even though many observers at the beginning of the campaign gave the Amherst lawmaker little chance of unseating Barrus, Olver indicated that he did have his doubts at times, but always felt the campaign was going in the right direction.

Olver waged an uphill campaign stressing the differences between his and Barrus' voting records. He has served two terms in the Massachusetts House of Representatives. Olver's record has pretty much followed a liberal line on questions such as civil liberties, tax and welfare reform, human rights and the environment.

Barrus, while supporting most environmental legislation had been a more conservative voter on most other issues.

Olver carried two of the three largest towns in the district, Amherst and Northampton. Olver took Amherst by almost 4,000 votes, Northampton by slightly under a 1,000. He lost Greenfield by 1300 votes. He carried Amherst 6,472 to 2,146. Asked when he was sure that Olver had won, campaign manager David Veale first laughed and said, "About last August," then said there was a feeling at campaign headquarters at about 3 a.m. or 4 a.m. that Olver had carried the district.

Veale felt the main factors behind Olver's win were, "John's record," the volunteers, canvassing and Olver's, "sticking to the issues."

Nolen Confident With Friends

by Frank Antosiewicz

Ware Foundry Athletic Club--Despite the unfavorable early returns from Amherst, the incumbent, James R. Nolen, sat confidently among forty friends awaiting the re-election to an eighth consecutive term as state representative for the Second Hampshire District.

Jim Collins and Nat Reed were the leaders in the Amherst voting, but Nolen's real showing was in the other six towns. He said that he was pleased with his victory and that "Amherst had to be considered as a whole new town, due to the student vote." He was uncertain as to what to expect in Amherst.

The Ware resident, with fourteen years in the legislature, still sat amidst the empty bottles and the blaring television, eagerly awaiting the results, as if this was the first time.

Running on his record, Nolen cautiously and confidently watched the TV announce his rivals, Collins and Reed, were leading. There was some worry among those present as to the strong showing of Reed, but Nolen continually stated that if he could close to Gerry Whitlock in the race, then his home territory would pull him through. That it did, as Nolen received 3045 votes, which just about equaled the total of the other three candidates.

This vaulted Nolen into the second spot and put South Hadley which he termed as "a little on the democratic side," as the major obstacle.

Nolen, who attended South Hadley public schools in his youth, led all the candidates with three of five precincts reporting and outdistanced his republican rivals.

With just two more precincts in South Hadley and the voting to be accounted in Hadley, Nolen had closed the gap between the two democrats to about 1200 votes, while outdistancing his opponent by 3100 votes.

After clinching another term, in answer to a question as to what type of legislation he would seek in the next session, he said, "Right now I'm not thinking about it. I'm going home to go home and sleep 24 hours."

When his headquarters was called at 5:30 this morning, there was no answer. Presumably, he did what he said.

Hard Work Pays Off: Collins Tops Ticket

by Linda Craven

"I'm not surprised I'm winning," announced James Collins early this morning. "We all worked our feet off."

Collins, newly elected State Representative for the 2nd Hampshire County District, stated that he was confident "from the beginning of the campaign" that he'd win. He attributed this to the fact that he had run his campaign very unlike his opponents in that he (1) canvassed door-to-door, (2) ran his campaign at a very low cost, and (3) his campaign was very issue-oriented:

Collins conducted a door-to-door campaign at U-Mass. "I don't have a student vote in my hip pocket any more than anyone else," he said during his campaign. "I have to work for it, just like the other candidates."

The issues Collins held predominant throughout the campaign were graduated and progressive state income tax, welfare reform, increased aid to local school systems, and a new agrarian-based tax to protect the small Western Massachusetts farmer, all of which he supported. He also suggested that the Belchertown state school reforms would have top priority if he was elected.

Collins also expressed his dismay concerning the outcome of the Presidential election. "I'm deeply disappointed," he revealed. "McGovern would be a far better president than Richard Nixon."

Collins stated his desire to make a career of government. "I'd like to serve eight or ten years in the House. There are several programs I'd like to see in effect." He also warned that he would not use his office as a "stepping stone." "I intend to do the best job I can as State Rep."

When asked if he won because of his being a Democrat or because of his own merits, he answered, "It's a combination of both. An election victory is a combination of a lot of things."

The only comment made by Collins in reference to his opponents was "I hope Whitlock is a very distant fourth."

In his pre-victory speech, Collins announced, "It looks like we have one out of the two spots." He continued, thanking his supporters, both collectively and individually. "We can be proud of what we have done. This was definitely a Grass Roots effort. I'll work my best to make sure I've earned the trust you've put in me."

During the entire evening, Collins campaign headquarters was the scene of constant celebration. The crowd was virtually one-hundred percent Democratic, cheering the victory of Collins and taking poorly the defeat of McGovern.

When asked how it felt to win, Collins responded "Very good."

Cynically A Republican

by Earle Barroll

NORTHAMPTON—Russ Carrier has contributed enough money over the past 22 months to the George McGovern candidacy that he cynically considers himself "a Republican".

He's financed his own way as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention. He's lent monetary assistance magna cum laude. And in his most important roll he's been the Chairman for the McGovern forces in the Northamplton area.

Last night at a victory celebration for democratic State Representative Edmund McColgan ("we're all Democrats"), Carrier called the reelection of President Richard Nixon "the biggest piece of political chicanery in the history of our nation."

"It all goes to show you that Nixon is the master politician", he said. "If you noticed he never mentioned McGovern's name once."

Carrier fully expected the outcome. "It was obvious that McGovern was only going to carry Massachusetts and Washington, D.C.," he explained. "We did have some hope for victory as early as two weeks ago, but since that time it's been all down hill."

Carrier termed the Massachusetts outcome "the death of the Republican party in this state."

In the Northampton area voters turned out in the largest quantities in the history of the city. Some 14,000 out of 15,000 registered voters turned out and cast a heavy mandate for the democratic ticket.

It was only four years ago that only about 7500 turned out to the polls. Carrier explained this phenomenon the result "of going out door to door and talking to 90% of the voters in the area."

For Carrier the defeat of McGovern is the beginning of another four years of his support to elect a democrat to the White House in 1976.

"This election has been a trial for me and many of the supporters," he said. "We proved that we could nominate a man. And now we want to prove that we can also elect a man."

But until that time comes, Carrier's hopes have been buoyed by a commitment his man recently made. "Two nights ago on a national broadcast," he explained, "McGovern said that he would be the leader of the loyal opposition if he was defeated. And for me this was a very heartening moment."

Vermont Elects Second Democatic Governor

MONTPELIER, VT. (AP) - Thomas P. Salmon, a 40-year-old attorney who has told Vermonters he will limit property taxes to their ability to pay, Tuesday became the second Democrat in modern history to win the state's governorship. He did it in the face of a President Nixon-led Republican sweep.

Salmon buried Republican Luther F. Hackett by 20,000 votes as he ended a campaign in which he proposed property taxes that would be limited to five per cent of a resident landowner's annual income.

Hackett had been a slight favorite in pre-election forecasts, but he could not get the votes on a day when Nixon won 64 per cent of the traditionally Republican state's vote and when Republican Richard Mallary won re-election to the U.S. House with 65 per cent of the vote.

McColgan Opposes Tuition Hike

by Cindy Gonet

In a crowded McColgan campaign headquarters, the happiness of near-victory was in the atmosphere. With a 2:1 margin over his opponent on Tuesday night, McColgan had good reason to be jubilant.

Edmund McColgan, Democrat from the first Hampshire District, led in the battle for state representative against Stephen Kozloski, a newcomer to politics. With a liberal voting record in the House, the incumbent McColgan is seeking his third term in office.

At campaign headquarters in Northampton, McColgan told MDC that he has been a staunch supporter of all student-related legislation. A former professor from Westfield State College, McColgan said he realized the necessity for liberal legislation dealing with students and faculty.

McColgan has supported a bill to expand collective bargaining for faculty. This includes wages and working conditions. "At the present time, there are full collective bargaining rights in Mass. which are extended to all state employees, including professors at UMass.", said McColgan. McColgan said he would continue to support unionization and collective bargaining rights for state employees of the Commonwealth.

When asked about further aid to the student, McColgan said, "I am opposed to all tuition increases. Ideally, I would like to see a situation allowing free tuition to all students." McColgan went on to say that the burden would not weigh heavily on large families. McColgan has seven children of his own and says they must get an education at the University rather than at Harvard or Yale.

McColgan stated that his support came from the average working man and the college community.

When asked about his opposition, McColgan offered no comment.

New England voters wove a pattern of contrast across the six state region in Tuesday's voting, with President Nixon taking the electoral votes of all the states but Massachusetts.

That gave him 22 from New England with the 14 from Massachusetts going to the defeated Democratic nominee, Sen. George McGovern.

President Nixon's coattails may have helped some Republicans to win election, but in Maine, the veteran Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, a Republican seeking her fifth term at 74, went down to defeat to William D. Hathaway, who was a three-term member of the U.S. House.

Despite McGovern's big victory in Massachusetts, Sen. Edward W. Brooke, a Republican and the only black member of the Senate, won reelection by a wide margin.

On the other hand, the adjacent - and generally Democratic - state of Rhode Island, voted solidly for President Nixon, but gave Democratic Sen. Claiborne Pell his third term in a surprisingly easy victory over his Republican challenger, John H. Chafee, former three-term governor and Secretary of the Navy in the Nixon cabinet until he resigned to run for the Senate.

The two incumbent Democratic members of the U.S. House from Rhode Island, Fernand J. St. Germain and Robert D. Tiernan, won new terms without much trouble.

Rhode Island had an upset in the contest for governor, with the relatively unknown Mayor Philip W. Noel of Warwick, a Democrat, defeating Herbert F. DeSimone, the Republican nominee.

DeSimone, who lost the governorship by less than 2,000 votes two years ago, was regarded as a sure bet to win this time.

In Vermont, the voters also favored President Nixon for "another four years," but for the second time in more than a century they elected a Democratic Governor.

Thomas P. Salmon won the office easily over Luther P. Hackett, the Republican nominee, in what had been regarded as a neck-and-neck fight.

Phillip F. Hoff was the other Democratic governor, winning the office for three terms in the 1960s.

Vermont elected Richard W. Mallary, R-Vt., to its single House seat, rejecting the bid of the Democratic nominee, William H. Meyer, the only Democrat to hold the seat in a century. Meyer won a single term in 1958.

President Nixon carried New Hampshire by an easy margin, but Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, a Democrat running for an easy margin, but Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, a Democrat running for his second full term, managed to campaign around the Republican surge and defeat the GOP candidate, former Gov. Wesley Powell.

New Hampshire elected a Republican, Meldrim Thomson, as governor, giving him victory over Roger P. Crowley, the Democratic candidate, and Malcolm McLane, an independent. It was Thomson's third try for the Governor's chair. He lost the Republican nomination in 1968 and 1970.

President Nixon carried Connecticut and its eight electoral votes by a wide margin, and the state landslide meant defeat for one of the state's veteran members of the House, John S. Monagan, who was unseated after seven terms by a Republican, Ronald A. Sarasin.

That leaves the state's House delegation evenly divided, three Republicans and three Democrats.

"This resounding victory will make me a freer man in the United States Senate." This was the sentiment expressed by Senator Edward W. Brooke, who was reelected to a second term yesterday.

Brooke was victor over Democratic opponent John J. Droney and Socialist Workers Party candidate Donald Gueritz. With 466 of the state's 2042 precincts reporting, Brooke had 60-40% lead over Droney: 212,404 to 143,178.

In his victory speech to between 300-400 supporters in Copley Plaza Brooke stated that he wants to see "peace in the nation and the world" during his next term.

Brooke also stated that he would maintain his "independent course" while voting in the Senate and that he has made a committment to ending all forms of discrimination in this country.

The victory celebration for Brooke was reportedly delayed due to the late conceding of Droney.

Whitlock said he would continue his duties as a Belchertown Selectman, and would remain as a member of the Belchertown State School Board of Trustees.

Collins was the surprise candidate in the September primary when he finished a close second to the incumbent Nolen. He is assistant director of the Upward Bound Program, an organization established to render educational opportunities for low income youths. During this campaign, he said he would resign his UMass post if elected to the House in order to serve as a full time legislator.

The young Amherst resident is a 1968 UMass grad, and served as president of the UMass Student Senate in that year.

He has spoken out in favor of a graduated and progressive state income tax, welfare reform, increased aid to local school systems, and a new agrarian-based tax to protect the small Western Massachusetts farmer.

Collins during his first tour of the Belchertown State School last week said: "Belchertown is going to become a top priority for me if elected. I am going to cut through the red tape in Boston and push for reform.

"To do so, I must deal with a bureaucracy which is insensitive to the needs of these people. We can't change things overnight, but we can certainly continue to pressure Boston and work for reform."

Rhode Island Goes For Nixon

PROVIDENCE (AP) - Rhode Island voters gave President Nixon the state's four electoral votes Tuesday, but trampled over his coattails to fashion a sweep for Democrats in crucial contests for the U. S. Senate and the governor's office.

While Nixon was forging the first Republican presidential victory in this heavily-Democratic state since 1956, Sen. Claiborne Pell won reelection to a third term by a surprisingly wide majority over former Gov. John H. Chafee, Nixon's onetime Navy secretary.

Pell, rated the underdog until last week and pictured as a prime Republican target in their futile hopes to gain control of the Senate, led from the first returns and wound up with a 54 to 45 per cent victory margin.

During the campaign, Barrus emphasized his commitment to small rural and agricultural communities while Olver had described himself as a "liberal Democrat in the Kennedy-McGovern tradition."

Barrus had called for increased emphasis on home-rule decision making. He described the state government as being "top-heavy with administrative responsibilities."

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. George McGovern's quest for the White House was doomed by the blunders of its infancy, errors that all his campaigning could never undo.

To the end they plagued his candidacy. And in the end they helped President Nixon attain one of history's great landslides.

In part, the fatal flaws stemmed from what McGovern had to do - or thought he had to do - to catch up and win the Democratic nomination in the first place.

But two problems stand out above all the rest:

The admittedly ill-conceived McGovern proposal that every American be given $1,000 by the government. He dropped it, but was never able to forget it. And the Republicans used it to help implant the notion that, if elected, McGovern would give away the money of the workingman to people who refuse to work.

The case of Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, the vice-presidential nominee McGovern deposed-after promising him 1,000 per cent support despite his tardy disclosure of past mental treatments.

Those, and an assortment of other incidents, statements and slipups, enabled Nixon's forces to make McGovern himself the campaign issue.

That effectively denied him the traditional offensive role of the challenger, and shielded Nixon from the necessity of any intensive personal campaigning to defend his conduct in office.

It was particularly valuable to a president whose own campaign organization had been implicated in the June 17 wiretapping of Democratic national headquarters, and whose top White House aides had been accused of political sabotage and espionage.

And it was particularly frustrating to McGovern, struggling to take the attack, but always forced to defend. Nothing nettled him more than the fact that his own credibility, once rated his greatest asset, was put in question.

It was the image of radicalism on one hand and indecision on the other that appeared the central McGovern problem.

In that situation, McGovern steadily escalated the tone and wording of his attacks on Nixon and, in the process, aggravated the problem. He overstated his case, then had to defend the overstatements.

It was a campaign McGovern began on Jan. 18, 1971, in desperate need of exposure and attention to propel him out of single figures in the public-opinion polls. At that point, no one cold foresee that Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, then the towering favorite for the Democratic nomination, would be toppled in the 1972 primaries.

For a year, McGovern campaigned almost unnoticed. He went through three press secretaries in search of someone who could help him command national attention.

Election Day In NYC

by Don Glickstein

New York City, Nov. 7 -- "Yes", announced the little old lady with the Yiddish accent. "I'm voting for McGovern, and so is my chiropodist."

The Borough of Queens--Far Rockaway, Forest Hills, Jamaica, Flushing, Bayside--the clean, tight, two-family brick residences of working people.

The little kids in Rockaway are vicious to the McGovern canvassers. They taunt, "I'm going to vote for Nixon. McGovern wants to surrender. McGovern sucks." The canvassers try to ignore the kids; after all, they're too young to vote.

At the 116th Street Rockaway Park subway, some high school greasers--albeit they look like freaks--drop their draws at the McGovern leafletters. The ultimate display of disdain.

An eerie silence pervades the entire Borough. The Democrats thrust palm cards at voters, telephone reminders to fellow Democrats to vote, do last-minute leafletting. But the silence is Nixon's; he is not there. The Republicans seem to be ignoring the election.

Staring into the corner of the subway station is a lady with yellow hair, a calf-length green coat, and the tell-tale shopping bag crammed with possessions. She is staring when the canvassers arrive; she stares still when they leave.

"It's the Orthodox vote", a Jewish McGovern worker explains. "Those old Orthodox Jews, they don't know what they're doing, splitting their vote for Nixon. Well, it's not even the old Orthodox ones; it's those rich, conservative ones. That's what's screwing us in New York."

The people at the Regular Democratic Club of the Rockaways, Inc. are giving up on a certain housing development. It's already dark outside, and the vote expected from the predominantly black project hasn't materialized. It's no use trying to do anything about it; even the black volunteers refuse to canvass the area at night, and most of the homes don't have telephones.

With typical New York nonchalance, a middle-aged man rummages through a garbage can, while keeping his eye on McGovern volunteer and explaining, "Naw. I forgot to register to vote."

It's getting raw at 5:30 p.m. The workers are getting cold passing out voting reminders to passersby. An elderly couple stop, accept the literature, acknowledge that they had voted for McGovern in the morning, and commend the young people for participating in the system.

"I'd like to remind you to vote today, sir." --I have, he responds. 4 times.

Eighty-six kids from Massachusetts are waiting outside the Flushing headquarters for their bus to take them back to the University. The polls have closed. The street litter is of a political nature. The television reports are known.

"I guess the people of America can't take the truth. McGovern's too moral for them, and they don't want to admit that they're wrong."

"No. They're just scared."

"I pity them."

WNBC radio: "There is currently only one state in the McGovern column currently; that is the state of Massachusetts." The UMass kids cheer. At least their people didn't let them down.

The buses still haven't arrived. A lanky McGovern worker walks out from the headquarters, past a crowd of waiting students. He turns right at the corner, past a parking lot and a florist shop. The city is not crowded at this hour, but the green and red and blue and yellow neon and street lights and the traffic and subway noise give the neighborhood a warmth.

The worker walks to the corner of 38th Street, sits down on the sidewalk in front of a deserted drug store, and cries.

Agnew Calls For Reconciliation Efforts

by Gregg Herrington
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Spiro T. Agnew, assured of another four years in the vice presidency and the base for a possible presidential bid himself in 1976, says there must be an effort to reconcile the winners and losers in Tuesday's election.

"We must reach out the hand of conciliation to those who opposed us," Agnew said Tuesday night following his and President Nixon's victory.

Agnew, who celebrates his 54th birthday Thursday, told cheering supporters after the victory: "I hope the performance of the Nixon-Agnew administration will satisfy not only those who supported the ticket this year, but those who didn't."

Even before Agnew spoke at the victory celebration in a Washington hotel, some Republican party officials were talking about an Agnew presidential candidacy in 1976.

"It'll be Agnew and Teddy in '76," one party worker said. The reference was to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

"Twelve more years, 12 more years," partisans chanted as the vice president was introduced. The chant, based on the Nixon slogan, "Four More Years," envisions two terms of an Agnew presidency when Nixon steps down in 1976.

The vice president, who appeared in the hotel ballroom with his wife, Judy, and their family, was praised by Nixon.

Though Nixon's victory was never in doubt from the first trickle of votes early Tuesday evening, the quick Democratic capture of a Kentucky Senate seat held by a retiring Republican showed that split tickets had been cast in many states.

Though Nixon's coattails clearly helped some Republicans, Democratic challengers withstood the GOP presidential tide to knock off at least four veteran Republican senators - Gordon Allott of Colorado, Jack Miller of Iowa, J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware and the venerable Margaret Chase Smith of Maine, beaten at age 74, by Democratic Rep. William Hathaway.

In the House, meanwhile, the Republican gain in the early-morning hours stood at a mere nine seats, far short of the 41-seat pickup needed to give the GOP control.

Democrats were on their way to a possible increase in their margin of governorships, which stood at 30 to 20 before the election.

But a potential Democratic star fell in West Virginia where Republican Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. won re-election over John D. "Jay" Rockefeller IV.

In state after state, Nixon piled up overwhelming majorities. Few were even close, Rhode Island, which swamped Nixon 2 to 1 in 1968, gave him a 24,000-vote lead this time. McGovern's South Dakota gave Nixon 55 per cent of the vote.

In the big industrial states of the Northeast and Midwest, McGovern's main hopes for an upset and his favorite campaign area in his 200,000-mile presidential journey, Nixon piled up massive majorities.

Pennsylvania, which supported Hubert H. Humphrey in 1968, went to Nixon by more than 800,000 votes, while New York, in which the President had twice been defeated, fell to him by more than one million votes.

And Nixon became the first Republican ever to sweep the once solidly Democratic South.

Senate Resists Bumper Sticker Business

By BOB SCHEIER

The Student Senate last night resisted the temptation to go into the bumper sticker business, and tabled for one week a complex motion to change the way funds are allocated to residential areas on campus.

In other important action, the Senate voted to recommend the abolition of the University Discipline Board, the highest faculty-student disciplinary board on campus.

The senate also heard David. W. Booth, president of the faculty-senate, chide members of the Student Senate for walking out of last Thursday's Faculty-Senate meeting, after that body voted against the abolition of the Rhetoric requirement.

A motion to print 25,000 bumper stickers and an equal amount of buttons saying "I voted in Massachusetts and I'm proud of it", to be distributed free to students was defeated after close to a half hour debate.

Supporters of the motion said the stickers would be "collectors items" and that the Senate could make money by selling them to non-students.

When the case of the "McGovern Eagleton" bumper stickers which became collector's items after Eagleton was dropped from the ticket was brought up, Senate Treasurer Bob Chiller suggested the Senate print more of those instead of the proposed stickers.

Another senator was heard to mumble, "It would be a better idea to spend the money on a good old fashioned beer party."

Massachusetts and the District of Columbia were the only jurisdictions which Sen. George McGovern carried in Tuesday's election.

When the senate, after considering numerous special business for most of the night, finally got to the agenda, one of the first items was the motion changing the allocation of funds to area governments.

The motion would drastically reduce the amount of student funds put into a contingency fund to cover unexpected deficits in area activities and return most of the freed funds to the areas, according to population.

Sylvan area president Mickey Harris speaking in favor of the motion said it would allow areas to start projects they otherwise wouldn't.

Senator Elliot Sherman spoke against it, claiming the Senate would be delegating its authority to allocate funds, and that this violated the Student Government Association.

The motion, after long debate, was tabled for one week, and the student attorney-general was asked to give an opinion on whether the motion was constitutional.

Also tabled was a related motion which would allow area president's, who are ex-officio members of the Student Government Association president's council, to make appropriations from the fund.

Faculty-senate President Booth in a speech before the Senate said editorials in the Collegian criticizing the faculty-senate for its vote against abolition of rhetoric "didn't provide the student with serious discussion" of the issue.

He also said it did not serve a useful purpose for the Senate, when it lost on the rhetoric question, to "pick up its ball and run away when it lost." "It's a mistake to write off issues you believe in", said.

The only category change (a group asking to use funds it had budgeted for one purpose for a different purpose) that generated extensive debate was a request from WTOY, the campus videotape station, to transfer $1,000 from tapes to join a network offering prepared video-tapes.

It was finally passed.

Recycling Program Has Received Little Support

By CINDY GONET

"A tremendous amount could be recycled, but we've received little cooperation from students, custodians and staff which has little aided the recycling program," according to Mr. Kenton Billings from the grounds office of the Physical Plant.

430 cubic yards of paper and refuse are collected from the University per week. Only 6-1/2 tons of this amount is recycled by the CEQ.

Some future compliance from the college community could reduce the burden on the town land-fill dump of at least part of the tons of waste paper the University generates and could make possible the reuse of paper pulp, which saves a valuable natural resource.

The Coalition for Environmental Quality, (CEQ), has recycling box locations at the CC West, Hatch, Music Room, CC 1st floor, CEQ office, and at the Collegian.

The cartons are emptied "now and then", said a member of the CEQ. The boxes are mainly for accessibility to the student.

Dumpsters are presently located at Whitmore, Hasbrouck, Herter, Marston, Goodell, Graduate Research Center, Stockbridge, Thomson, Campus Center, Hampden Dining Commons, and at Patterson Dorm. These bins are maintained by the Physical Plant.

Four years ago, when a recycling program began, the dumpsters were "borrowed from the Syivan area and the Grad Research Center, which were then incompleted at the time. Since construction has been completed, the bins were asked to be returned.

"Last year, the CEQ bought 12 dumpsters at a cost of nearly $150 each", said Elaine Massery of the CEQ office.

After the dumpsters are emptied by the 6 university trucks weekly, the refuse is taken to Northampton where it is compressed.

The biggest problem with recycling is thepossibility of contamination. It is most important that no cigarette butts, beer cans or even carbon paper get into the recyclable bins because one unrecyclable substance can ruin the whole lot.

Ms. Massery told the MDC that in the past, efforts to recycle paper in the residential areas have failed. Mass contamination of the recyclable material has taken place.

For the 6-1/2 tons collected by the CEQ office, they receive $6 per ton. With this, they are hoping to purchase more equipment and bins.

Following is a list of materials which were found to be acceptable and unacceptable by the CEQ.

Referendum To Be Held In SW

By AVIS YUNI

A referendum is being held today in which Southwest Residents will vote on whether or not they wish construction to continue on the controversial combination hockey rink and basketball court being built on the "horseshoe" by Emerson and Moore House.

The results of the referendum will be presented to the Southwest Assembly at an emergency meeting tonight, November 9th, which shall then decide where it stands on the issue.

The issue was brought up by Marty Rutberg, a resident of Moore House, at Tuesday, November 7th's meeting of the Assembly at 8:00 in Hampden Dining Commons. There was much debate on the issue with the Assembly members wavering back and forth on what they should do about it, passing and rescinding a motion regarding the total stop-page of the construction, and finally adjourning with the passage of a motion requiring the referendum and tonight's emergency meeting.

Rutberg began the discussion of the issue by explaining his petition. He stated that his petition was not the focal point of the whole thing. He did it to see if there was enough response for some kind of student vote and not as a political thing.

Explaining it must be on the horseshoe because of finances - being built with Building Authority funds it must be on Building Authority land - Rutberg said he could accept that there was no place else to put it but he feels the question is whether or not it is worth building at all. While he said he's pro-recreation, he's against taking the last piece of grass in Southwest for it.

The big question in the issue Rutberg stated was the fact that the residents of Southwest were not really consulted on the issue. Those in Moore and Emerson House, the dorms most affected, as well as the other residents of Southwest, were not informed until they woke up last Thursday morning to hear the construction underway, he stated.

In Tueday, November 7th's issue of the Collegian, John O'Connell, Business Manager and Director of Administrative Services for Southwest was reported as having stated that the Southwest Internal Planning Committee (SWIP) had originally requested a basketball court for Southwest last year, and that the Executive Committee of the Southwest Assembly knew construction was to start on the project even if they weren't informed of its proposed location.

At Tuesday's Assembly meeting, Rutberg read from a copy of the SWIP minutes of last year. While it wasn't mentioned how much discussion had been carried on, the minutes stated that an intramural committee should be formed to look into basketball courts, and nothing else, Rutberg stated.

Rutberg stated that all he's after is to have a drive to get the student consensus, to have personal representation on this matter rather than assembly representation. "I will have succeeded if we have that vote."

Southwest Director John Hunt explained that the responsibility for the decision on the construction was entirely his. They had to build it now, he explained, because the contractor had found a hole in his schedule to move it in while building the two other similar complexes in the Central and Sylvan areas. He claimed responsibility for saying go ahead without consulting the Southwest Assembly or residents. Hunt stated that he made that decision "knowing full well what was to follow and should follow."

Much heated discussion and debate was carried on at the Assembly meeting with many ideas batted around. It was raised whether the construction couldn't be suspended until a decision was made by the residents. Hunt explained that he didn't think it could because of the contract but he would try. He stated that they either will have to decide to build the complex or pay off the contractor and end it. "We have to be either all the way in or all the way out."

There was much discussion on the Assembly as a representative body and if they should vote as representatives of their dorms and decide whether or not to stop the construction that night if they wished to since they don't have much time to act.

A motion was made by the Secretary of the Assembly, Phyllis Spatrick, to either stop the construction now or if they decide not to stop it, to form a committee to decide on the aesthetics of the horseshoe. An amendment to have a set form drawn up that night to be brought to each dorm with an emergency meeting of the assembly held if not Wednesday night but one other night this week was defeated.

The vote on the motion to stop or not stop construction was taken, with 9 votes to stop it, 8 to continue it and 5 abstentions. The Assembly passed the motion and stopped the construction.

Much debate followed again. Assembly member John Maynihan made a motion to reconsider the motion they had just passed. A vote was taken in which 13 members agreed to rescind it, 6 disagreed, and 1 abstained.

However, the Southwest constitution requires a two-thirds roll-call vote of all Assembly members (present or absent) in order to rescind a motion, pointed out McKenzie, the Vice-President of the Assembly who was in charge since the president was absent from the meeting.

Nixon Burned In Effigy By Southwest Students

By ETHEL HARRIS and JEANETTE MARTINEAU

President Nixon was burned in effigy in Southwest Tuesday night.

One student was arrested in connection with the incident by campus police and charged with drunkeness and disturbing the peace.

Police attempted to douse the flames with extinguishers as several students tried to collect bail for the arrested person.

The student arrested, John Babine, a 22 year old UMass senior was to be arraigned at 9 am this morning according to Student Attorney Richard Howland.

The incident occurred at approximately 11:45 p.m. in the vicinity of the Southwest phramids. Residents of John Adams, John Quincy Adams and George Washington Towers joined in by throwing garbage and firecrackers from the windows. A crowd of about fifty students milled around the area shouting "Four more years" and various obscenities.

A few students, believed to be McGovern supporters, shouted "Where were you when we needed you?" while stereos played, "Ohio" and a recording of "taps" on an electric synthesizer.

When asked how the protest started, one student replied, "It started when 65% of the fucking American people voted for Richard Nixon, and people don't want to be fucked for four more years."

Ed Marathon Out To Break Record

By MARK VOGLER

The University of Massachusetts School of Education will attempt to top last year's effort by expanding its program when it launches its semiannual marathon next week.

The marathon, slated to begin Monday, is an effort to provide a platform for exchanging and discussing new, pertinent and innovative ideas in education.

A university source said, "The UMass School of Ed has been engaged in a bold and ambitious attempt to become a focal point of major, thorough going reform and revitalization of education in America."

About 5000 participants throughout the country and from abroad are expected to attend the 400 hours of workshops, educational talks, group discussions and film festivals, among other presentations.

The marathon is designed to provide a platform for discussing new and pertinent educational engaging ideas of an individual's choice. Five to 12 different programs are usually conducted at any given moment, beginning early in the morning and running into the late evening.

Dr. Dwight Allen, dean of the School of Education, is one of the prime forces behind the marathon. He collaborated with 100 faculty and graduate students throughout the country and about 50 faculty and doctoral students already at the school to participate in what had been designated as a planning year.

During the year, the majority of the time and effort of the school community was devoted to the design of a new School of Education, a school which could become a powerful force for changing education to meet more effectively students' needs for education to improve the quality of the life for all its members.

Dr. Allen heads the bill of those slated to lecture during the week. Allen's topic for Monday is "Alternative schools: melting pot or mosaic?" Tuesday, he'll elaborate on the dean's message to undergraduates and Wednesday he'll discuss "UMass School of Education in the change of process."

Also highlighting the list of distinguished advocates of innovations in the education process is Mrs. Gwendolyn Peters, an affiliate of the Children's TV Workshop of Newton. Her topic will be "Sesame Street."

Events are offered free of charge to the public. UMass students may receive modular academic credit.

According to one marathon source, the week-long event is worth every ounce of effort that went into it.

"Our marathon is simultaneously a symbol of many goals and a way of meeting them. It draws together people and ideas from all over the world and assembles them in one location.

"The results is an intensive educational smorgasbord of theory and practice, ideas and examples. By simply wandering through our halls, you can put yourself in touch with a myriad educational alternatives."

Budgeting For Student Activities To Begin

By FRANCES BROCK

Are you a Recognized Student Organization that wants to be included in the budget for 1973-74? Paul Doran, of the Student Senate Budget Committee, announces that the budgetory procedures for the Student Activities Tax Funding is starting now.

Any R.S.O. group can apply for this funding. The procedures begin with the R.S.O. group submitting a rational, that is, a summary of its plans for the next year and why it feels it should be in the budget. This, along with representatives, goes before the Budget Committee, which consists of 14 people. After being reviewed by this committee, the rational goes before the Senate. If the Senate passes the group's request, it is returned to the Budget Committee. Last year, they budgeted $642,616.

As of now, no deadline is set. But, if any R.S.O. group wants to apply, do it now. Leave your name and telephone number, if you desire funding or want information, with Paul Doran, room 113, Student Activities Office.

Action On Oath Tomorrow

By MARK VOGLER

A group of UMass faculty members, led by an English professor, will initiate action tomorrow to take a stubborn stand against the Massachusetts loyalty oath. Failure to acknowledge their loyalty to the Commonwealth by November 15, could result in their dismissal from the university.

Milton Mayer, a spokesman for the group who has taught English courses at UMass for six years, said yesterday that he hoped a Friday night meeting (see letter to the Editor) would better inform students and faculty about the history of the loyalty requirement, and the ways and means to protest it.

Mayer and several others are currently resentful of the oath which all employes and teachers working for the state of Massachusetts must sign in order to maintain their job status.

According to Mayer, "It was one of those laws enacted by the Massachusetts legislature in 1949 during the period of "McCarthyism". It was at the peak of the Cold War and during a time of extreme popular hysteria against Communism.

..."Such oaths were enacted in many states during that period. Nearly all of them have since been repealed or have been held unconstitutional. Massachusetts' is one of the few remaining on the books."

Mayer said he was very much aware of the possible consequences that could result from his repudiation of the oath that he swore to six years ago. But he added that he and some of his colleagues are willing to take that risk.

As he put it: "Well, the statute as I understand requires the oath for a condition of employment by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. And whoever works for the university, works for the Commonwealth.

"The obvious inference, then, is that whomever does not take the oath, cannot be employed. There will certainly be a few members of the staff and faculty of this university who will refuse to take the oath. Just who will evade the oath and how many, we don't know yet.

"But we are hoping for strong support, both from the academic and non-academic communities in the area, of both political and legal action against the oath."

Mayer declared that there is no end to the technicalities which could lead to evident unconstitutionality of the oath.

For subsequent proof, he cited the case where employees of the Commonwealth who began working during the three-year adjudication period are now demanded to swear an oath to the State. Mayer questioned the legality of this instance.

Last spring, the Supreme Court voted by a 4-3 decision to uphold the loyalty oath.

In regard to the oath specifically relating to teachers and professors, Mayer mentioned that most of the agitation has centered around Harvard and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

In 1967 an MIT professor refused to swear the oath and later took the case to court. The Supreme Court defended his stand, and ruled the oath unconstitutional in this particular situation. Mayer claimed that this is the only such case filed.

Most recently, an employee of a state hospital filed a grievance against the employees oath in the lower courts and won. But the Supreme Court reversed the decision last spring.

For Mayer, his battle against the loyalty oath is not an unfamiliar experience. He previously refused to take such an oath in 1962 when it was required for a U.S. passport. He sued the Department of the State and won his case in the Supreme Court two years later.

Asked if he felt that the majority of the group denouncing the loyalty oath would go so far as to possibly lose their jobs, Mayer replied: "You never know."

"There are a lot of people who don't want to take the oath. But if they face dismissal here with poor prospects of finding a job somewhere else--especially if they have families to support, then they certainly would have to do some hard thinking before they went through with it."

Mayer commented there is no indication that the university or any other institution of higher learning is enthusiastic about administering the oath.

"But the Commonwealth will compel the university to dismiss them. The university's hands are tied as long as the law remains in effect."

Students on work-study programs and those who are currently employed for the university in part time jobs, are also required to swear allegiance to the Commonwealth in order to maintain their jobs. Mayer hopes that he will get some support from the students when he meets with interested persons tomorrow night at 8 P.M. in the Campus Center (Rm. 163).

Wood To Fight For Law Center

By JIM GOLD

UMass President Robert Wood yesterday announced the next budget hearings concerning University funding during fiscal 1974.

In his weekly telephone press conference Wood also spoke about the elections, the proposed law center, and collective bargaining.

Wood said that prepared statements will be presented at today's educational hearings with Secretary of Education Joseph Cronin. Wood also indicated that the chancellors from each UMass campus would accompany him at the hearings.

Wood expressed his satisfaction with letters and columns which appeared in state newspapers this week. He said that Cronin was correct in pointing out that figures used in a recent Boston Globe editorial against UMass were "inflated and erroneous." Cronin's letter appeared in the Globe Tuesday.

He also said he enjoyed a Daily Collegian editorial backing the administration's role in educational reforms.

Despite recommendations to the contrary, the UMass president said he would continue the fight for a law center at the Amherst campus. He said that the "unique program aspects" will be shown in order to make the case for the center clearer.

When asked about his feelings on the fight for a collective bargaining agent for faculty on the Amherst campus, he said that it was "premature to comment." He said that a study concerning pan-university governance is presently underway and that he would like to wait for its completion before commenting.

Wood said he was "bemused" with the fact of the rhetoric requirement issue being appealed to the Board of Trustees. He said that there are mechanisms on each campus designed to take care of problems which might develop there.

On the elections, Wood said that the Massachusetts vote reflected a "commentary of this state on the war." He also said that this is considered "Kennedy country," anyway.

Correction

Gerry Whitlock did not come in third in the 2nd Hampshire representative contest as was reported in the box on page two in the pm edition of Wednesdays Collegian. Nat Reed placed third and Whitlock fourth. The placement of their names above the vote totals should have been reversed.

In The Nation And The World

German Treaty Ends 23 Year Cold War

BONN, Germany (AP)--West and East Germany initialed a goodwill treaty Wednesday to end their 23-year cold war and ease a major source of tension in Europe.

The historic event opened the way for normalized relations, United Nations membership for both Germanys and at least partial easing of the human suffering caused by their border.

It came 11 days before Chancellor Willy Brandt faces a stiff re-election vote. The Socialist chancellor was expected to ask his nation in the closing days of the campaign to keep him in power on the strength of the new treaty and his previous tension-easing efforts.

The treaty is to be formally signed and ratified after the Nov. 19 election.

In the treaty and accompanying documents--a total of 42 pages--Bonn finally recognizes East German sovereignty. But it balances this by winning East German recognition for the first time of ultimate four power rights and responsibilities for all of Germany. This is intended by Bonn to keep open a chance for eventual German reunification.

The treaty does not remove the border.

But it commits East Germany to let Bonn represent West Berlin, and to bring the divided Germans closer through more visits, trade, cultural exchanges and other contact.

The treaty, already hailed in the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union as well as other nations, was initialed in the office of Brandt by his special envoy.

Nixon Plans Shake-up

WASHINGTON (AP)--Moving rapidly after his re-election victory, President Nixon asked all his appointees Wednesday to submit standby resignations and signaled a major second-term shakeup of the White House staff and federal bureaucracy.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon disclosed his plans for a restructuring and reorganizing of the executive branch when he held a series of post-election talks with staff aides, the Cabinet and agency heads.

Ziegler said there would be intensive discussions of the reorganization plans in the next four or five days, which Nixon is spending at his Key Biscayne, Fla., home with such aides as H. R. Haldeman, John Ehrlichman and Henry Kissinger.

Ziegler noted that presidential appointees traditionally turn in pro forma resignations during the period between terms. But rarely if ever has the tradition been underlined by such a voluntary White House announcement.

Ziegler, responding to questions said Nixon had made clear he wanted the standby resignations on his desk in the near future.

They will be forthcoming from all White House staffers, Cabinet members, top agency officials and even some middle-level bureaucrats who serve as presidential appointees.

Ziegler would offer no indication of whose resignations Nixon might accept, saying the President has yet to make such decisions.

Ziegler was asked whether the fact that the names of some White House aides have been linked with some aspects of the Watergate bugging controversy would have any effect on their jobs in a second term. "None whatsoever," he responded.

At least two Cabinet members--Defense Secretary Melvin Laird and Housing Secretary George Romney--have signified their intention to leave their posts soon.

There have been indications that most other Cabinet members would remain, as well as the principal members of Nixon's White House staff.

In the past, Nixon has voiced unhappiness over what he viewed as the sluggishness of the bureaucracy in responding to his directives or to the needs of the people. Sources indicated the reorganization plans stem in part from this dissatisfaction, and Ziegler said Nixon wants to reinvigorate the executive branch with an infusion of "new ideas and new thoughts."

Nixon Faces Domestic Woes

NEW YORK (AP)- A review of the domestic problems confronting President Nixon over the next four years provides the details hidden within that hackneyed cliche, "the awesome responsibilities of the presidency."

They are indeed awesome. Awaiting decisions are problems involving inflation, unemployment, economic controls, tax reform, budget deficits, welfare reform, health insurance, urban revitalization, education equality.

The list is endless, and if there are any clear-cut solutions they aren't evident. In fact, the demands of one problem are bound to impinge on the resolution of others, thus forcing uneasy, perhaps temporary, compromises.

Considering the present stage of technology, for example, the demands of ecology cannot be met entirely without slowing the productive process that provides the tax money. Already the country faces an energy crisis, partly because of this.

And as many millions now understand, it is still very difficult to battle inflation and unemployment in tandem because of the tendency of one to roar off in its own direction, to react on the other.

How will the big budget deficits be reduced? Financed? Those who have looked into the situation see little prospect for the administration to avoid a tax increase, distasteful as it is to everyone.

In fact, the probability of a tax increase arises at the very time Americans are expressing repugnance against over-spending and reportedly are seeking tax reforms or reductions instead of higher taxes.

How do you keep those budget deficits within manageable proportions? Republican presidents traditionally have claimed to be against deficits, but Nixon nevertheless has been in the red every year but one since taking office.

That question becomes even more complex when you consider that while it is the President's budget he doesn't necessarily control it, especially when another party controls Congress, which passes on appropriations.

The difficulty in resolving any of these huge domestic issues that Nixon must face during the next four years is exemplified by the measures he felt were needed to restrain rising wages and prices

U.S., No. Viet Build Supplies

SAIGON (AP)-Both the United States and North Vietnam intensified their crash supply buildups Wednesday in advance of a ceasefire. The first team of American civilian technicians arrived at nearby Bien Hoa to help the South Vietnamese air force.

While the technicians began reassembling scores of warplanes being turned over to South Vietnam, U.S. B52 bombers launched their heaviest strikes of the war on both sides of the demilitarized zone against what senior U.S. military officials called a major North Vietnamese supply drive.

Sources said the civilians would stay at least a month and start out by assembling F5 fighter-bombers flown into Bien Hoa air base from Iran, Taiwan and South Korea on C5A transports. Bien Hoa is 15 miles northeast of Saigon.

U.S. military and commercial planes delivered 500 tons of military aid equipment to Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base and informants said more planes would be arriving for at least the next week.

B52 bombers flying above thunderstorms spawned by Typhoon Pamela made their deepest raids into North Vietnam since last April, striking 51 miles northwest of the port of Vinh.

The typhoon cut strikes by tactical fighter-bombers over the North to 20 Tuesday, the U.S. Command said.

American military officials said the targets above Vinh were "major storage areas and resupply depots."

Sources said more than 75 B52 bombers took part in the raids, dropping around 2,000 tons of bombs on enemy positions.

U.S. officials had no comment on a Radio Hanoi report that an F4 Phantom jet and two other unspecified aircraft were shot down in Quang Tri on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

U.S. officials said the B52 campaign is aimed at destroying supply lines between North Vietnam and the front lines in South Vietnam.

Sources said the newly arrived civilian technicians are employed by the Air Force Logistics Command and were pooled from several Logistics Command bases including Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma City and Kelly Air Force Base in Texas.

U.S. military officials said Wednesday that American civilian contract workers required for the 400 additional aircraft being given to the South Vietnamese "will be provided."

The South Vietnamese air force now has one squadron of 24 F5s in its inventory but sources said it would eventually receive about 125.

Black Crewmen Accuse Skipper

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP)-Black crewmen claimed Wednesday they were taken off the attack carrier Constellation after their skipper tried in vain twice to stage an "incident of violence" aboard ship.

The claim made by the Black Servicemen's Caucus, a group with a permanent San Diego meeting place, was denied by a Navy spokesman. But he refused to comment on a charge that Negroes have been mistreated on the Connie.

Capt. J.D. Ward, commanding officer of the 80,000-ton carrier, abruptly returned 130 of the ship's 4,500 crewmen to San Diego last Saturday, midway through a 10-day exercise at sea.

A malfunction in the Constellation's fresh water distilling plant was announced as the reason, but a public affairs officer said the 130 men were left behind to settle grievances, mostly over job assignments.

Again, unexpectedly, the Constellation returned Tuesday, delaying the exercise at least until after Thanksgiving so Ward could take part in the talks.

Sidney Glass, described by black crewmen of the Connie as their spokesman, said that the 130 men included 120 blacks.

"It's a racial problem," Glass said in an interview. In a formal statement, the caucus said the Navy gives its Negro sailors "more severe punishment for relatively minor offenses...in jobs, blacks are consistently given the menial and unskilled jobs aboard ship."

The statement said, "the commanding officer, by repeated ludicrous acts, tried to precipitate an incident of violence" during the exercise last week 60 miles at sea. Riot gear was issued to security officers and an all-hands muster was called, Glass said.

Armed with loaded guns, the guards charged into the assembly area but found no riot, he said. Glass claimed the same thing happened a day later. Guards wore helmets that time, he said.

Anyone with a grievance was then invited to leave the ship as a landing party, he said, but then they were not allowed to get back aboard.

The Navy's spokesman, Lt. Cmdr. Bill Collins, said afterward: "The Navy refuses to make a public argument involving this." But he said the story as told by Glass was untrue.

Kennedy Top Democrat For 1976

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Edward M. Kennedy emerged Wednesday from the wreckage of Sen. George McGovern's presidential campaign as the nation's single most important Democrat and its top 1976 presidential prospect.

Any decision on whether to run won't come soon for the younger brother of the slain President John F. Kennedy. Family considerations, as well as political ones, will figure in his determination.

Unlike McGovern, who started running almost as soon as the 1966 votes were tallied and who declared himself a candidate in January 1971, Kennedy can enjoy the luxury of noncandidacy until well into 1975.

For the 40-year-old Massachusetts senator stands alone in a party bereft of big-name leadership, despite the political obituaries that followed his 1969 accident at Chappaquiddick in which a secretary died and his 1971 defeat as assistant Senate Democratic leader.

Sens. Edmund S. Muskie and Hubert H. Humphrey have made clear they won't again seek national office; Gov. George C. Wallace's future is clouded by lingering effects of his near-assassination last May; and McGovern himself seems unlikely to exert much influence in view of his overwhelming defeat.

Other Democrats, however are already looking to the future including:

—Sen. Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, 44, who was re-elected by a smashing majority while McGovern was losing that usually Democratic state.

—Sargent Shriver, 56, vice presidential nominee on the defeated Democratic ticket and Kennedy's brother-in-law, who seemed to enjoy his first race for elective office.

—Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton of Missouri, 43, the deposed vice presidential nominee whose popularity appeared to soar among Democrats who felt McGovern dropped him unfairly despite his failure to disclose his treatment for nervous exhaustion.

—Sen. Birch E. Bayh of Indiana, 44, who made an abortive presidential bid in 1971 but withdrew because of his wife's illness.

Some of the hopeful, particularly Shriver and Eagleton, won't be running if Kennedy indicates interest.

Some of the hopeful, particularly Shriver and Eagleton, won't be running if Kennedy indicates interest.

Since turning down the Democratic vice presidential nomination last July, Kennedy campaigned tirelessly for McGovern and for Democratic congressional candidates.

Tides Hamper Divers' Search

BRUNSWICK, Ga. (AP) - Heavy tides hampered divers Wednesday in their search for bodies and wreckage where a freighter smashed into a drawbridge, killing five persons. Six others are missing, the Georgia State Patrol reported.

The U.S. freighter African Neptune was heading out to sea on the Brunswick River Tuesday night when it crunched into the mile-long Sidney Lanier Bridge.

Three 150-foot spans collapsed and hurled 10 or 12 vehicles 45 feet below to the 40-foot-deep waters.

Gov. Jimmy Carter came from Atlanta to view the damage and said it would cost more than $1 million and take more than six months to repair.

"When we arrived, the ship was still pushed up against the bridge by the tide and the wind," the governor said.

A four-man formal board of investigation will meet next Monday in Savannah, Ga., to look into the accident, the Coast Guard said Wednesday at its Washington headquarters.

Navy PO3C John Robinson, among volunteer divers from Glynco Naval Air Station, said no additional bodies were found Wednesday, but divers were trying to recover the twisted wreckage of a truck.

Surface vessels and helicopters searched for bodies far from the bridge in sounds and bays fed by the strong currents. Carter said one body was found on a beach at Jekyll Island, 13 miles away.

Eleven persons were rescued Tuesday night, eight of whom were hospitalized. Many of the survivors lost loved ones. Apparently, four members of a Waycross, Ga., family perished.

Among the dead are Delia Crosby Johns, 64, and her grandson, Arthur Lewis Johns, 18 months, of Waycross. Missing are Kelly Johns, 25, and his 3-year-old son, Kelly Jr.

An Open Love Letter To Mass.

BOSTON (AP) - "Dear Massachusetts," said the telegram. "We love you very, very much."

It was signed by Dallas County, Texas, McGovern workers.

The telegram, delivered Wednesday to the Boston bureau of the Associated Press, was addressed to "The People of Massachusetts." Massachusetts was the only state to support Sen. George S. McGovern in Tuesday's election.

Indians Leave After Looting

WASHINGTON (AP) - After looting the Bureau of Indian Affairs Building of many native American artifacts and files, militant Indians Wednesday began leaving the building they seized a week ago to protest federal treatment of the redmen.

Dennis Banks, national field director of the American Indian Movement, said he and three others took a small mountain of documents and treaties from Bureau files, including what he called "highly incriminating evidence" against former senators and incumbent congressmen from Western states.

"We have destroyed the BIA," Banks said, referring to the sets of documents. "They ain't got nothin' to work with. We had a truck leave every night."

Many Indians were seen carrying away paintings, sketches, woven baskets and other artifacts displayed in the Bureau as they walked past the barricades to return home. The inside of the building was described as a shambles with broken furniture and papers strewn about. Plumbing was torn out to provide material for improvised clubs and spears.

The Indians began leaving after accepting a wide-ranging proposal offered by White House aides to review Indian grievances and efforts for more economic, educational and health aid.

FIRST TO SIGN–President Nixon was the first person to sign the register to vote at the Concordia Elementary school near the Western White House in San Clemente, Calif. (AP)

Nixon Gets "New American Majority"

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon got his New American Majority" in Tuesday's election, but was more one man's personal victory over another ıan than the birth of a majority Republican party.

The one exception is the South, where the Nixon de appears to have completed a GOP trend that had een evolving for two decades. But even there the hanges were more of label than ideology.

At the presidential level, Nixon made a shambles of ıe traditional Democratic coalition of ethnic, labor nd regional votes which Franklin Roosevelt forged at of the Great Depression.

There is nothing in Nixon's victory, however, to ıdicate he has wrought these elements into a ational constituency for his party. His success was ımarkable for its inability to rub off on the rest of ıe GOP.

While Nixon was running away with the residential ballot, the Republican party suffered a ·t loss of two Senate seats and a net of one gover- ırship, an area where Democrats already had a ppsided edge.

In the House, the GOP was adding about a dozen ıats, against the 15 to 20 they had been expected to ·t in a Nixon landslide and compared to the 37 the emocrats gained in the Lyndon B. Johnson landslide 1964.

Five of the GOP house gains were in the South, and four of them conservative Republicans replaced conservative Democrats, meaning little real change in actual voting strength in Congress. In the fifth a liberal Republican ousted a conservative Democrat.

Nixon took labor states which traditionally belong to the Democrats, but the labor voters generally stuck with Democrats in other races.

Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern couldn't carry his home state, but South Dakota Democrats won the governorship, one of the two house seats and the Senate spot held by Republican Carl Mundt for 24 years.

The same pattern follows down to the level of state legislatures and local offices. In Pennsylvania Nixon won the state but Democrats won the only other statewide races on the ballot.

The only places Nixon's coattails were worth much to other party candidates were in the South and neighboring areas, where the trend always has been conservative.

So, the Nixon landslide translates in the face of all this to the apparent conclusion that the President convinced a majority of the electorate that he deserved their votes more than the Democratic nominee, albeit many of them had to break tradition to oblige.

The next Republican presidential nominee will have to do it the same way. Because, right now at least, there is no packaged new majority waiting for him.

Colorado Shuns Olympics

WASHINGTON (AP) - New York d Florida approved costly en- ronmental-protection plans and veral states upheld the property x as the base for school financing Tuesday's balloting.

In other referenda, Colorado rned an icy shoulder to the 1976 nter Olympics, Californians ted nearly 2 to 1 to restore their ıte's death penalty and Michigan d North Dakota rejected eralized abortion standards.

Oregon voters defeated by a 3-2 ırgin an initiative to ban the ›perty tax, which now accounts · 75 per cent of education ·enues in the state.

Michigan refused a pair of ›positions which would have ted the local tax while authorizing an increase in the state levy, and California turned down a measure which would have cut property taxes by an estimated $3.2 billion.

The Golden State's referendum would have boosted sales, corporation, cigarette and liquor taxes to take up $1.8 million of the slack, but the legislature would have been left to make up the rest.

New York's $1.15-billion bond issue for cleaner air and water breezed to a 2 to 1 victory.

Florida's voters authorized the state to borrow $240 million to buy environmentally endangered and outdoor recreation lands. In North Carolina, a constitutional amendment made environmental protection "a proper function of the state."

Lake Placid, N.Y., site of the Winter Olympics 40 years ago, loomed as a possible alternative host in 1976 after Colorado's electorate decided 3 to 2 that they've had enough at the already-spent $1.9 million in state funds.

California overrode the state Supreme Court's prohibition of executions, but the American Civil Liberties Union vowed a challenge in the federal judiciary.

Democrats Score Several Surprises

WASHINGTON (AP)-Although Jay Rockefeller lost a much-heralded race in West Virginia, Democrats scored several surprises elsewhere and emerged with a one-man net gain in Tuesday's balloting for governors.

Republicans won only seven of 18 contests. And that, coupled with Democratic gains in the Senate as well, made President Nixon's landslide one of the loneliest on record.

With late returns Wednesday confirming Dolph Briscoe's victory over Republican Henry C. Grover in Texas, the Democrats counted 31 governors among their ranks. The Republicans had 19, a net loss of one.

Along with Texas, Democrats retained control of executive mansions in Arkansas, Kansas, Montana, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah and North Dakota. And they took the office away from Republicans in Illinois, Delaware and Vermont.

The GOP held onto Indiana, Iowa, West Virginia, Washington and New Hampshire while turning out Democrats in Missouri and North Carolina.

State Auditor Christopher Bond's victory over former FBI man Edward Dowd in Missouri marked the first time since 1940 that the Show Me state will have a Republican governor. At 33, Bond will be the youngest in the nation.

Rockefeller, 35, a Democrat in the longtime Republican family, was seen as bound for the arena of national politics if he could get by incumbent Gov. Arch A. Moore.

Democratic victories by Dan Walker in Illinois, Philip W. Noel in Rhode Island, Thomas P. Salmon in Vermont and Arthur A. Link of North Dakota ranked as upsets-particularly in light of Nixon's showing.

Despite campaigning in conservative Vermont as one of the few Democratic gubernatorial candidates to embrace George McGovern, Salmon turned back Republican Luther F. Hackett by a sizable margin.

Walker unseated incumbent Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie, who had pushed a state income tax through in 1969 but said he thought the voters had forgiven him.

The only GOP surprise came in North Carolina, although the Republican victories in Washington, Indiana and Missouri were regarded less than certain.

James Holshouser, former Republican state chairman in North Carolina, defeated Hargrove "Skipper" Bowles, a millionaire businessman. The governorship had been held by Democrat Robert Scott, who was ineligible to succeed himself.

Two moderate Democrats were re-elected in predominently Republican states-Robert Docking to a fourth term in Kansas and Calvin Rampton to a third in Utah.

Arkansas Democrat Dale Bumpers led the field in popularity, amassing nearly 80 per cent as he swept to re-election.

IT'S LIKE THIS–Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., confers with his daughter Edwina, as they prepared to vote Tuesday in Newton. Brooke is seeking re-election in contest with Democrat John Droney, the Middlesex County district attorney. (AP)

Mass. Dems Add One Seat

BOSTON (AP)- Massachusetts, the only state in the nation to support the Democratic presidential ticket, apparently added another Democrat to its Congressional delegation Tuesday, but its top Republican officeholder talked Wednesday of running for president in 1976.

Democrat Gerry E. Studds apparently beat Republican William D. Weeks in the previously Republican 12th Congressional District, and though Democratic incumbent Rep. Louise Day Hitcks lost, her Independent successor made it clear he will vote as a Democrat.

Despite sharp contests, Democratic Rep. Robert F. Drinan held onto his 4th District seat, while Republican Paul W. Cronin kept the 5th District in GOP hands with a win over Vietnam veterans leader John F. Kerry. That leaves the delegation split with nine Democrats and three Republicans.

Though McGovern captured 55 per cent of the presidential vote, Republican Sen. Edward W. Brooke won 65 per cent in handily defeating Middlesex County Dist. Atty. John J. Droney, a Democrat. And Brooke said he will give "serious thought" to running for president in 1976.

Brooke told a post-election news conference Wednesday he doesn't regard Vice President Spiro T. Agnew as Nixon's "heir apparent," and said, "I just don't want to rule myself out or anyone else."

He said he believed President Nixon "will not be vindictive" against the only state to support McGovern, and said he thought his own victory margin of 675,000 votes would have been larger but for the anti-Nixon trend in the state.

Political leaders of both parties saw McGovern's victory by a margin of more than 200,000 votes as reflecting deep-seating deep-seated resentment against Nixon dating back to his 1960 run against John F. Kennedy. The war-in a strongly anti-war state-and the flagging Massachusetts economy were also seen as factors.

While apparently picking up a net gain of one vote in Congress, Democrats were disappointed at not having done still better.

Kerry, the 28-year-old Vietnam veteran whose campaign had drawn national attention, lost his bid to become the first Democratic congressman from the 5th District in this century.

Kerry lost by some 17,000 votes to Cronin, a former state legislator who had once served as an aide to former Republican Rep. F. Bradford Morse. Morse resigned in April to become undersecretary general of the United Nations, and Cronin pitched his campaign strongly to his experience in government and his familiarity with the problems of the district.

Mrs. Hicks, seeking a second term, lost by about 3,500 votes to Boston City Councilor John Joseph Moakley. Moakley, who had lost to Mrs. Hicks in the 1970 primary battle for the same seat, bypassed a crowded primary this year to run as an Independent.

The strategy paid off-though Mrs. Hicks had sought in the closing days of her campaign to press the point that Moakley would be left out of the Democratic club in Congress and would therefore lose effectiveness.

"I am still a registered Democrat and I intend to tell them in Washington that I will be voting as a Democrat and that I wish to participate in the new Congress," Moakley said Wednesday.

Drinan, a Roman Catholic priest and a lawyer, kept his 4th District seat in Democratic hands despite a strong challenge by liberal Republican state Rep. Martin A. Linsky. Independent-Conservative challenger John T. Collins appeared to have taken some votes away from both.

Linsky laid some of the blame for his loss on the strong McGovern current in Massachusetts. "We ran into the predictable but especially strong late surge for McGovern which made the number of crossovers fewer than we had hoped for," he said Wednesday.

Elsewhere in the state incumbent Reps. Michael J. Harrington, Torbert H. MacDonald and Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., all Democrats, easily beat opponents. And incumbents Silvio O. Conte, Edward P. Boland, Harold D. Donohue, Margaret M. Heckler and James A. Burke had no opposition. Conte and Heckler are Republicans, Boland, Donohue and Burke Democrats.

In races for the state legislature Republicans fared badly, slipping even further out of control of both the Senate and the House. Republicans apparently took only 52 to 55 of the 240 House seats and seven or eight of the 40 Senate seats.

In statewide referendum questions, voters rejected about 2 to 1 a proposed constitutional change which would authorize imposition of a graduated income tax.

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent received a personal body blow from the voters as the tabulation of voting Wednesday showed Bay Staters again rejected by more than 3 to 1 a proposed constitutional amendment to grant authority for a graduated income tax.

The governor had campaigned strongly for the measure which would allow the legislature to change the present across-the-board tax of 5 per cent. Backing the measure was a coalition of labor, teachers, elderly and various groups such as the League of Women Voters.

Successfully against them was most of the business and banking community, which waged a high-powered publicity campaign.

The opponents said the new tax would not solve the state's financial problems and would hurt the business economy and discourage new business.

With 1,988 of 2,048 precincts reporting, the vote for the change was 675,238 and 1,377,185 against.

It was the third defeat for a graduated income tax in 10 years.

While turning down the income tax measure, voters approved the Sargent-back amendment for mandatory retirement of judges at age 70. With 1,660 precincts in, the vote for retirement was 1,520,351 and against 474,591.

Voters also backed an amendment to allow agricultural land to be assessed at its use value for taxation purposes by a vote of 1,355,619 to 508,183.

The judicial amendment will pose a problem for Sargent who will be faced with up to 50 vacancies on the bench to be filled almost immediately.

The law will affect the Supreme Judicial, Appellate, Superior and District courts. None of the present Supreme Court justices will be affected.

Results on six other referenda issues were not available. They are on lowering the voting age to 18-a formality to follow federal precedent-allowing paupers to vote, state loans for college students, the right to clean water and air, lowering the drinking age to 18 and authorizing school prayers.

The last two votes are not binding on the legislature, having been put on the ballot to test public opinion. Under legislation already approved the drinking age will be lowered as of March 1, 1973.

Studds Wins Race in 12th

BOSTON (AP) — With the final votes in the 12th Congressional District having been counted in Hingham, Democrat Gerry Studds apparently has defeated Republican William D. Weeks by slightly more than 1,200 votes, although Weeks said he is considering a recount request.

Final unofficial figures give Studds 117,754 votes to Week's 116,547.

Before the final votes from Hingham were tabulated, Studds had a 2,700-vote lead. Weeks cut it by 1,500 votes in Hingham but it didn't appear to be enough.

After the Hingham count, Weeks issued a statement acknowledging that Studds had an apparent plurality of 1,200. He added:

"My guess is that roughly 235,000 votes were cast. If after careful checking of the figures in the next 24 hours we find that this is still the final result, I shall certainly give careful consideration to filing for a recount in the communities of the 12th District."

Studds' victory would create a new state Congressional delegation of eight Democrats, three Republicans and one Independent.

Prisoners Put Judges On Trial

"We, the detained men of the Brooklyn House of Detention feel that we are being tried unjustly in that we are not receiving due process of law: We feel that the courts disregard and disrespect our civil and human rights. The Kings County (Brooklyn) Supreme Court is at fault. Our action is directed directly to them. Our many attempts to get some responses pertaining to our rights have all been in vain.

"The Legal Aid Society of the Supreme Court has irresponsible personnel. They are neither sincere nor honest in relating to our cases and the protection of our rights.

"We are not the 'recipients' of justice but rather the 'victims' of justice. This judicial 'system' was devised as a good governing front. All it has done is produce victims and slaves under the guise of justice."

--a manifesto by "the detained men in the Brooklyn House of Detention" who refused to go to court to dramatize conditions.

BROOKLYN, N.Y. (LNS) - For two weeks during the summer, about 507 men in the overcrowded Brooklyn House of Detention at 183% capacity refused to go to their court appearances. Some men were tried in abstentia, some sentenced without being there. One judge told one inmate who did go to court to tell his friend he'd rea longer sentence than he was originally promised.

They issued 15 proposals and demands ranging from change in bail procedure to fit the economic backgrounds of the inmates to allowing them to submit their own motions to "the right to true meaning of 'peer', through all legal proceedings from arrest through trial and appeal," to "honest sincere legal representation."

The court boycott didn't erupt out of nothing. It grew out of a significant suit that 7 jailhouse lawyers in the Brooklyn House of Detention started putting together in late spring. The suit puts judges, the Department of Correction and the Parole Department on trial. "It's a direct confrontation with the judicial system," said one of the outside lawyers who is working with the inmates.

"We felt that something had to be done about the breakdown of the judicial system," said Barry Wilson, who, along with Donald Wallace, Maurice Hundley, Algie McGill, Wilbert Donald, Randolph Jenkins, and Lawrence Gurley, put together the suit. He is now out on bail after being inside the Brooklyn House of Detention for six months and two days. The seven of them, who have learned law in jail, had realized, he said, "that the problem just didn't lie in the Department of Correction getting more TVs and better food" but in the whole judicial process itself.

The system consists of an openly accepted process of "plea-bargaining" where defendants are offered a lower charge and a subsequent lower sentence if they plead guilty. "Plea bargaining is even more insidious for people inside than outside," said Dan Alterman, a lawyer who is helping on the case. "Prisoners are at the lowst rung on the ladder." And so in many cases people who are held in jail because they can't raise bail plead guilty to things they didn't even do so they can get out of jail sooner. Meanwhile they're being held in the decaying, overcrowded city jails through hearing after hearing after hearing (back and forth to the courthouse, waiting sometimes up to 10 hours to get into the courtroom).

"Bail is set at a certain amount and then when the family of a person being held comes down, they look it up and it's higher," commented Barry Wilson. "They hold a person in jail and then when their family comes to find out about them, the Department of Correction can't find them.

"For a copy of your indictment, which you have to have, they charge $4 a page-some people have 10 page, 20 page indictments--how can a poor person afford to buy something like that?"

And then there are the Legal Aid Society lawyers, who are assigned most people who can't afford their own. "The Legal Aid Society doesn't put enough people there to be effective," noted Wilson. "The inmate and the lawyer have a folder-client relationship not a person-to-person relationship. The law talks about a right to counsel but not about if it is effective counsel." And motions made by inmates themselves are in most cases, rejected by judges without even reading them.

"The prosecutor is never saddled with the burden of submitting briefs or written motions in (response) to any motion or brief submitted in the defendants' behalf," said the inmates in their brief. "Yet in nearly all instances, where motions for bail reduction or hearings are made, a verbal opposition (by the DA) is accepted and favored; or in some cases, where the prosecution offers no opposition, the (judge) takes it upon himself to give an argument for the (government) and rules against the defense motion, clearly aligning itself with the (government)."

"The way the law works is that it is necessary to prove yourself innocent," said Barry Wilson. That's the hardest thing for a black, Puerto Rican or poor white person to do."

The suit as it was first constituted asked for a Federal injunction against a number of the New York State Supreme Court judges to prevent them from sitting on cases while the case about conditions was being heard. Alternately the suit asks that the judges abide by the rights of the defendants (all the inmates of the Brooklyn House of Detention, since it is a class action suit)--like keeping bail at a reasonable level considering the economic means of most defendants, allowing inmates to file their own motions--and appointing a Special Master to hear and rule on complaints of defendants if judges don't comply.

It's not surprising that the suit was first directed against the judges. Even the New York Times and a State Joint Legislative Committee on Crime came up with the fact that there are wide diparities in sentences. Mafioso and white collar criminals (convicted of corporate bribery for example) often get off or get short sentences while crime that is committed for survival or by addicts get much longer sentences. Paul Vario, a Mafia figure pleaded guilty to commercial bribery of a police officer and Judge Domenic S. Rinaldi gave him a $250 fine. On the same day Judge Rinaldi sentenced Luis Guzman, 19, to up to five years in jail for robbing a drugstore.

The original jailhouse lawyers who worked on the case requested from the prison administration to form an inmate counsel and the administration agreed. Through the inmate counsel, more inmates got involved with the case, discussing it, adding their case histories, etc. Soon, on the outside, law students and legal workers began doing research as well as interviewing prisoners inside.

PBS Gets New Head

WASHINGTON (LNS)--The new head of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB) (the overseer of all public television) has had quite a bit of media experience to apply to his new job. It seems that Henry Loomis, who was appointed to head the agency at the end of September, is deputy director of the U.S. Information Agency.

USIA's job, according to their own advertising is to "direct information to foreign peoples, such as an explanation of policies of U.S. Government and delineation of U.S. life and culture." The Director of USIA turns out to be Frank Shakespeare--one of the chief ad men for Nixon's 1968 campaign.

Loomis sounds very much like Nixon and his chief spokesman on the media--Agnew. Two days after he was appointed he told the PBS board of directors and the network's 225 station managers, (who naturally watched over closed circuit TV) that in the past PBS "has tried to duck its responsibility and it wasn't successful."

From now on, said Loomis, the CPB which exerted directly only a minor amount of control over the daily programing in the Public TV will take a much stronger role.

What that means is that programs Agnew called "instant analysis" in his famous 1969 speech attacking the media, will be dropped. Instant Analysis, as defined by Agnew, is newscasters commentary after major speeches--particularly presidential speeches. As Presidential aide, Patrick Buchanan put it, "My primary concern is that the President have the right of untrammeled communication with the American people."

Also, said Loomis, long range financing for public television will not be pushed, for at least several years. In June Nixon vetoed a 2 year $65 million grant for CPB.

"The cultural field" and programs directed at a "special audience" will be stressed rather than programs with popular appeal. Loomis explained carefully that he was "concerned" about the propriety of using public funds to be competitive with commercial networks."

Loomis' appointment really didn't surprise anyone. Nixon has appointed other men who share his ideas to the 15-member CPB board and they now are a majority.

This summer, for instance, he appointed former Rep. Tom Curtis of Missouri, a long time Republican as chairman of the board.

With Loomis at the head of CPB, Nixon completes the takeover of public TV which of course was never very independent to begin with. Last winter a Woody Allen satire on Nixon and Kissinger was vetoed because it was too critical of the President.

An American Dream Machine program about the FBI produced by radical journalist Paul Jacobs was shelved after the former President of the Public Broadcasting Service (part of CPB) sent a telegram.

But Loomis makes that direction final.

Brooke Thinking Presidency

BOSTON (AP) — Sen. Edward W. Brooke, who won a landslide re-election victory Tuesday, said Wednesday he is contemplating a run for the presidency in 1976.

The Massachusetts Republican, who is the nation's only black senator, said at a news conference that Vice President Spiro T. Agnew is "not the heir apparent" to the GOP presidential nomination.

"I just don't want to rule myself out or anyone else," the senator said. "I'm going to give it serious thought. I'm going to wait and see."

Brooke said the election returns demonstrated that the public is not receptive to candidates of the extreme left or the extreme right.

Massachusetts' junior senator said he wouldn't call Agnew an "extremist, but he certainly is to the right of center."

Earlier, Brooke said he wished to assure Massachusetts voters that President Nixon "will not be vindictive" because of the state's strong endorsement of George McGovern.

He said the state would continue to receive whatever federal contracts it is entitled to.

Brooke also criticized Nixon as one of several presidents who have participated in the erosion of congressional power.

"We are getting presidential government," he said, "and it is wrong."

Despite a victory margin of his own in excess of 600,000, Brooke said he had lost votes because of his support for the President.

"I happen to know I was cut in certain areas," he told newsmen.

MacGregor Hired

EAST HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Clark MacGregor, national campaign director of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President, Wednesday was elected a vice president of United Aircraft Corp., a company spokesman said.

MacGregor, who resigned from the campaign post Tuesday, is a former member of the U.S. House of Representatives from Minnesota.

Harry J. Gray, president of United Aircraft, said of the appointment:

"For some time we have become increasingly concerned over the broadening gap that has occurred in recent years between the business world and the public sector.

"We have felt that we needed expertise to help us participate in establishing effective communications between these two important segments of our society," Gray said.

Gray suggested that business "must take the initiative to improve the channels of communications between itself and the properly constituted agencies of the public and that the myths and misconceptions that exist on both sides must be clarified."

MacGregor will be based in United Aircraft's Washington office, Gray said.

Facing The Unknown

The man you wouldn't buy a used car from is again The One for Four More Years. This has been greeted with a mixed emotion in many communities, especially those which had a substantial George McGovern backing.

During the past four years, which have seen such diverse activities as a SALT pact, an Indochina War, a trip to China, four killings at Kent State, easing Russian relations, and police surrounding political speeches, this nation has come almost to regard the President royally. Even some Nixon supporters said Tuesday evening that it looked more like a coronation than an election.

For those whose dreams were shattered by the McGovern defeat, hang on to your ideals. If you never let go of them, you can fight off any erosion of your personal liberties.

For those who were boosted to new heights by the Nixon victory, we hope you're satisfied.

We feel that we must now be extra cautious to see that the right to dissent is not eroded any further, that members of the mass media may feel free to express opinions without worrying about reprisals by the administration. It was brought to our attention that Nixon is now in until '76, when Agnew may have a chance at two terms. If he succeeds, then it will bring us to 1984.

Nixon can also look at his victory this way: He has been given a second chance to unite the country. He can now stop playing on ethnic fears. He may now admit that one person is just as good as another. We appeal to the president as was done in 1968: Bring us together.

Despotism And The Oath

By MILTON MAYER

I bespeak this space in The Collegian to repudiate the Massachusetts "loyalty" oath I took six years ago when I joined the faculty of the University. The peculiar circumstances which persuaded me to take it did not justify my doing so. I have since repudiated it in private correspondence with three successive Secretaries of State of the Commonwealth. I do so again here, this time publicly.

The history of all such oaths– beyond the common oath of office– is the history of despotism and attempted despotism. Free peoples have never accepted them–except in the United States of America. Free governments have never attempted to impose them–except in the United States of America. Such few of them as remain on the books in this country serve to reprobate our tradition and belie our pretensions.

The "loyalty" (or "test") oath has no possible efficacy except the intimidation of the taker. It puts him on notice that he is a suspect person, required, in effect, to plead not guilty to a crime with which he has not been charged. It has no possible purpose beyond the gratification and exploitation of popular hysteria. Loyalty cannot be compelled. Loyalty that has got to be sworn to is treason. And treason cannot be disheartened by the lesser offense of perjury.

I should not have taken the oath. I had refused to take such an oath before (and had made my refusal stick). So I couldn't say that I didn't know any better. I could not even claim economic necessity; as a lifelong writing hack I had the possibility (unavailable to most of my colleagues) of earning my living outside an educational institution. I should not have taken the oath.

Those of my colleagues who have been hired during the past three years are now required to take the oath by November 15 on pain of losing their jobs. They were not until now subjected to it: Its constitutionality was under adjudication, and the Commonwealth violated its own law by suspending the oath requirement during that period. (It has also violated the equal protection clauses of the Massachusetts and U.S. Constitutions by its failure to impose the oath on the employes of its inferior jurisdictions–local, township, and county– and even on some agencies of the Commonwealth itself).

Last Spring the oath was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court in a 4 to 3 decision. With the subsequent accession to the Court of the Messrs. Powell and Rehnquist it is unlikely that there will be a reversal unless a technicality can be found to appeal to a court which, in all probability, will have two more justices added to its New Majority in the next four years.

Such technicality is not, perhaps, impossible to find. For example: the oath is required of foreign nationals employed by Commonwealth agencies (including the University), most of whom are forbidden by the country's laws to take an oath of allegiance to another country. Or: The Massachusetts Constitution forbids any test oath and specifically formulates the common oath of office. Or: If the Commonwealth should compel the University to dismiss a tenured employee who declines to take the oath (or who, having taken it, repudiates it), the employee might obtain juridical remedy on the ground of tenure violation.

The mills of the gods grind slowly, if exceeding coarse. Most of my colleagues hired during the past three years are young family men and women. The oath is the condition of their holding their jobs at a time when the job market is very bad. Nearly all the state governments which enacted a loyalty oath requirement during the deplorable heyday of McCarthyism have got rid of it. (So has the Federal Government). But the job market is very bad everywhere.

I have not been able to find a colleague in my own or any other department–and I have advertised– who supports the oath requirement. I have found a few, very few, who, unencumbered by an acquaintance with history, consider it a harmless fatuity. I have found one who, despising it, suggests that it should not be opposed at the University lest the Legislature be displeased and vent its displeasure on the University's budget–as if a browbeaten university with a big budget would still deserve the name of university.

I appeal to my colleagues, if they regard the oath as a threat to academic freedom and liberty of conscience, to associate themseves with those who mean to carry the issue to the courts and to the Massachusetts Legislature (which on many issues has shown itself to be one of the most enlightened in the country). I appeal to those of them who, like me, are not under extreme financial pressure, to offer financial support to any of their colleagues who, declining to take the oath in conscience, lose their jobs in consequence and are thrown on the crowded job market.

I appeal, too, to the student and nonstudent communities of the area for their support. Students, nonstudents, faculty, staff, and administration are invited to attend an open meeting to pursue this concern. The meeting will be held at 8 o'clock this Friday evening, November 10, in Room 163 of the Campus Center.

Operationalizing On Diverse Cultures

By OLU MAKINDE

People living in other cultures satisfy their needs in ways that often seem strange or queer to us. The Chinese cannot understand how Europeans and Americans could ever eat spoiled milk called cheese, whereas an American is repelled by the thought of a people eating rotten eggs. Because of what a Nigerian associated the color of mustard with, he could not stand taking it; so is a Canadian who could not try the slimming okra that is part of the Nigerian diet. An African visitor to the U.S. was shocked at the behavior of kids contradicting the views of their parents in a conversation, all because of his orientation to the idea that children could be seen and not heard in an elderly conversation. Perhaps what seems strangest to a Ghanaian culture that respects age is the French people's fear of age. Their women cease to add to their years after a certain age. Their men, afraid of being considered old, practice all sorts of body embellishments to make themselves look young. Hence, in that culture, age which ought to be a sign of maturity and qualification for leadership in communal and national affairs is thought of in terms of senility. Why do the Eskimos have 23 words to describe snow and the Ethiopians just one?

I can go on and on multiplying these observations in a mile length of paper, but that is not my purpose. In a recent weekend cross cultural workshop, a question was raised–why do most Blacks greet one another with the phrase "What's up?", "What's happening?" which is an exact equivalent of the Yoruba additonal greeting words foe "Kini nkan?" The first reaction to the question itself is why such a question. The second is "I don't know." "I am ignorant of it." I come from Hamilton, which is an exclusively all White settlement, and so I had not been sufficiently exposed to other cultures to know why. Well, a look at such a question seems simple. But if you carefully dig into it, you will find out it is not as simple as ABC. A lot of social interaction, respect, cordiality and sacrifice go into its warm and strong connotation. But you definitely cannot know this unless you participate in a forum or gathering with an open mind to learn, to give and to take. The International Office of the University has therefore sponsored a variety of cross cultural workshops to bring many points on cultural differences to the open, to talk about them, pin point the differences and find a way to look at them with meaning.

We have had many conferences and workshops in the past to examine communication processes and to improve on our understanding of culturally diverse groups; and in the future, we are going to have many more. In fact, this weekend, November 10-12, there is another one in Nantucket Island to which you can attend at a minimal fee of $10.00. But do you care to come? Don't you use "ignorance" many times as a cop-out? Are we not being exposed as Americans to whatever we wanted to be exposed to? The Cross cultural is an island of people with different background cultures coming together without a leader or leadership for a new interpersonal and inter-racial relationship. The whole concept of food, health, love, family, cooperation, unity, aggression, war, and peace are practically and effectively demonstrated. In such a mixed cultural group, you can increase your knowledge of variant life styles as well as explain barriers that exist in crosscultural relations.

We certainly have to take some risk experiencing other peoples and their cultures. In the words of one of the participants over the weekend, "Prejudices may often remain undiscovered until a contrary experience presents itself and stares us in the face." You never can discover your prejudices until you take the risk of acquainting yourself with other cultures. There, and then, you will learn never to impose your own values on others except when they are prepared to take them.

With these observations and challenge, I present to you a more practical way of operationalizing on world culturs through the cross-cultural workshops that can earn you one University credit as well as give you an insight into what goes on over there, in another place, in another culture. The Bubble Bursts

"Sigh. Groan. Fret, stew, fuss. Moan? Gnash! Choke, sob, cavil. Groan; grumble-bitch. Seethe. Seethe, mutter. Seethe, fume, boil. RANT! RAVE! Snivel, threaten. Hiss! Quiver, bemoan. Sigh."

G. McGovern; Nov. 8, 1972

The time for speculation is over. The results are in and the message is plain and simple. The American voters have delivered a decisive repudiation of the McGovern program. The task of interpreting the election results is not at all difficult. The difficulty lies in misinterpreting these results, which is the task of those who were repudiated (that is, if they intend to retain any viability.)

How can the McGovernites play down the impact of this landslide? They can release their long repressed elitist impulses, and damn the American voters for their lack of "enlightenment." That is unlikely, no matter how subtle those impulses may be, since to do so would force them to yield their claim to being a "people's" movement. They can attribute their shortcomings to an alleged backlash of the Eagleton incident. That line is frequently tossed around by the Media commentators, but it doesn't carry much weight, since Eagleton's failure to report his past health problems backfired on him, not McGovern. The blame can also be shifted to Nixon, who didn't bother to respond to McGovern's charges of corruption. Or to Henry Kissinger, who was engaged in a "de[illegible]te Hoax designed to deceive the voters about ou[illegible]lvement in peace negotiations."

And we shouldn't forget to mention those evil fat-cats, who donated more money to the Nixon campaign than to McGovern's. But the influence of money has been overplayed, since poor John Kerry, the McGovernite candidate for Congress in Massachusetts, was unable to capture a seat even though he reportedly spent more money than any other Congressional candidate in the State's history.

The search for an alibi goes on. It is highly doubtful that the McGovernites will acknowledge the fact that the American people were turned off by his idiotic proposals to "redistribute the nation's income." Like it or not, this was one of the major issues in the campaign, but it was not given any significant review by the mass media. McGovern proposed to levy confiscatory taxation on all incomes above the level of $12,000, then was pressured by his advisers to change that figure to $20,000, and then was pressured to change that, too. He later promised that his proposals to give everybody $1,000 would not necessitate any tax increase for the average American, since he would raise all the money by soaking the fat-cats and the military budget. Then he dropped that proposal, too.

No matter how many times McGovern altered his proposals to distribute the nation's wealth, the American voters retained their fundamental antipathy to collectivism. And this I submit, was the overriding issue in the campaign. The American people will continue to reject any schemes which grant the state total power over their incomes.

Letters To The Editor

Rhetoric Reaction Continues

To the Editor:

So far I have stayed out of the fight over the Rhetoric requirement. I shall retire in May, 1973, and I think curricular decisions should be made by those who will have to live with them. But the overbearing and self-righteous tone of Clerk Irwin's letter to the editor moves me to rebuttal.

Let me say first that Freshman Composition, under whatever title, has always been my favorite course. I was fired from one college partly because I opposed its abolition (please, not "abolishment"). At UMass I have taught in the Rhetoric course three semesters, without arm-twisting. I currently have a section of Rhetoric 100, and it is a delight. Most of the students seem not to regret having to take it; and perhaps they would even admit that they are learning something about writing.

To say that a course can be useful and enjoyable, however, is not to say that it should be required. I agree with the recommendation of the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate, and not with the Senate as a whole.

To begin with, having taught Freshman Composition at seven other institutions (including Williams, Bowdoin, and the University of Wisconsin at Madison), I find UMass freshmen the most literate that I have ever taught. Out of a total of 77 students, I have found not more than a half dozen who needed a basic course in Composition. If they do not write decently in other courses, perhaps it is because they find they do not have to. (What happens when some of them write for publication in the Collegian, I do not know.)

Next, I sympathize with rebellion against requirements as such. (I am not talking about calculus for engineers or anatomy for medical students, but about general requirements for graduation.) Speaking for myself, I do not possess enough wisdom to justify my telling a student, "You have to take this course. It will be good for you, whether you like it or not." If others think they possess such wisdom, they should at least grant students the right to ask "Why?" and to be given a solid answer.

In this connection, though I hesitate to comment on the Rhetoric requirement at UMass, many of my students have certainly had the impression that acquaintances in some other sections did a negligible amount of work and benefitted in proportion. My understanding is that most student complaints are not that the course is too hard but that it is too easy--that it is a waste of time. And I see no solution except a staff composed entirely of skilled and dedicated teachers. Regimentation will kill any course; and laissez- faire, with a staff of teaching assistants, is only a lesser evil. I am of course not disparaging TAs as a group but only facing what I believe to be facts.

Since, however, the Faculty Senate in its possibly less than infinite wisdom has decreed that the Rhetoric requirement shall continue for the time being, the only reasonable course of action is to end all recriminations and work together either to develop a course that can be justified as a requirement or to develop an argument, convincing even to the Faculty Senate, that no such course is possible.

Call To Action

To The Editor:

"But I tell you who hear me: love your enemies, do good to those who hate you...Do for others just what you want them to do for you. Be merciful, just as your Father is merciful." (Luke 6:27, 31, 36) Why is it not possible for the American Christian to face up to the most profound moral issue of the moment? Why does the killing, the bombing, the destruction, the indiscriminate use of air power continue? Paul Mayer, a Catholic Theologian, on his recent return from North Vietnam, reported the suffering of a 10-year-old boy. "Wa Ti Tong of the Cho Li Quarter was first wounded at 2:30 A.M. on April 16 during a raid on Haiphong. At 10:00 A.M. that same day he was wounded again, this time by fragments from an antipersonnel bomb, as he lay on an operating table in the surgical section of the Vietnamese-Czechoslovak Friendship Hospital."

Apathy

To The Editor:

Before the election I was wearing a McGovern button and an "Apathy" button. I'm taking off the McGovern Button. Ask not whom the rose bleeds for, it bleeds for thee.

Help The Band

To The Editor:

There are several important aspects to consider when I try to determine the value of a Marching Band on our campus. First of all, the band contributes tremendously to the spirit at all the football games it attends. Their energetic and enthusiastic cheers accompany and often lead those of the cheerleaders. The band is often relied upon for a big sound in any given cheer. Second of all, the football team has displayed a like for the band and its spirit. Even when the chips are down for the team, the band is giving its all to encourage the team and the spectators. Third of all, I would like to get the attention of all those people who do not consider the band a worthwhile and necessary endeavor on this campus. If you hold this opinion, I strongly suggest that you show up at any 4:40 p.m. rehearsal on any weekday (which quite often includes Friday evenings, also). After you have heard the spirit expressed in practice, then you will understand the tremendous desire on the part of these enthusiastic students to make every pre-game and half-time show the best ever. If you still are not convinced that the Marching Band is a great spiritual need on this campus, I suggest that you attend a Saturday pre-game rehearsal; this may include either a 6:30 a.m. or 9:30 a.m. role call, depending whether the game is a home or away game. The fantastic spirit displayed at all of these rehearsals truly represents that of our entire campus. In conclusion, I urge all members of the University of Massachusetts community to give their support to the Marching Band. Let's make 1973 another great football year for UMass–the Marching Band is a big part of that greatness. PLEASE GIVE THE BAND YOUR SUPPORT!! I KNOW I AM!!

Sincerely,
Linda J. Johnson

Rest In Peace

To The Editor:

The Nigerian students at UMass mourn the death of Prof. John Bragg. Those of us who have studied under his feet and some of us who met him the night before he left for Nigeria knew him to be magnanimous, honest, upright and hard working. There was no doubt about Prof. Braggs commitment to developing nations like Nigeria. He gave much more to Nigeria for he really gave himself. May his soul rest in peace.

Editorial Point

We must admit that football and basketball games just won't be the same without a band.

At least it can be said that Massachusetts is NOT responsible for the next four years.

It seems as if a Letters to the Editor contributor and the Collegian have come to the same realization simultaneously. If Agnew gets two terms after Nixon's two end, his second term will end in 1984. Think about it.

Margaret Chase Smith and Louise Day Hicks both lost bids for re-election. Is America going chauvinist? Maybe America is just anti-fascist.

If there's one half way amusing aspect to yesterday's election, it's that we'll get to see the exploits of Henry Kissinger for at least another four years. Lock up your daughters, people of the world.

Support The Band

To The Editor:

The sisters of Alpha Theta chapter of Gamma Sigma Sigma unanimously voted Tuesday night to support the marching band. We feel that without a marching band the University would be missing something important. We urge all the students of this University to sign the petition that the band is circulating and we sincerely hope that money will be appropriated to fund them.

The Biggest Ripoff

To The Editor:

With all this talk about students and employees stealing from the dining commons attention has been drawn from the biggest ripoff of all, the Food Services Department itself.

Though I strongly disapprove of the taking of dining commons property, I cannot see anything wrong with the taking of food. You pay the same for a meal ticket whether you weigh 80 lbs. or 280 lbs. The food is free, you're paying for eating space.

Besides, the food is miserable. I'm not saying that it doesn't provide the nutrition required to sustain human life, it's just impossible to get it all in two or three sittings. They must cook potato starch or something into the food to make it filling because a half hour after leaving the dining commons I'm hungry again.

I can eat two hamburgers in the Campus Center and still be hungry. It's rare if I can even finish two in the dining commons.

If there is going to be an investigation I hope it's of the Food Services Dept. Maybe students wouldn't be inclined to take food out of the dining commons if they got a half way decent meal while they were in it.

Right On, George Orwell

To The Editor:

This is just a little reminder to the voters of America. King Richard has been re-elected for another four year term. From this day on Spiro Agnew will be primed for the Presidency in 1976. If he is elected for two four-year terms it brings the United States up to, you guessed it, 1984!!! Scarey, isn't it?

Rape Prevention

To The Editor:

Det. Sgt. Cavanaugh's discussion of the increase in rapes on campus provides much factual explanation but little advice or solutions to the increasing occurrence of rape, both on and off-campus. The article implies that Cavanaugh feels that the burden of rape prevention should fall on the female, particulary in regard to single hitchhiking. A recent increase in rapes in Israel prompted the Israeli legislature to consider imposing a curfew on women to keep them off the streets after a certain hour - whereupon Gold Meir suggested that perhaps what was needed instead was a curfew for men.

It is becoming increasingly evident that rape will not be stopped by reform in the law, in the courts, or in male-supremacist attitudes. Nor can it be stopped by restructuring the white-male hierarchy in the legal system and society as a whole. The solution must necessarily lie with women who have been raped themselves - who must organize to share their experiences and teach those who have never experienced rape how to recognize suspicious men and how to form rape squads to defend themselves against the rapist.

Who's Who

To The Editor:

Most people who spend time in the Student Senate office will tell you that Who's Who in American Universities and Colleges is a farce, an elitist contest no worth acknowledging. They'll tell you that what you get from it is a piece of paper saying you're more worthy of note than the person you graduate next to.

To an extent they are right.

You can't do much with a piece of paper. You can sent it in with your resumes when you're looking for a job or you can give it to daddy to frame for his office wall. Beyond that, there isn't much else you can do with a piece of paper that says you have been selected for Who's Who in American Universities and Colleges.

But then no one said it's the piece of paper that should mean something. The things that count are why someone deserves that paper, and the fact that somebody took time to send in the nomination.

What you've been doing for the last four years has to mean something, sometime. You'll have to ask if it was all worth the effort, whether you spent 23 hours a day getting stoned or playing student leader or just trying to figure out who you are.

The time to question may come only once before you leave here. Question what others have done, too. Nominate someone. If you think you've made a contribution of your own somewhere along the way, have someone nominate you. Or nominate yourself.

When you need to be reminded the four years was worth the effort a simple piece of paper might come in handy.

Post-Election Blues Poetry —

To Whom It May Concern

I was run over by the truth one day.
Ever since the accident I've walked this way
So stick my legs in plaster
Tell me lies about Vietnam.

Heard the alarm clock screaming with pain.
Couldn't find myself so I went back to sleep again.
So fill my ears with silver
Stick my legs in plaster
Tell me lies about Vietnam

Every time I shut my eyes all I see is flames.
Made a marble phone book, carved
all the names
So coat my eyes with butter
Fill my ears with silver
Stick my legs in plaster
Tell me lies about Vietnam.

I smell something burning, hope
it's just my brains.
They're only dropping peppermints and daisy-chains
So stuff my nose with garlic
Coat my eyes with butter
Fill my ears with silver
Stick my legs in plaster
Tell me lies about Vietnam.

Where were you at the time of the crime?
Down by the Cenotaph drinking slime
So chain my tongue with whisky
Stuff my nose with garlic
Coat my eyes with butter
Fill my ears with silver
Stick my legs in plaster
Tell me lies about Vietnam.

You put your bombers in, you put your conscience out,
You take the human being and you twist it all about
So scrub my skin with women Chain my tongue with whisky
Stuff my nose with garlic
Coat my eyes with butter
Fill my ears with silver
Stick my legs in plater
Tell me lies about Vietnam.

VI

But if one of those children came near that we have set on fire,
came toward you like a gray barn, walking,
you would howl like a wind tunnel in a hurricane,
you would tear at your shirt with blue hands, you would drive over your own child's wagon trying to back up,
the pupils of your eyes would go wild —

If a child came by burning, you would dance on a lawn, trying to walk into the air, digging into your cheeks, you would ram your head against the wall of your
like a bull penned too long in his moody pen —

If one of those children came toward me with both hands
in the air, fire rising along both elbows,
I would suddenly go back to my animal brain,
I would drop on all fours, screaming,
my vocal chords would turn blue, yours would too, it would be two days before I could play with my own children again.

POEM FOR TYRANTS
By LENORE KANDEL

"Sentient beings are numberless—
I vow to enlighten them all"
—The First Vow of Buddhism
it seems I must love even you easier loving the pretty things the children, the morning-glories easier (as compassion grows) to love the stranger easy even to realize (with compassion)

the pain and terror implicit in those who treat the world around them with such brutality such hate

but oh I am no christ blessing my executioners
I am no buddha no saint nor have I that incandescent strength of faith illuminated

yet even so you are a sentient being breathing this air even as I am a sentient being breathing air seeking my own enlightenment
I must seek yours

if I had love enough
if I had faith enough perhaps I could transcend your path and alter even that forgive me, then—

I cannot love you yet

Force of Opposites Ends The War Spirit In Man

The war spirit in man will never end without a guide to truth. Because conflicting faiths in something for which there is no proof have been carried down from primitive authorities to the present day, their beliefs have deceived us. For this reason, despite suffering from disease, war, and emotional misery, the human race is unaware of the disturbing force of Nature.

Incredible as it may seem, people do not cause pain or disturbing emotion. They wouldn't even if they could. Nor do they create wonderful feelings. Emotion changes between wonderful and terrible. Disturbance with a wrong situation comes first, then vanishes as correction is made. Same with pain; it cannot be eliminated without altering conditions. Our feelings change instantly, or gradually, due to the law of opposites — an intelligent set-up of the universe.

We admit most disturbances stem from wrong but not that they all do. However, conflict or an accident are examples where both sides suffer over the same wrong. So there is proof that all disturbance results from wrong. This illness makes the disturbing force of Nature a perfect, self-evident guide. Anyone can discover the above to be a scientific, practical, and workable philosophy. In short, when the cause and precise change of pain and emotion is acknowledged, the war spirit in man will end at once.

Kellogg Grant To Better UM Teaching

Amherst, Mass.—A $490,000 grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, Michigan, will finance a Clinic to Improve University Teaching for the next three years at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

The grant was announced today by UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. The Clinic will attempt to improve the quality of university instruction by refining ways to diagnose teaching and learning skills, and help faculty members improve these skills.

Dean Dwight W. Allen of the UMass School of Education is principal investigator of the project which will be directed by Dr. Michael Melnik, staff associate who earned his doctorate from the School of Education. The idea for the Clinic came from Dr. Melnik's doctoral dissertation, "The Development and Analysis of a Clinic to Improve University Teaching."

Traditional, or existing methods of teacher evaluation in colleges and universities provide teachers with self-critiques and critiques from their students, but do not offer any resources for improvement, says Dr. Melnik.

Through the Keilogg grant, the UMass Clinic will train diagnosticians to help faculty members recognize their strengths and weaknesses in teaching. The Clinic will also offer faculty members the benefits of microteaching, videotape, and resource personnel. Microteaching involves teaching on a small scale—with a smaller-than-normal class, in a shorter time, and with fewer objectives--so that the teacher may focus on specific teaching abilities. Videotaping would be offered to teachers much the same as game films are offered to football players, to provide for analysis and discussion of the performance; and would be either in a classroom or a studio. Resource personnel would include, for example, consultants in the areas of curriculum development, planning and organization, or interpersonal communications.

Results of all critiques will be confidential, and available only to the professor himself.

The Clinic will go through a different phase in each of the three years. This year Director Melnik and his staff will determine the best possible techniques for evaluating teaching and the best ways to collect data on these techniques. Next year the techniques will be offered campus-wide. And the third year of the program, the experience gained at UMass will be available to other colleges and universities.

Objectives of the Clinic are: 1) to analyze teaching problems from the students' perspective. 2) to develop reliable methods of assessing teaching competence. 3) to develop a variety of teaching-improvement resources. 4) to involve students in teacher improvement. 5) to identify and develop effective instructional skills. 6) to identify and develop effective methods of teaching students to understand the instructional process and the professor's approach to teaching. 7) to raise the prestige of teaching, making teaching competency a larger factor in the reward system of colleges and universities. 8) to develop a Clinic which will serve as a model for other institutions of higher education.

Already the idea of a model Clinic has begun. Three faculty members from the Monterrey Institute of Technology are being trained at UMass to develop a teaching improvement clinic at their school.

The Foundation's support to the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Clinic is one of a series of recent grants the Foundation has made to improve university teaching--including grants to Northwestern University, Sterling College, and Davis and Elkins College. Among the 10 largest philanthropic foundations, the Kellogg Foundation supports programs in the areas of health, agriculture, and education of four continents, including the United States, Canada, Latin America, and Australia.

Farm Referendum Wins

BOSTON (AP) — A referendum victory for Baystate farmers was tinged by a sense of loss Wednesday.

Massachusetts voters approved a referendum that will lead to enabling legislation to adjust the valuation of taxable farmland in the state. Under the proposal, agricultural land would be taxed according to use for farming, rather than its maximum potential use for housing or development.

However, Gregory Finn said, "The farmers' sense of victory is somewhat tempered by a sense of sadness over losing Sen. John Barrus." Finn is a spokesman for the Massachusetts Farm Bureau Federation, which has fought for the tax reform for 15 years.

Barrus, R-Goshen, was defeated Tuesday in a close battle for the Hampshire-Franklin seat. Barrus was defeated by state Rep. John W. Olver, D-Amherst, in a close race. Barrus had sought his fourth term.

Finn said Barrus was well-liked by farmers and was the sponsor of the original legislation to reform the assessment of farmland.

"The loss is heightened by the fact we lost Sen. Philip Quinn of Spencer," said Finn, referring to the death of the Spencer Democrat earlier this year. "He was a longtime friend of the farmer and an old farmer himself," said Finn. State Rep. Frederick W. Schlosstein Jr., D-Warren, won a close race for Quinn's seat Tuesday.

Finn said the bureau will work closely with the state legislature, the state Department of Agriculture, and agricultural economists at the University of Massachusetts in coming months to draft the enabling legislation that will come up for enactment, to carry out the mandate of the referendum.

Citing the need for the reform, Finn said farming acreage has dropped from 900,000 acres in the 1967 census to 700,000 acres at present, and the bureau's surveys indicate much of the loss is due to farmers selling to land developers when local tax rates become too high.

He said more and more of the Bay State's 5,000 farmers are persuaded to sell to developers as profits dwindle and taxes rise.

Some Baystate communities have by tradition given farmers a break in taxes, assessing their land for agricultural use. But there is no uniform system, and many farmers pay the same price for their fields as they would for residential land.

In one case, Finn said, an Essex County dairy farmer has land in two towns. One town assessed it at $50 an acre, while the same farmland in the next town is assessed at $1,700 an acre.

In shaping a formula to apply to all farmers, Finn said the Farm Bureau will insist that a safeguard for speculative reasons.

Ahora To Sponsor "Burn"

The film "Burn" will be shown Friday, Nov. 10th at 7 and 9 p.m. at Thompson 104. Price is 75 cents.

"Burn" was made in 1969 by the same director (Pontecorvo) who filmed "The Battle of the Algiers", the haunting "documentary" of the Algerian revolution that became a film text for the New Left in America. "Burn", which stars Marlon Brando, is a swashbuckling adventure depicting the colonialism in 19th century Latin America and the revolutionary movement which struggles for freedom. The "Burn" comes when the government forces set fire to the countryside to destory the base for the guerrilla army.

Hello, This Is Your Professor

On almost any given Monday, Wednesday and Friday morning at 9 in a Quinsigamond Community College classroom in Worcester, 15 students gather for class while their teacher, UMass Professor Joseph Marcus, is at that moment 40 miles away in his office at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Class begins as scheduled when Prof. Marcus dials a Worcester area number, is connected to the classroom and begins teaching via a portable conference telephone.

The class is Applied Mechanics-Statics, part of the engineering curriculum. A. E. Wandrei, professor of science and technology at Quinsigamond, is co-teacher with Prof. Marcus. Telelectures are given to introduce new material--during some periods students study and work with tutorial support from Prof. Wandrei. Prof. Marcus is a veteran classroom teacher and is associate dean of the UMass School of Engineering.

In the telelecture sessions, there is a live, two-way audio exchange during the lecture period via a portable hand phone that students pass around the class. An overhead projector replaces the traditional classroom blackboard. Instead of sketching out problems on a board, Prof. Marcus does them on slides in advance and sends them to Quinsigamond for presentation by overhead projector.

The course is part of a general cooperative effort between UMass and the state's community colleges to make the educational resources of the Amherst campus more widely available. It is in many ways a pilot project, being tested to see if it might be a way for small colleges with limited resources to give their students courses that might not be available any other way.

One important means of evaluation will be the final exam. The students in the telelecture class and a similar group of students taking the course in a conventional classroom manner will be given the same final and the results will be carefully checked.

"In the meantime one fact is obvious," Prof. Marcus said. "The students in the experiment seem to be applying themselves more diligently that do regular students.

If the test works at all well it may be expanded so that classrooms in a number of different cities may simultaneously be tied together for a common lecture from a central source."

Why ROTC?

Q. Last spring the Faculty Senate voted to withdraw academic credit from Army and Air Force ROTC. Yet there has never been an official statement as to why this action was taken. What is the official reasoning why ROTC should be denied credit when such courses as in Physical Education 100 and Residential College colloquia receive credit? We fail to see any fair standard in this. Could you please get to the bottom of this and show the standard by which the Faculty Senate has acted? We are able to get no response and will be very grateful for your assistance in clearing the air on this.

A. The Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate established a sub-committee on military affairs in 1967 in response to an increased awareness of the academic issues surrounding the ROTC program on campus. At the 13th Regular Meeting of the Senate, January 9, 1969, the Senate instructed this sub-committee to examine several questions relating to the ROTC program: should the program increase non-military faculty participation? What should be the structural relationship between the Division of Military and Air Science and other units within the University? How much academic credit should be given for courses within the various levels of the ROTC program? What restrictions does the Department of Defense place upon instructional materials and are these consistent with University standards?

The sub-committee studied these questions extensively and reported its findings to the Senate at its 148th and 149th Regular Meetings, November 6 and 20, 1969. It recommended a greater interdisciplinary effort in the program, it suggested that drill and training courses be kept to a minimum, and it made several recommendations concerning the structure of the department and procedures for reviewing instructional materials. In regard to academic credit for ROTC courses, the sub-committee recommended, with the approval of the parent Academic Matters Committee, that credit be awarded only after courses and instructor qualifications have been approved by Academic Matters and the Senate in the stablished manner. At the 149th meeting this latter recommendation was amended on the floor of the Senate so as to award credit only to ROTC courses taught by regular departments within the University; courses taught by the Division of Military and Air Science would not carry credit.

Several arguments were presented in favor of withdrawing credit from courses taught by ROTC personnel. The appointment of officers to teach ROTC courses is initiated from outside the campus; unlike regular faculty appointments, the University has very little control over the appointment process except a veto power. ROTC instructors, moreover, are paid by outside sources; it was argued that this procedure presents possible conflicts of interest and involves dual lines of accountability. Similarly, the long term accountability and commitment of military personnel is to the military, not the University. It was urged that this fact threatens to exert constraints on the campus activities engaged in by ROTC officers. Because of these peculiarities in appointment and accountability, the University has been moved in the past to impose special constraints on faculty in the Division of Military and Air Science--special committees, surveillance of texts, and the like--of dubious value in an academic community; the precedent set by these practices is a potential threat to the principles of academic freedom.

The Senate was apparently persuaded by these arguments; it adopted the amendment, thereby recommending to the administration withdrawal of academic credit from courses offered by the Division of Military and Air Sciences. The Board of Trustees, on the other hand, was apparently not so persuaded; it adopted an alternative on June 29, 1970, stating that "academic credit will be granted (for courses offered by ROTC personnel) on the same basis and criteria as applied to all courses University-wide." Since then, the Division has continued to offer courses for credit and introduce new courses in accordance with the usual procedures, viz. presentation to Academic Matters through its sub-committee, review by the entire University community by means of a Provost's letter, and review by the Faculty Senate.

Recently, the Faculty Senate reaffirmed its original position and requested the administration to withdraw academic credit from these courses. The Chancellor approved the action and at it's meeting the Board of Trustees voted to accept it. Commencing Fall semester, 1972, therefore, courses taught by military personnel in the Division of Military and Air Science will not carry academic credit. In light of this action, further action on courses currently under consideration by the Senate from Military and Air Science is unnecessary.

The criteria issue confronting the Senate during its deliberations was the control of courses and instructional personnel in the Division of Military and Air Science. The academic community exists to ensure adherence to the usual canons of academic inquiry; the free interchange of ideas and the pursuance and transmission of knowledge unfettered by interference from external institutions and dogmas. It was the opinion of the Senate that the Department of Defense and the military sufficiently controlled the courses and instructional personnel within the Division of Military and Air Science as to stand in opposition to these canons of inquiry. As I understand the action of the Senate, it in no way called into question the precise course content or the qualifications of the instructional personnel qua military officers; it only maintained that they did not fall sufficiently within the raison d'etre of the academy to warrant their inclusion in the credited curriculum of the University.

Q. Will the dorms be open after the UMass-BC football game November 25th? I've heard they'll be closed, and that if I wanted to stay overnight I'll have to pay $2.50 to stay in an open dorm. It seems silly, because I'm already paying through the teeth!

A. Chuck Hampton of the Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services Office has confirmed that dorm residents will not have to pay.

Soccer Team's Spirit Undampened

By MARTY KELLEY

From A Cranberry Bog–It was a day that even Satan wouldn't pick for sightseeing. It was dark, gloomy, and muddy as the cars leaving the Boyden Parking lot offered the illumination. But for those who wore red and splashed hurriedly in the puddles below the parking lot, it was the best of days.

For the first time in the school's history a University of Massachusetts team defeated a soccer team from nearby Springfield College. But it meant much more than just a digit in the win column. For a team that has suffered much along the avenues of exposure this fall, well, it was simply a helluva way to make some noise.

"I just wish more people could have been there to share this one with us," said Mark Tyma, the halfback who actually produced the winner. "If they could have seen this one, I'm sure we would have had more of a following this fall."

But this was one that the strong-thighs from Springfield didn't want to experience. But for a Chief contingent that had to sojourn some thirty minutes up 91, it was, as far as Coach Gerry Redmond was concerned, the best little excursion that that unit took all season. You see it meant so damn much to this soccer club that has been ignored by the school, the fans, the press, and the New England polls all season long.

But after today people should start waking up to the character and integrity of this club. Yes they've beaten Connecticut, Boston University, and now Springfield, and still they have yet to be ranked in New England, most of it is of course political, but we won't talk about that will we...

But UMass can't help but be ranked in New England now. You see the Chiefs were number four and were seeded number two in the upcoming NCAA small college playoffs. Yes you might say it was a nice win for a team that has not yet been ranked but had to read the muckraking by UConn's Coach Maroney behind their backs. He literally called this team a joke for talent and his clowns just couldn't get up for the Aggies. The final score- Massachusetts 3 Connecticut 1. Talk is cheap.

So co-captain Dave Ouellette, was this your most pleasing win? "No way," reminded the muddy sweeper who kicked out a last ditch loose ball in front of the splendid Vercollone. "I got my satisfaction from stuffing it to Maroney. But when we were ahead by three at the half, I just told the guys that this is the type of a team that is going to be ready in the second half and we'd better start realizing it."

For those who were there to sniffle their way to the infirmary, the second half was scarey, hairy, and nearly rewrote Tom Coburn's script. Incidentally it was a team script but it was funny how after the game Curt Syer called Carl Vercollone the best goalie he's seen.

I searched for a nostalgic quote and I got one from a guy that has been in these Springfield fiascos before. Believe it or not Joe Cerniawski is lucky to be playing soccer today. He broke his leg in a scrimmage against Amherst last fall and did the cast trick for six months. But Joe was back to face his arch-rivals after a year's layaway. "It felt real nice to get em'," grinned Joey. "It means so much not only to the school and to the team, but to the Alumni as well."

When all was said and done Coach Redmond got his two cents in. "They can't keep us out of the ratings now." And speaking of ratings Mark Tyma alluded to the fact that it was a great win for Coach Gerry's job. But what Mark doesn't know is that Mr. Redmond, when it's not coach Redmond, is an expert in the field of Sports Studies and will figure prominently in the formation of our grad program in Sports Studies which is already underway. Redmond will have concrete teaching assignments in such areas as sociology of sport and grad counselling as well as coaching a team that has a chance of bringing home a 6-3-1 record depending on Saturday's home finale against New Hampshire.

Although the last ten minutes seemed infinite, when you heard that final horn, and saw the kids just too damn stiff to embrace each other, I can honestly say that it was worth the cold pills and the wet feet. I saw a group of kids do a job.

Two Fencers Shine at RPI

The UMass Fencing Club did it again. Pete Dillard, entering an open foil prep competition at R.P.I. in Troy, N.Y., this past weekend, was undefeated in his first pool and lost one bout in the finals to come in first. This was Pete's first competition in the Amateur Fencers League of America.

Bernie Desautels entered the open sabre and open epee competition placing fourth in fabre and sixth in epee. Bernie did not fence to his best ability and it showed in the results.

The Fencing Club is tentatively planning to hold an open foil novice meet on campus in the near future. A later announcement will be made as to time and place of the event.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Books on astrology, psychic phenomena and related subjects would make fine gifts for Scorpio. These persons love mystery and are drawn to the occult. A Ouija board would delight Scorpio and so would fiction dealing with spies and detectives. Some stocks and bonds would not displease these natives. In actuality, Scorpio is not difficult to please. Key is to display genuine pleasure in the giving of your gifts. Then Scorpio responds in a like manner.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Watch spending habits. You may be paying too much for too little. Plug financial loopholes. Accent now is on creativity, self expression, the imprinting of your own style. Children, young persons play important roles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Carelessness now proves costly in numerous areas. Check leases, agreements, contracts. Study fine print. Property value needs review. Promote your own security. Means make contacts which could result in eventual gain.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may be impatient, even frustrated. But key is to maintain balance. Pace yourself. Don't take too seriously claims of neighbors, relatives. If thorough, you eventually find way out of psychological maze.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Give yourself room. Means put ideas into motion. Accent creativity. Be ready for change of scenery, possible travel. Variety will be highlighted. Opposite sex will find you especially intriguing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent is on home, property, measures taken to improve security. Taurus, Libra individuals are involved. You gain through fresh contacts, concepts. Throw out methods which create waste, loss.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Relative could upset apple cart by failing to be discreet. Know it and have alternatives at hand. Deal gingerly with Pisces. See situations, individuals as they actually are-get rid of wishful thinking.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Friends could argue about money. Key is to maintain neutral stance. You will be aided by one in authority. Co-operate with older individual. Stick to familiar ground. Capricorn is in picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You exhibit drive necessary to meet challenges, overcome obstacles. Stress dynamic approach. Don't wait to be told what to do. Clean house. Insist that others pull their weight. Don't fall for sob story.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Obtain hint from Scorpio message. Accent independence. Highlight originality. Adhere to your own style, principles. Welcome new contacts. One you admire pays meaningful compliment. Leo is in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Pause to reflect. Don't rush into situation. Control emotions. Cancer individual does have your best interests at heart. Know it and respond accordingly. Money situation improves if you are patient.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid scattering efforts. Set sights on definite goal. Permit mate, partner to have say. Listen, observe and learn. Gain indicated if you can play waiting game. Sagittarian is in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Check resources. Take inventory. What you may be counting on could be far away. Means insist on facts, not speculation. Be aware of apparent minor matters. If thorough, you could make valuable discovery.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, creative, capable of expressing yourself through written word. New start made this year will bear fruit. In December, you gain access to information which can be transformed into solid gain. You enjoy travel and are a natural philosopher.

Grimsley Says 'Bama Over LSU Squeaker

NEW YORK (AP) - "You have to try to keep from losing a football game before you start trying to win it," says Alabama's veteran coach, Bear Bryant.

This is the philosophy - "Don't make any mistakes" - which will decide Saturday's major college battle, unbeaten Alabama against unbeaten Louisiana State at Birmingham, Ala. ABC—TV, 4 p.m. EST.

Of the Top Ten teams, Ohio State, Oklahoma and UCLA have the toughest tests, but should come through.

Last week we dipped to 43-18, .693 but the season mark still hangs high at 357-108, .768.

Alabama 20, Louisiana State 17: A Louisiana native, Terry Davis, will provide the direction for the Tide in a tough scrap.

Ohio State 19, Michigan State 14: How many games can the Spartans win for good ol' Duffy?

UCLA 30, Washington 22: A good chance for an upset if the Uclans start thinking too much about USC next week.

Notre Dame 36, Air Force 14: Were the fly boys looking to this vital game when they tripped over Army?

Texas 35, Baylor 14: The Longhorns' top rusher is Roosevelt Leaks, but there are no leaks in the Texas line.

Oklahoma 38, Missouri 20: The Tigers of Missouri have upset potential, but the Sooners should dominate on the ground.

Navy 22, Pittsburgh 18: The improved Midshipmen deliver for their whooping classmates.

Yale 24, Penn 17: The Eli should solidify their position at the top of the Ivy League.

Syracuse 19, Army 12: The once formidable Orange team is dragging, but it's too much to expect another peak game from Army.

Nebraska 42, Iowa State 21: Even one of the top pro teams would find it hard to stop the fantastic Johnny Rodgers.

Texas Tech 25, Texas Christian 13: Tech's stable of race horse will be hard to corral.

Ruggers

Did you know that the football team isn't the only squad from UMass that will be going against the Crusaders Saturday in Worcester? The UMass ruggers will travel there as well to battle the Holy Cross Rugby Football Club. "Piggy" has promised us that the home forces will prevail. Can you doubt the word of an ex-Ivy Leaguer?

Chargers Give up on Thomas But Svare Hopeful for '73

SAN DIEGO (AP) - Running back Duane Thomas was placed on the reserve list by the San Diego Chargers Wednesday, making him ineligible to play for the rest of the National Football League season.

The announcement came after Thomas failed to show up for practice, the Chargers said. "Duane is not prepared to play this season," said Coach Harland Svare in a statement. "Obviously he's got some problems that won't permit him to play now. I hope he will be able to play for us next season."

Thomas, 25, came to the Chargers in a trade this season after a stormy 1971 season with the Dallas Cowboys, his second in the NFL. His contractual disagreement with Dallas apparently carried over to San Diego, although Svare has said he thinks the problem is personal, not financial.

Thomas was activated for the first time this year before last Sunday's game with Dallas, but did not play. Before the game he stood to one side of his teammates and took no part in calisthenics. During the game he sat motionless on the bench, and several teammates said later he ignored their attempts at conversation.

Thomas attended the Chargers' practice Tuesday and also showed up for a team meeting.

Coburn Nets Hat Trick

Soccer Team Upsets Fourth Ranked Springfield, 4-3

By DOUG FIDLER

Tom Coburn scored a hat trick and added one assist to lead the UMass varsity soccer team to a stunning 4-3 upset victory over the Springfield College Chiefs, fourth-ranked in New England, yesterday afternoon on the Boyden Fields. The victory was the first ever for a UMass team over Springfield.

Carl Vercollone played another outstanding game in goal, as he turned away 15 Chief shots. Co-Captain Dave Ouelette, Joe Cerniawski, and Kurt Syer all performed admirably at fullback.

Neither team could mount an offense in the first 30 minutes, as footing became more precariously on the rain-swept field.

The Minutemen booters suddenly found their kicking shoes and scored three goals within just seven and a half minutes. Coburn scored the first two goals in the scoring splurge. Jim Vollinger crossed a nifty pass to send Coburn off on a breakaway. Coburn chipped the ball over goalie Steve Bailey's head for the go-ahead point.

Coburn scored three minutes later when he stole a pass just outside the penalty area and, after faking the netminder down, fired into the net.

Mark Tyma gave the Redmond-men a three goal lead at half time when he scored on an indirect kick on the assist from Coburn.

Mike Conte brought Springfield back to a two goal deficit when he let go with a blazing shot from just outside the penalty area with just six and a half minutes gone in the final period.

Coburn scored his hat trick a half a minute later when he faked the goalie down and smashed a volley into the far corner of the net.

Springfield, however, was not going to quit early. They came back with a steady offensive attack against the Minutemen defense, popping in two goals on indirect kicks in the final 25 minutes. They nearly tied the game up on several occasions but were prevented by some outstanding saves by Vercollone and a good defensive effort from the fullbacks.

"Carl Vercollone played an outstanding game for us," said Gerry Redmond. "He couldn't be faulted on any of Springfield's goals."

"When Coburn concentrates on soccer instead of talking to the referees," added the coach, "he's always liable to score a goal. He played a great game and there are few forwards in this leaue who could score a hat trick against a team like Springfield."

"Mark Tyma's got one of the hardest shots I've ever seen in amateur soccer and he certainly proved it on his goal. The goalie never had a chance to stop it."

"Despite some anxious moments from the half-backs in the later states of the game when they were guilty of some nervous mis-kicks, they played well too. Special praise should go to Herman Rodrigo, who had his best game to date."

Coburn's performance upped his season's totals to 11 goals and one assist in just nine games. UMass now stands at 5-3-1 with one game remaining and are therefore assured of a winning season

Judge Rules World Hockey Jumps Legal

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Bobby Hull and other former National Hockey Leaguers are free to play in the new World Hockey Association as the result of a ruling Wednesday in federal court.

U.S. District Court Judge A. Leon Higginbotham issued a preliminary injunction prohibiting the NHL from enforcing its controversial reserve clause which binds players to the older league.

The decision means that NHL stars who jumped to the WHA for more lucrative contracts are free to play in the newly formed league pending Higginbotham's final ruling.

The injunction order is effective pending posting of a $2.5 million bond by the WHA.

The Higginbotham decision as it currently stands, breaks down the reserve clause, the structure of all major sports in the United States.

The decision, at least temporarily, has saved the WHA, which likely couldn't exist as a major league without the big name stars it signed out of the NHL.

Hull, who left the NHL's Chicago Black Hawks and signed with the WHA's Winnipeg Jets, had been enjoined from playing with the team under an injunction obtained by Chicago.

Higginbotham's ruling came on a test suit riled by John McKenzie, who jumped from the NHL's Boston Bruins to become player-coach of the WHA Philadelphia Blazers. His contract later was sold by the Bruins to the NHL's Philadelphia Flyers. McKenzie and the Blazers contended that the NHL's reserve clause was a violation of antitrust regulations.

The judge ruled that insofar as the NHL reserve clause operates through player restraints to exclude the WHA and its teams from entering professional hockey, it is a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. He added, however, that pending further hearings, he could not rule on whether the entire reserve clause was in violation of the act.

Frosh Have Floor At Varsity M

By BILL BALLOU

There were a couple of things different about yesterday's Varsity M Club Luncheon. First, and most important to gourmets, eclairs were the featured dessert rather than cake. Second, freshman football was the feature topic instead of the usual varsity style.

So, head coach Dick MacPherson didn't do too much talking and there weren't any varsity ballplayers around to show the player's side.

Instead, the featured guests were people whose names are less than household words and who talked about ballplayers whose names are also less than household words.

Bill Maxwell, the freshman head coach, talked about the freshman program as it relates to the "student-athlete." "The first thing we want to impress upon our young men," he said, "is that they're students first and athletes second." To prove his point Maxwell said that any time a freshman feels he has too much school work to do, or something big like a test to study for, all he has to do is let the coaching staff know and he's excused from practice.

The frosh coaching staff was also represented by Charlie Donovan and Mike McArdle, who handle the offense and defense, respectively. They both described some of the talent they've go to work with and both of them seemed pretty happy with it. The way the frosh have handled their opposition thus far this season, they ought to be pretty happy.

MacPherson had words of praise for his freshman and their coaches and related a story concerning last week's frosh win over BC.

It seems MacPherson had taught the frosh a lesson in humility during the previous week's practices. So, after they thumped the Eagles, they decided to hold a closed-door session and give the game ball to Mac. Anyway they tried to give the game ball to Mac. Boston College owned it and they weren't about to give it away.

MacPherson was impressed with the BC win, though, and said it taught the frosh a lesson." They learned that BC can be had," he said, "they can be had if you're willing to pay the price."

Speaking of paying the price, one guy payed his admission price and won the door prize for the second time this season. I won't mention the fiend's name, suffice to say that I was over 100 digits off.

Arbour Ousted

ST LOUIS (AP) - The St. Louis Blues of the National Hockey League fired Coach Al Arbour and replaced him with Jean-Guy Talbot, 39, the former coach of the team's Denver Spurs farm club, General Manager Sid Abel said Wednesday.

"There's no question that Al Arbour tried hard and did his best," Abel said. "When Al was hired he told us it was his feeling that anytime he felt he could not get the most out of the club he would not stand in the way of changes that would help the Blues," Abel said.

The Blues have won only two of 13 games and have a 1-7 record at home.

Chaney Sparks Surge

Celts Rip Warriors

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Celtics blew the Golden State Warriors off the court Wednesday night with a 40-point third period and posted a 128-11 National Basketball Association victory at Boston Garden.

Don Chaney had 11 points in the third period to pace the attack that left Boston on top by 24 points going into the final frame, 104-80. Chaney kollected 23 points on the night.

John Havlicek and Jo Jo White added eight points apiece in the period. Havlicek had 25 points for the night and White collected 18.

Rick Barry led the Warriors with 34 points while Nate Thurmond pumped in 20.

The Celtics took the lead 27-25 at the end of the first period on two free throws by Paul Silas, who had 20 points and 13 rebounds for the game.

Boston never gave up the lead from that point, posting a 64-54 halftime advantage.

The victory left the Celtics at a hot 11-1 for the season, on top of the NBA's Atlantic Division.

The loss dropped the Warriors, now 9-3, out of first place in the Pacific Division in favor of idle Los Angeles, with an 11-3 record.

The Name Game

An obscure Vancouver Canuck caught my interest last weekend while I was viewing a delayed Boston Bruin telecast. (You know the ones--they take you into the next day). His name was Greg Boddy and it was the name itself that arrested my attention. With the body check being such an important and common part of any professional hockey game, wasn't this a great name for an NHL puckster?

That got the wheels turning, and, with the help of a classmate, I managed to come up with some other interesting names. This list of double-entendres may seem terribly contrived but there were even hoakier ones which I decided to cut. That is to say, the worst is not to come.

I thought of one other player to join Boddy in the hockey camp, Bart Crashley. Honestly now, wouldn't even Eddie Shore look like a kitten by comparison? And the fact that Bart was a Central League nobody at last report doesn't cut any ice. (Pun intended). Wild expansion has made last year's minor leaguers this year's stars. A Greg Shepard hat trick two weeks ago in a Bruin uniform clearly illustrates this.

In baseball two pitchers come forth with appropriate labels. How would you like to bat against the mustachioed Rollie Fingers? Think of drawing a mid-April mound assignment against Early Wynn when he was hurling masterfully in the 40's and 50's.

Basketball and boxing both contribute formidable names to the list. I don't think I'd like to climb into the ring with Dick Tiger or jump center against Wayne Hightower.

It is football, however, that has to win the name game prize. To begin with, you'd have to try to run through ex-Penn State defensive tackle Paul Smear. Even if you managed that there would be two linebackers waiting for you, Sam Huff and Steve Stonebreaker. There are a hatful of other names which may not be as graphic, but still have all the subtlety of a clothesline tackle. Butkus, Ditka, Hackbart, et al. That list is endless.

In a final category there are the athletes who carry monikers that are classic misnomers. How do you account for an invaluable player by the name of Johnny Bench? Another catcher, Gene Tenace, is in the wrong game entirely. He should turn in his Louisville slugger for a tennis racket. How did a guy who can run over 26 miles get the name of Jim Shorter?

UMass runningback Paul Metallo breaks through UConn defense in key Yankee Conference victory two weeks ago. The Minutemen will try to get back on the winning track Saturday against Holy Cross after last week's loss to Bucknell. "Horseshoe" Construction To Continue

The construction of a new hockey rink and basketball court in the horse shoe of Southwest will continue. The Southwest Assembly after a heated argument between Southwest Director John Hunt and Eliot Sherman, a student, settled down to accept a proposal that the building continue as long as the Assembly has a say in any future decisions.

The lack of a quorum was finally solved after a delayed start and a recess after an hour. The measure drawn up by SW Vice-President Dennis Mckenzie passed by a roll call vote of 18-4. Four volunteers--two for and two against--were chosen to present the proposal to a committee composed of Vice-Chancellors Robert Gage and Thomas Campion at 11:00 a.m. today.

Last night's emergency meeting of the SW Assembly was called after last Tuesday's decision to hold a referendum on the issue of Hunt's authorization, without consulting the Assembly, for the construction of the complex in the horseshoe. A hastily drawn referendum was voted on by SW students Wedneaday night.

The vote was 856 to 739 favoring the rink and court. 739 persons favored alternative 2, which stated that while they agreed that there was insufficient consultation, the construction should continue as long as the students have a say in future decisions.

277 marked alternative 3, which felt the project should proceed as planned. Votes on questions 2 and 3 were combined. The remaining 739 asked that the project should be stopped and the horseshoe returned to its original state.

Mckenzie drafted the original motion that alternatives 2 and 3 be adopted, adding, "on condition that students have a major say in the future." He also said that the support of the proposal should be withheld, "pending (favorable) results of the conference tomorrow (Nov. 10)."

The referendum was attacked by an unnamed assemblyman as being, "not clearly delineated and totally inadequate." The phrasing of the referendum was also attacked as favoring an answer favorable to the administration, i.e. John Hunt.

Hunt denied the accusation, with Craig Sanderson also backing his claim. Sanderson said that he was responsible for the referendum and that it was put together during an open meeting.

During the meeting, Eliot Sherman, though he said he favored the construction, attacked it on the grounds that it was an administrative rather than student decision. He later asked that a quorum count be made, but it was denied due to his not being an assembly member. A quorum (they were 4 short) was finally established after a fifteen minute recess and the vote decided in ten minutes. (An assemblyman asked for the quorum count).

Hunt took the blame for the decision authorizing the project, but he would not say that the students had no say whatsoever. He said, "The Southwest Assembly originated the proposal for an indoor facility (not the present assembly)."

Hunt took the blame for the decision authorizing the project, but he would not say that the students had no say what

He said that he took the decision himself on the site, but that the students had asked for a winter recreational area. Hunt said that he had only five days to decide, as the contractor notified him that the project could be completed for this winter, if it was started this week.

Hunt said, "It is not possible for students to run the place (due to the number of decisions each day that need to be decided in Southwest), but they should be able to be in on the policy making, so that their interests will be listened to."

Frank Campbell, who cited the apathetic response to the referendum, said, "The black community (of SW) has almost unanimous support for the facility. If it does not go in, then we are being neglected." He noted the crowded conditions of Boyden gym during the recreation period and said that a petition was circulating for support.

The major argument of the opponents of the referendum, was that the construction was begun without student knowledge and/or support. The project was okayed by John Hunt, without the current SW Assembly vote. It is being built with Building Authority funds so it must be built on land controlled by the Building Authority. The horseshoe, which is the last grassy area left in Southwest, is the only possibility open. (The fields across from Southwest are controlled by another authority).

The four volunteers who will present the results to Vice-Chancellors Gage and Campion are: Craig Sanderson and Frank Campbell in support of the project, and Ken Nyman and Linda Berg opposed.

Dr. Frederick Preston, newly appointed Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. Preston Sees "Evolving Job"

By A.J. BASTARACHE

Dr. Frederick Preston, recently appointed as Special Assistant to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, is in the enviable but somewhat dangerous position in which he creates examples rather than follows them.

Commenting on the Student Affairs Office and his own position during an MDC interview, Preston says, "The job is still evolving. I think the majority of schools in the country still operate on the 'Dean of Students' system."

Preston says the Student Affairs Office has a responsibility for the development of the human life of students outside the classroom, and, under the direction of Vice Chancellor Robert Gage, it is more overtly represenative of student needs.

A memo from Gage introducing Preston to Area Directors and Department Heads states that Preston's primary responsibilities are in the area of long-range planning, service and staff evaluation, implementation of affirmative action policy, and coordination of units under Human Service.

Preston says his long-range planning involves "trying to come up with an optimal process for student involvement in the total structure" and would work with student-generated organizations "to close the gap between what we do have and the ideal."

Preston mentions the Campus Security Police as an example of his review of Human Services, saying he's trying to promote a view of the totality of the situation"--students must look at the problems of the security forces just as the security forces must look at the problems of the students."

Admissions by minority groups have increased at UMass, and Preston remains in contact with the varied spheres of student society.

He is enthusiastic about the awareness of students concerning minority needs. When questioned about this semester's Student Senate vote allocating 15 seats for Third World representation, he wouldn't comment on the efficacy of the measure, but says, "...how to increase the participation of minorities in the senate wasn't even an issue here two years ago."

Aside from his duties as Special Assistant, Preston teaches several courses at UMass, including Race Relations and Strength Training for Beginning Teachers, and serves as Associate Director of the Office of Community Development and Human Relations.

Preston earned his B.S. in Business Administration at the University of Hartford and received his doctorate in education at the University of Massachusetts in 1971.

Women's Dispute Hits WFCR

By SHELLEY LAUZON

The recent controversy over WFCR's decision not to broadcast "The Women's Hour" and charges of discrimination against women concerning salaries paid to station employees may be resolved with the creation of a full-time paid position within the university for a feminist to direct women's programming.

University Director of Public Affairs Daniel Melley has approached the chancellor and has asked for creation of the paid position. The results of that meeting, held yesterday, have not been revealed.

The WFCR Advisory Board will hold a meeting on November 10 at Hampshire College to discuss "the Women's Hour" and women's programming. Barbara Patterson, a station producer and co-producer of the show, believes that strong support at the meeting for the paid position and for women's programming is essential.

"Concerned people should approach board members and let their feelings be known. We are a public radio station and an alternative media, and as such we should be dedicated to providing something which is different," she said.

"The Women's Hour" began regular broadcasts in April, with Ms. Patterson and Elaine Prostak producing the program on a completely voluntary basis. Ms. Patterson claims she was told at the beginning that there was "a good chance" for funding, but continued the program on the grounds money might be forthcoming and because the program was "really important and necessary" for the community. As time went on, the job became too much to handle, although community people volunteered time and service.

Voluntary Basis

"Having something on a voluntary basis is like saying its dispensible," she said. "I couldn't produce the program physically. My work load was approximately 60 hours a week and I couldn't handle the volunteer work. Elaine left in August, and I had her job plus additional responsibilities.

People were reminded that money was needed, and Ms. Patterson told General Manager Godwin Oyewole she could not produce the show unless someone funded it, paid a person to do it, or reallocated the work load to allow station personnel time to do it.

"If we hadn't felt we might get funds, we wouldn't have done the show in the first place," Ms. Patterson said.

The program's last broadcast was September 28. A live discussion between 3 women and Oyewole and on-the-air questions concerning the situation revealed that about half of the people complaining about the program's end were men who telephoned after the broadcast or sent letters to the station.

In March, the station held a month-long fund-raisihg drive and collected nearly $39,000, according to Oyewole. Ms. Patterson claims that approximately $400 was pledged or collected specifically for "The Women's Hour", but the money was put into a general fund, a regular station practice.

Former station General Manager Charles Keenan said that the station needed this money for operating expenses and could not return the money to the program. Ms. Patterson said she felt compelled to tell contributors "in good faith" where their money went; she told people who asked her personally and "is confident something will be worked out."

Women's Show?

Mr. Oyewole announced in a station bulletin that a women's program would be initiated in December, most likely on a volunteer basis. Ms. Patterson says she is extremely doubtful such a program will exist, as no plans have been made to date and no one has volunteered. Oyewole himself said he was "doubtful at this point about a women's show" because women will not volunteer.

Charges of discrimination in salaries resulted when several people asked to see station files. Ms. Patterson claims Oyewole said such information was public, yet he refused to tell her when she asked all station peronnel their salary for a study on women in broadcasting. She will not reveal these figures until she consults a lawyer about the legalities.

Oyewole, on the other hand, claims that salary files are not public information. He said a severe budget cut has made it impossible to pay another person.

"If you are here, you get paid. If you are on the payroll, you get paid. At this time I cannot hire anyone to do a women's program," he said.

Oyewole said he would have put a women's program on the air some time ago, but he was not station manager at the time. He will work, however, to get a women to direct women's programming, and added that WFCR should carry such programs.

"This is the type of program WFCR should definitely broadcast. For equal jobs there should be equal pay also," he said.

Funding

Funding is the key problem at this point. The Lucy Spright Fund, a sum of $40,000 donated by a woman very involved in women's rights, was mentioned as a possible source of money to fund the women's position.

Oyewole said this money was tied up in litigation and is used as collateral by the station to borrow money from time to time. Federal and state funding is difficult to obtain, he claimed, noting that federal money is earmarked for equipment. Any applications for grants must state a specific goal, and there are no programs as such for cash.

Listeners, estimated at 50,000, contribute money to the station, Underwriters sometimes donate funds, as does the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. The station's main funding, however, comes from the university budget, with "very minimal" grants from the other 4 colleges, according to Ms. Patterson.

At the present time, WFCR employs 9 full-time men, 3 full-time women, 6 part-time men and 2 part-time women, 5 men volunteers and 2 women volunteers. Another part-time position for a woman was created in the last 2 weeks, according to Ms. Patterson.

Barbara Patterson believes the whole controversy began with "The Women's Hour", and is now a question of WFCR priorities and general philosophy.

"I feel like a scapegoat. People are attempting to make an oversimplification of the whole issue. I have heard rumors of how terrible I am, of being an agitator and going over Godwin's head," she said.

Concerning the future, she feels that "all the discrepancies will eventually be cleared up."

Ladd Hits Sarge's Education Plan

Senator Ernest M. Buck, on the left, proposed continuation of the Modular Curriculum program for another year. Senator Ellis Olim, on the right, proposed that it be delayed at yesterday's faculty-senate

By JIM DEMPSEY

Student Senate President Larry Ladd lashed out yesterday at Governor Francis Sargent's recent report on educational reform, calling it "little more than a shallow mockery of serious educational reform proposals."

Ladd's comments came in a prepared address before the Faculty Senate. His remarks were made in reference to Sargent's White Paper on educational reform entitled "A Great and Thorough Change."

In other business yesterday, the Senate granted the Modular Curriculum program of the School of Ed one more trial year.

Ladd said Sargent's proposals only "skim the surface" of important educational ideas and issues.

He feels that the Governor has failed to realize that education is a complex art with no simple formulas to guide it and no easy solutions to its problems.

One of Sargent's major objectives is to maintain the higher education budget at its present level, allowing for little or no increase in expenditures. Ladd agreed that it is sound public policy for the Governor and the legislature to balance state priorities and set a limit on expenditures for education.

Another of the Governor's goals is to re-organize the structure of education by establishing a single, centralized governing board, which would rule over either all the college campuses in Massachusetts or all public education from kindergarten to graduate school.

Ladd feels that such a situation would create many new problems. He compared the proposed reorganization to the present trustee structure.

There are two main problems with this structure: the Trustees' unwillingness to delegate their authority to the campus level; and the lack of contact the Trustees have with the campuses, leaving them unable to make sensitive, informed judgments. Ladd fears this could also happen with only one central governing board.

In other business, a motion to deny the Completely Modular Curriculum Plan program of the School of Education an additional year of life was defeated.

The motion, introduced by Senator Ellis Olim, would have suspended the experimental program until an evaluation of its success to date could be undertaken. Then recommendations for its adoption or non-adoption by the School of Education and its adoption or non-adoption by the entire University would be submitted.

As a result of the defeat of the motion the program will be continued for one more year on a trial basis will be monitored by the Provost's office during this time and an evaluation will be made at the end of the year.

The modular credit curriculum would alter the old concept of fitting the learning experience into a rigid schedule. It would give faculty members the option to judge what was the appropriate length of time for a certain course, that is, the number of credit hours.

Olim felt that the entire University should have the right to partcipate in this program, not just the School of Education. For this reason he wanted to postpone its continuance as a strictly School of Education program and evaluate it, to find out what the implications would be on a University-wide scale.

Olim also wanted to determine through such an evaluation exactly what the best way would be to administer such a program.

Chairman of the Academic Matters Committee Ernest Buck answered him by saying that "If we see that this program is something the entire University should be participating in, we'll come back and recommend that the Senate approve it for the entire University."

He added that the details for implementing the program have been worked out between the School of Education and the Provost's Office.

Chairman Buck assured him that efforts to minimize such conflicts are now being made. He said that certain courses will in the future be offered during the late afternoon, yearly evening hours.

Olim's motion to delay the program for immediate evaluation, was narrowly defeated by a 26-24 margin.

Action Is Looking For Students

By AVIS YUNI

The University Year for Action (UYA), a federally organized program with a UMass branch which places student volunteers in jobs where they can serve the public, is holding a recruitment drive tonight at 7:30 P.M. in rooms 174-176 of the Campus Center.

Another drive will be held at 7:30 P.M. on Tuesday, in room 203 of Morrill Hall. At this drive the applicants for the program will be given some orientation by some of the staff members and volunteers in the program.

Students recruited at these drives will work under Phase IV of the program. Since the program lasts a full year, they will begin with the Spring semester, January 1973 and end in January 1974, after the Fall semester, serving low income communities in western Massachusetts from Springfield in the south to North Adams in Berkshire County.

Each participant in UYA will receive a $230 monthly stipend before taxes and a $600 readjustment allowance at the end of the year if he/she completes his/her year in the program.

Dr. Ruth Burgin, the UMass UYA Director, explained expectations of the agencies the students would work for will be explained, since they will be identified as full-time staff members and not as students when they work.

The requirements the University has set up for students in the UYA--an academic program-- will be discussed at the meetings. Those in it must earn no less than 30 credit hours during their year-- 12 credit hours per semester and 6 during the summer. These are earned by taking field related course work.

The courses are offered through the College of Arts and Sciences (CAS), are lecture type courses and worth 12 credits each. Listed as sections A-G under CAS course #391, they are Problems in Mental Health, Correctional Services, Journalism, Legal Services, Juvenile Delinquency, Hospital Schooling, and in Alternative Schooling.

Students who are not in CAS must arrange to take independent studies in their desired course area through contractional arrangements with faculty members through their major department. If they are taking it as an elective in another department they must arrange the studies with that department. If a student wishes to work in area not covered by any of the courses offered, he must arrange his own independent studies, Dr. Burgin said.

Juniors, Seniors and Graduate students may apply for admission to the program since they have usually finished the core requirements of the University. To be admitted, a student needs the approval of the Dean, his faculty advisor and the Department Head of his major.

The program is concerned with admitting students who are doing very well in their school work, Dr. Burgin explained and very few applicants do not receive approval.

She stated that she believes the program to be "really good" because they receive very good response from students. Dr. Burgin hopes that they can get a larger grant for it since they are not able to place in jobs half of those who apply.

The UMass UYA program operates under the auspices of the Provost's office, and is an administration program, Dr. Burgin cited as the largest program of its kind in the country. It has had 158 people take part in the program since its start in September 1971. Of these 104 are presently in the program, and Dr. Burgin expects to place an additional 30 or 40 students for Phase IV.

UMass and ACTION have worked out the requirements for students in the program. ACTION is a new agency in Washington that serves as a coordinating agency for the Peace Corps, VISTA, Foster Parents, two Groups of Retired Executives, and UYA.

In regard to new UYA programs for next year, Dr. Burgin says there will certainly be new ones in the area of legal studies, and probably some in Journalism. Students may also work in new programs at Friendly House in Worcester and Belchertown.

Dr. Burgin expressed that the UYA program has received excellent co-operation from the various departments and faculty members.

Nixon Plans Shake-up

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) — As the first of hundreds of standby resignations reached his desk, President Nixon worked yesterday on his executive branch shakeup.

His aim is to squeeze the fat out of the bureaucracy while making it more efficient in his second term.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon conferred with key aides at his bayfront compound and spent some time alone "thinking through in a more intensive way than he has before" the methods of reshaping his second administration.

Within hours after his re-election, Nixon instructed all his appointees to turn in pro forma resignations. Offers to resign traditionally follow a president's re-election, but seldom if ever has tradition been underscored by a White House announcement of the fact.

Ziegler said Nixon's instructions apply also to officials appointed by department heads of Cabinet members. There are hundreds - perhaps several thousand - of such political appointees.

The President wanted to "clear the slate" so he could have "a free hand to form his second term administration through appointment and reappointment," Ziegler said.

The first of the letters of resignation already have reached Nixon's desk, but the spokesman said "the President has made no decision on who will stay and who will leave."

He said the process of drafting reorganization plans will continue through late November and early December with meetings with individual Cabinet members.

Nixon will renew his proposals for congressional action to reshape Cabinet agencies by merging some operations, but there are indications he also may attempt to use executive orders to accomplish some of the changes he previously asked Congress to make.

Ziegler confirmed that the President asked for and received a special study by the Office of Management and Budget on the extent of his exeuctive powers to reorganize the government.

He would not disclose the report's findings, nor talk specifically about the shape of the coming shakeup. But he said the objective was to "look for better ways to do things," to find more efficient methods and "where possible cut some of the fat out of government."

Nixon himself also discussed his goals in an interview published yesterday by the Washington Star-News. "I honestly believe that government in Washington is too big and it is too expensive," he asserted as he said there would be an effort to reduce the number of federal workers.

The thinning-out, Nixon said, "is going to cut across the board, including the White House staff. No agencies are going to be exempt in this respect."

One of the White House aides Nixon conferred with yesterday was domestic adviser John Ehrlichman, who said in an interview that the President is getting deeply involved in federal management problems.

Kenya Yields Oldest Skull

LONDON (AP) — A skull at least 2.6 million years old is cited as evidence that man's birthday was at least a million and a half years earlier than generally believed.

The findings by Richard Leakey, a scientist from Kenya, were announced simultaneously yesterday by the National Geographic Society in Washington and by Leakey at a scientific meeting at the London Zoo.

At a news conference afterward, Leakey added some details about his fossil evidence, which could upset theories about the evolution of man.

The official announcement spoke of the fossils as 2-1/2 million years old, but Leakey told newsmen the skull was "more than 2.6 million years old, although how much older we cannot at the moment tell."

Along with the skull, Leakey found human leg bones from two other individuals of similar antiquity. He told newsmen the early man was probably about five feet tall but he could not say if he had fur or not.

Leakey, administrative director of the National Museum of Kenya, brought a model of the fragmented skull with him, but he said the actual skull and bones would never leave Kenya.

The same, he theorized, was not true of early man himself. He said his findings convinced him that "man walked from Africa out to all the other continents."

Much of the evidence that early man flourished in Africa came from Leakey's parents, Dr. Mary Leakey and the late Dr. Louis S. B. Leakey. Leakey, 28, learned anthropology from his father.

The new evidence of early man was found in a desert east of Lake Rudolf in Kenya in August. The discovery is so new that the creature has not been named - just numbered, No. 1470.

Leakey said the earliest previous evidence of man as an erect, large-brained creature was homo erectus dated about one million years old.

Both Viet Sides Stockpiling Arms

SAIGON (AP) — Thirty U.S. B52 bombers swept along North Vietnam's coastline Friday, attacking supply depots within 65 miles of the 20th parallel in the deppest B52 raids since last April.

A bombing curtailment remained in effect above the 20th parallel, which is roughly 75 miles south of Hanoi and 200 miles north of the demilitarized zone dividing North and South Vietnam.

The Stratofortresses dropped about 900 tons of bombs on supply depots at points 60 miles southwest of Thanh Hoa, 35 miles northwest of Vinh, 17 miles northwest of Dong Hoi, and 25 miles southeast of Dong Hoi, the U.S. Command reported.

Senior U.S. officials said the targets were major storage areas and resupply depots for North Vietnamese forces in South Vietnam.

They said North Vietnam was making a major effort to resupply its forces in the South and the B52 bombers were trying to block that effort. It was the eighth successive day of heavy B52 raids on both sides of the demilitarized zone.

Ground fighting simmered in South Vietnam yesterday while both warring sides stock-piled armaments they will not need if peace comes to Indochina. The proposed cease-fire would prohibit introduction of additional weapons.

Another score of U.S. transport planes landed at Saigon with hundreds of tons of war supplies.

A few miles away, imported American technicians assembled F5 jet fighter-bombers in the crash program to build up South Vietnam's air force.

The B52 Stratofortresses dropped more than 2,000 tons of bombs in a 40-by-130-mile area between the South Vietnamese Quang Tri front and the middle of North Vietnam's panhandle.

The raids culminated a week of intensified strikes that informants said are in reaction to many new sightings of North Vietnamese trucks, tanks and artillery pieces around and above the northern battle area.

Senior U.S. officials in Saigon said strike planes freed by the recent restrictions on raids in North Vietnam were being employed elsewhere. They reported air efforts had been doubled in northern Laos, where North Vietnam is pushing its annual dry-season offensive.

Syrian Jets Downed in Israeli Air Raid

TEL AVIV (AP) — Israeli warplanes swept across the Syrian frontier twice yesterday downed two Syrian jet fighters, destroyed a Soviet SAM anti-aircraft missile battery and bombed artillery concentrations, the military command said.

The Israelis said all their planes returned safely but Syrian communiques over Damascus radio claimed four Israeli planes were shot down.

A senior officer of the Israeli general staff described the fightings as some of the heaviest on the Syrian border in more than two years.

He said Syrian artillery pumped thousands of shells into Israeli army and civilian settlements along a 25-mile front, wounding two civilians and one soldier.

The senior officer described the Syrian targets hit as one SAM missile site surrounded by anti-aircraft batteries, four Syrian army forward positions and a number of artillery concentrations along the frontier.

Israeli planes struck first at two guerrilla bases along the cease-fire line in the northern sector of the Golan Heights in retaliation for recent guerrilla attacks against Israel, the military command said in Tel Aviv.

Damascus radio reported one soldier was killed and two were wounded.

Environmental Agency Vetos State Pollution Exemptions

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Environmental Protection Agency said yesterday that states seeking authority to issue waste discharge permits may not allow any exemptions, as some now do.

Under new clean-water legislation, the states can take over the issuance and enforcement of discharge permits to protect water quality, a program now under federal operation.

But the state programs are subject the approval by EPA.

The agency issued proposed guidelines, spelling out what it will require in a state program before it will grant this approval.

It allowed 30 days for written comment but said it had no plans for public hearings.

Under the proposed guidelines, state programs in order to win federal approval, must:

—Include public participation in permit processing.

—Prohibit discharge of highly radioactive, chemically toxic, and biological warfare materials.

—Set clean-up schedules with deadline no later than July 1, 1977.

—Require big dischargers to monitor and report their discharges.

—Contain enforcement authority capable of seeking both civil and criminal fines against violators of permit conditions.

—Bar from the membership of permit-review boards anyone drawing substantial income from permit holders or applicants.

The new clean-water law, passed by Congress over presidential veto, provides a new legal basis for the federal permit program previously based on an 1899 law and stymied by adverse court decisions.

The aim of the program has been to control pollution by regulating industrial and municipal waste discharges to streams and lakes, using the terms of discharge permits as the control mechanism.

The proposed EPA guidelines for approving state-run permit programs would require many states to adopt new legislation of their own.

Daley's Machine Winding Down Slowly

BRUNSWICK, GA.--The sun rises over the Sidney Lanier Bridge where it is believed 10 to 12 vehicles went into the Brunswick River after the African Neptune hit bridge Tuesday night destroying three spans. Five are known dead. (AP)

CHICAGO (AP)-The last of the old-style big-city political organizations is not dead. But it's declining slowly under the wave of a better-educated electorate that is not blindly loyal to the party.

Like the primary election in March, Tuesday's election showed clearly that to win in Chicago and in Illinois, a Democratic candidate needs more than just the endorsement of Mayor Richard J. Daley. But it also showed that given the right candidate, the organization can still be effective.

Consider these contrasting results:

—Sen. George S. McGovern, the Democratic presidential candidate, carried Chicago by 170,000 votes-not nearly the margin a Democratic candidate needs to carry Illinois; but not bad considering McGovern's showing nationwide and the resentment against him by Chicago Democrats who still were upset at their delegation's removal from the Democratic National Convention.

—Daniel Walker, the Democrat who was elected governor, beat the organization in the primary and had its lukewarm support in the general election. He carried the city by slightly more than McGovern, was beaten soundly in the suburbs, but made up for that by running almost even downstate.

—A near-sweep by Democratic candidates at the patronage-rich bottom of the Democratic ticket, where straight-ticket voting showed up most obviously. Despite heavy Republican margin in the suburbs, the Democrats elected a circuit court clerk, a coroner, a recorder of deeds and two of the three sanitary district trustees.

But the most significant trend was the defection of large numbers of blacks, heretofore the most faithful of organization voters, to Republican Sen. Charles H. Percy and Bernard Carey, the Republican-elected state's attorney.

Carey's victory over Edward V. Hanrahan, the controversial Democratic incumbent, is the most evident harbinger.

Hanrahan, who was under indictment on charges stemming from a 1969 raid on a West Side apartment in which two Black Panthers were killed, was slated by the organization for re-election last December, then dropped after blacks and liberals protested.

But Hanrahan won a three-way race in the Democratic primary, was embraced by Daley, and appeared to be the favorite after a judge dismissed the charges against him. Among the reasons, political experts said, was that blacks would vote a straight Democratic ticket despite their dislike of Hanrahan.

When the returns were in, however, Hanrahan had lost by 130,000 votes and the principal reason was Chicago's black population.

An early analysis of the returns in the city's 15 heavily black wards showed that McGovern got 91 per cent of the vote there and Walker, the successful Democratic candidate for governor, got 83 per cent. Democrats at the bottom of the ticket also did well there.

But Percy, running against antibusing Democrat Rep. Roman C. Pucinski, carried the 15 wards by 1,200 votes and Carey got 62 per cent of the vote there. If Hanrahan had done only as well as Walker, who got the normal Democratic vote, he could have been re-elected easily.

To a lesser extent, the ticket-splitting pattern showed up in the vote for president.

Despite weekly campaign trips here and Daley's strong, if belated endorsement, McGovern lost a number of blue-and white-collar wards that usually go Democratic. And he won narrowly in others.

What most Chicago politicians now agree this means is that fewer voters than before will blindly pull that lever that allows them to vote a straight Democratic ticket from president down to sanitary district trustees.

"What's happening in Chicago is what happened earlier in most other cities," says one Democrat. "People are looking more at the candidate, not his party affiliation."

Nonetheless, nobody envisions the organization crumbling.

Democrats Rich Losers

WASHINGTON (AP)-One of the brighter legacies George McGovern is leaving the Democratic party from his disastrous presidential campaign is the best financial shape the party has found itself in years.

Despite the trouble McGovern had getting votes, he proved amazingly adroit at bringing in money. His campaign is expected to end up with some $20 million raised, compared to the $8 million Hubert Humphrey collected four years ago.

McGovern's managers have said they expect to be in the black when the final tally is made. This is a far cry from the $9 million debt the party wound up with in 1968.

The 1968 debt included some bills of candidates who lost to Humphrey in the nomination race, but even if the party takes on some of the primary bills this time, they won't be as high as they were last time.

The party raised $2.5 million from the telethon staged during the Democratic National Convention last July. Another slice of the debt was settled by persuading various creditors to accept payment of 25 cents on the dollar.

Now party officials hope to have their debt down to under $4 million by the end of this year.

Meanwhile, the Democratic National Committee operates on a $1 million annual budget which officials say is being maintained on a pay-as-you-go basis.

The key to the future is direct-mail fund raising, which the party already had been experimenting with and which McGovern raised to undreamed-of success.

In 1970 the national committee had about 13,000 names on its direct-mail solicitation lists. By 1972 it had 70,000 names. But the telethon added another 300,000.

In addition to that, McGovern has gathered some 400,000 names on the lists which largely financed his campaign. Assuming that the party will fall heir to these, it could start 1973 with a pool of one million potential contributors.

After the 1964 Republican election defeat, the GOP inherited a 150,000-name list from Barry Goldwater and built it into a mailing program which raises an estimated 80 per cent of its budget.

Morris Dees, the Alabama direct-mail whiz who managed McGovern's mail order solicitation, estimates that the Democrats can easily take in $5 million a year with the kind of list they are now building.

With that kind of money the Democrats could conceivably pay off their four-year-old fiscal albatross in another year, although more realistically their planners think it will take two.

Voters OK Pollution Spending

Voters in half a dozen states demonstrated concern about their land, water and air and in some instances approved spending large sums of money to back it up.

California approved a proposition designed to protect the state's 1,087-mile coastline from overdevelopment.

Its passage in Tuesday's election is proof that the public is concerned with environment, said one backer, state assemblyman Alan Sieroty, a Democrat from Los Angeles.

New York approved a $1.15-billion bond issue for cleaner air and water.

It was "a clear signal...that environmental quality is a high priority with the American voter even when his pocketbook is at stake," New York state Environmental Commissioner Henry L. Diamond said.

Environmental issues also were on Tuesday's ballots in Colorado, Florida, North Carolina and Washington state, and in all cases, the side of the environmentalists prevailed.

In Florida, $240 million was involved when voters authorized the state to borrow that much to buy parks and environmentally endangered lands.

Peace Talks Continue Amid U.S. Optimism

PARIS (AP) - The U.S. delegation at the Vietnam peace talks expressed renewed optimism yesterday that peace was near despite another fruitless session at the conference table.

This optimism was reflected neither by the Communist side nor by the Saigon delegation. The three-hour 166th weekly session brought sharp recriminations between the opposing Vietnamese delgates. The U.S. delegation exuded confidence and avoided the polemics.

The U.S. delegation spokesman, David Lambertson, told newsmen at the end of the session: "I am optimistic that an additional private meeting is going to take place relatively soon, that the matters still unresolved will be taken care of."

UMass students have been working at decorating a number of storefronts in downtown Amherst, such as this one. The students are from a creative display course.

Fashion Mkg. Majors Improve Shop Displays

By JANE MACONE

If some of the shop windows downtown Amherst have had a fresh and lively look these past three weeks, it's thanks to some hard-working Fashion Marketing majors from the University of Massachusetts. These senior students are enrolled in a special course in visual techniques.

C&ID 273 is a creative display course now in its fifth year. It is designed primarily for students in Fashion Merchandising and related courses.

It provides a basic knowledge of the techniques of interior window display.

At mid semester the students go into the community and put in displays. The program runs for three weeks.

The course was designed by Dr. Paston, Associate Professor of Art and Design, to meet the special needs of these students who are about to leave Amherst for 8 weeks of retail field experiences in Hartford, Boston and New York City.

The stores being done this year are: Ann August, Browns, Thompsons and Cliff Allen.

New Legislative Diverse

BOSTON(AP)-The new Massachusetts Legislature, with more than a quarter of its members new to their jobs, appears to be more diverse--and possibly more conservative--than the one it replaces.

It will have more Democrats than any legislature in the state's history, and probably more women, Independents, and black members. Yet--in a session that will spend most of its time wrestling with reorganization of a nearly bankrupt state government--at least one leader sees the new General Court moving toward conservatism.

"I think the trend is to make it more conservative, not more liberal," House Speaker David M. Bartley said Wednesday. "Most of the conservatives were overwhelmingly returned to the House.

"People are frightened by a $2 billion state budget," Bartley added.

With some races in both Senate and House subject to change with recounts, the party lineup in the legislature appears to leave Democrats even more firmly in control of both branches than they were before.

There will be 186 Democrats, 52 Republicans and two Independents in the House, and 33 Democrats and seven Republicans in the Senate. That's a loss of 10 GOP seats in the House and three in the Senate. And not since Chandler H. Stevens of Bedford left the House in 1968 to run unsuccessfully for Congress has there been even one Independent in the legislature.

The Independents are William Saltzman, a conservative New Bedford city councilor who had Republican backing, and Terrence P. McCarthy, who unseated Republican Rep. Gregory Mayhew for the lone Martha's Vineyard seat.

It also appeared there will be a record number of women legislators--two in the Senate and nine in the House. And there will be five black legislators, an increase of two. All are Boston representatives and one is a woman--Mrs. Doris B. Bunte, a Boston Housing Authority board member.

Exactly a quarter of the new legislators have never served on Beacon Hill before and six of the 10 new senators will have to learn new procedures and traditions. They're current representatives who won promotions to the Senate-a shift that brings no extra pay but is regarded as a step up the political ladder.

Democrats Strong In Congress

BOSTON (AP)-With the outcome of one Massachusetts race still shadowed by the possibility of a recount, Democrats hold a strong edge in the state's 12-man Congressional delegation.

And with seven Democratic incumbents moving up the seniority ladder--one possibly into the second spot in the House leadership - Massachusetts congressmen will play a major role in the Democratic control of the House.

Still in doubt is the outcome of the race for the 12th District seat vacated by Republican Rep. Hastings Keith. When late, unofficial returns were tallied Democrat Gerry E. Studds held a margin of slightly more than 1,200 votes over Republican William D. Weeks.

If Studds wins, the state's delegation will include nine Democrats and three Republicans. It has been 8 and 4 for several years.

And Rep. Thomas P. Tip O'Neill Jr., of Cambridge, now majority whip in the House, could move into the second spot in the leadership to replace Louisiana Rep. Hale Boggs.

Though re-elected, Boggs has been missing for several weeks, since the airplane in which he was a passenger disappeared on a flight in Alaska.

Other ranking committee members in the state's delegation include 11th District Rep. James A. Burke, on the Ways and Means Committee, 2nd District Rep. Edward P. Boland, on the Appropriations Committee, 3rd District Rep. Harold D. Donohue, on the Judiciary Committee, and 7th District Rep. Torbert H. MacDonald, on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

While all of the state's forthcoming delegation--including the Republicans--are regarded as generally liberal, Studds, if elected, is expected to join incumbent Reps. Robert F. Drinan and Michael J. Harrington on the liberal edge of the delegation.

Studds, who narrowly lost to Keith two years ago, has spent much of the past two years continuing to campaign. He has maintained an active organization and fulfilled a campaign promise to learn Portuguese-- the tongue of a substantial ethnic bloc in Southeastern Massachusetts.

In his campaign against Weeks--who lost a primary fight to Keith in 1970--Studds stressed issues such as a national health care program. And he accused Weeks of urging voters to be "selfish"-- to support a candidate pledging principally service to his constituents.

Ironically both Harrington and Drinan in the closing days of their campaign both stressed service to constituents more than issues. Harrington ran a series of radio advertisements consisting of testimonials to his willingness to help individuals with their problems.

Much the same approach apparently helped Paul W. Cronin keep the 5th District in Republican control a district that has not sent a Democrat to Congress this century. Cronin built his campaign against John F. Kerry on a promise to continue constituent service of the kind practiced by former Rep. F. Bradford Morse, the Republican incumbent who resigned in April to join the United Nations staff.

Cronin, a former state representative who had served as an aide to Morse, promised to continue Morse's policy of seeing to it that constituents' letters were answered the same day and that individual problems were soon solved.

Like Cronin, the state's two incumbent Republican Congressmen bucked the state's Democratic tradition to keep their seats in GOP hands. Their past successes left Reps. Silvio O. Conte of the 1st District and Margaret M. Heckler of the 10th without any Democratic opposition at all.

Conte is so popular in his northwestern Massachusetts district that he has twice been endorsed for re-election by the Democratic party and has had virtually no opposition in the past 10 years.

Mrs. Heckler, who took her seat from the late former Speaker Joseph Martin, had Democratic opposition in two subsequent campaigns but none this year.

GOP Blasts Student Vote

Amherst area Republicans have critized the right of students to vote in college communities after their poor showing in the Tuesday election.

Rep. Louis Morini, who won a re-election fight to be the only victorious Republican in Hampshire County, said he intended to file legislation to repeal the ruling allowing students to vote in college towns.

"The vote of the colleges is the worst thing that's ever happened," Morini charged, adding that students were so difficult to keep track of that they could probably vote twice. "Let them vote, that's okay with me, but let them vote in their own communities, not here."

He specifically referred to the defeat of Republican incumbent Senator John Barrus (R—Goshen) by Rep. John Olver in the Franklin-Hampshire District.

Barrus was quoted in a Wednesday interview as saying he would "welcome" any change Morini could bring in the college student voting.

"In a practical sense, they are very temporary in a community, and have no reason for voting in it," he said. "I thought at the time it was a very strange ruling by the Attorney-General."

The poor Republican showing might also discourage Republicans for running for office in the future, Morini said.

"I think that it's next to impossible for a Republican to win a county office," Barrus said. "I think it's getting to the point where you will see offices go uncontested."

"Why should you spend your time and money trying to do something you can't do?" he said.

Local Democrats backed the present college voting ruling, and said the Republicans themselves were to blame.

"There's not been much of a move by the Republicans to compete in the broad spectrum on the people of the Commonwealth," said Senator-elect Olver, a Democrat.

"They've got to get moving into the central spectrum," he added, "or they don't deserve to win. With no movement to change, with no-lip-service even to change, they're going to get wiped out."

Another Democrat who won a representative seat in the Second Hamp. District James Collins, said Massachusetts was still a strong two-party state because "the governship acts as a Republican check."

Olver defended the students voting in their college communities, saying "College students these days leave their homes, go to college, and never return home."

"It may be a transient type thing," he continued, "but that's the character of the whole population."

Nantucket: Thar She Blows!

EDITOR'S NOTE: - Millionaire Walter Beinecke has bought up huge chunks of Nantucket Island and remodeled them into his idea of what the once thriving little whaling port looked like in the 19th century. It has helped the economy, say some. Others feel it looks like Disneyland.

By DANIEL Q. HANEY and HOWARD WHITE

NANTUCKET, Mass. (AP) - Nantucket Island, port of the Pequod in Herman Melville's "Moby Dick" and the center of New England's thriving 19th century whaling business, gradually is being remodeled according to the historical perspective of a controversial millionaire landlord.

Walter Beinecke, a summer resident of the island 30 miles off the Massachusetts coast, has spent millions during the past 10 years reshaping the scenic seaport; drawing the ire of some residents who see the result as a Hollywood-style scenario, but gaining support from those who believe he is preserving history.

The island resembled many New England seaports a decade ago. The harbor shores were dotted with an ice factory, gas stations, a lumber yard, rusting fuel tanks and decayed shacks.

Since Beinecke's arrival, rusting anchors have replaced the tanks. Long wharves have been lined with quaint green-shingled shops, and cobblestones now dot the waterfront of the 200 year-old whaling port.

Beinecke has bought up large parcels of the downtown area and virtually all the wharf, transforming it into what he thinks a New England seaport should be.

In the process he has raised rents and written into leases which products may be sold and what decor may be maintained. He has terminated several leases and has come to own what is estimated to be as much as $19 million worth of island property. His holdings include 155 buildings.

Beinecke's purpose, he says, is to protect the island from the developers who have taken over much of nearby Cape Cod and turned it into honkytonk strips of motels, gas stations and fast food stands.

To save the island he's buying it. So far, according to tax records, 8 per cent of the assessed value of the island has been purchased, and most of that is in the small downtown business section.

Beinecke refuses to say just what percentage of the commercial property he controls, but estimates range up to 80 per cent, and he admits being the single largest commercial land holder.

The property is in the names of three companies - Herburne Associates, Island Service Co. and Nantucket Historical Trust.

The assessed value of the company's total holdings, according to the tax records, is $1.9 million. But on inflation ridden Nantucket, where choice one-acre lots sell for about $40,000, the tax assessor says the market value of the property is 4 to 10 times the assessed value. That would make Beinecke's property valued at between $7.6 million and $19 million.

Beinecke, 55, is a former president of Executive Airlines, originator of Christmas Clubs and owner of radio stations. He's also a member of the family that controls Sperry and Hutchinson, the Green Stamp company.

His power over what the town looks like and who does business there makes Beinecke an extremely important man to the island's 4,000 year-round residents.

Nantucket - the island and its only village have the same name - has a single industry, selling things to the tourists who make the $10 round-trip across Nantucket Sound aboard ferries of the Woods Hole, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket Steamship Authority.

The island's main attraction is its appearance. It has stately old homes, a cobblestoned Main Street and neat wooden shops. There are no neon signs, billboard or other commercial garishness.

Much of it looks the way it did in the early 1800s, when the whaling industry was in its heyday.

Keeping it that way is a concern of many island residents.

Whether Beinecke is doing that makes him a source of controversy.

Beinecke's other reason for buying Nantucket land - to make money - also causes concern among the islanders, particularly his tenants. Rents are going up, sometimes drastically, and some say they are afraid the traditional arts and crafts shops will be taken over by fashionable Fifth Avenue clothing chains that can pay the rent.

Many residents seem to agree that Beinecke's development has bolstered the town's economy, but some question the aesthetics of the rebuilt waterfront.

"It looks like Disneyland with a quohog large clam tied to its tail," said one shopkeeper, who, like most islanders, asked not to be identified.

"I think there could have been superior architectural planning," he said. "A lot of people think it's authentic, and it isn't. It's a near miss."

Beinecke bought and tore down the ramshackle ice factory, lumber yards, gas stations, coal bins, fuel tanks, fishermen's shacks and other dilapidated commercial structures that lined the town's wharves and waterfront streets.

In their place he's put a 189 boat marina, narrow one and two-story gray shingled shops, a bandstand and a shingle and brick supermarket fronted with a landscaped parking lot.

International Club Looking for Cooks

The 7-man Provisional Board of the International Club has begun meeting and the job of keeping this Foreign Student Office more in touch with immediate student needs. It has organized an international smorgasbord in Southwest's Hampden Dining Common Saturday, December 2.

The Board is presently recruiting cooks, intersted in prearing national dishes from different lands including the U.S. in fairly large volume. Money will be advanced to cover food costs for those who agree to provide a dish.

Interested cooks have been urged to attend the next meeting of the Board on Monday, November 13, at 7:30 p.m. in the Prince House entrance lounge (next to mailboxes), in Southwest; or to contact the Foreign Student Office (John Jessup, 5-2843) or Glenn Mangurian of Southwest, 5-1552.

Dishes might include fish or meat, vegetable, rice or noodle, desserts and bread. Thus far the association of Chinese students has agreed to come up with 4 dishes. Other commitments are needed by November 13 if the Board is to go ahead with the international smorgasbord.

Names of the 7 new Provisional Board members are:

Chidozie Agwuegbo, 128 Prince, 546-9944

Get To Work

In its first two meetings of the academic year, the Student Senate passed two very worthwhile pieces of legislation, the reapportionment of the Senate and the revamping of the Student Union Governing Board. Since then, in a state of awe at its own magnificent achievement, the Senate has done very little else. It's time they got off their butts after wasting half a semester and started doing something.

While acknowledging the fact that the Senate has made a game try at constructive legislation with its attempts to abolish the rhetoric requirement, this had been the only thing worth mentioning that has been attempted since the second meeting of the year, and it has yet to meet with success, if indeed it ever will. Much of the rest of the Senate's time has been spent in useless internal politicking which is not only cutting down on the Senate's effectiveness, but is hurting the interests of students, which is what the Senate was elected to represent.

It is time for President Ladd and the Senate's officers and committee chairmen to get the Senate moving. There is work to be done in the field of academic reform, rents and fees, social action, and many other areas. It is time for the rest of the Senate to get to work with its leaders, or urge them to get going if they are unwilling to. The Senate was never too popular with the student body anyway, and the students' claims that the Senate is "just another bureaucracy" are starting to ring true. Get going now, Senate, before your power goes the way of your hurting credibility, and restore the trust that students should be able to have in you.

The Workers Remain

I'm not exactly sure how to feel about this election. After almost two years of working for a cause aimed to one day, I should be glad it's over. I should be glad that I'm finally given the chance to improve my academic standings, and maybe, have some spare time to do those things I've wanted to do, without a campaign to get in my way.

On the other hand, I should be upset to see this cause go down in startling defeat. I should be disappointed with the American people for being hypocritical, and I should be angry with the abomidable campaign techniques of Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew.

However, I do not feel any one of these emotions in particular, rather, I feel a melancholy combination of every emotion imaginable. I am not bothered particularly by losing. Of the four campaigns I've worked on, only one has been successful. But I am bothered by losing a man who has worked steadily for change throughout his political career, and has always been honest and straightforward in his approach to the American people. I feel that on Tuesday, America "relieved itself" of one of the greatest men in its history. George McGovern will go down in the annals of history along side of men like Henry Wallace and Adlai Stevenson, men who weren't afraid to follow their convictions to wherever it may lead them. It is men like these that have always been ahead of their time and their people. It is not my place to criticize the nation for not accepting George McGovern, for if a nation is truly not ready for a man, then it shouldn't choose him, for it would probably not like him anyhow.

I can't help feeling a deep pride that I come from a state which stood by its convictions, rather than deleting them in favor of the status quo, and I can't help being proud to have worked on a campaign that generated as much love and enthusiasm among its workers as any other in history.

George McGovern has lost the election, but he has won a great deal more. He has won the love and admiration of millions of Americans, and he has won the right to say that this is not the end, but rather, this is the beginning. It is the beginning of the "New Politics", where, for the first time in our history, the people of a party have chosen their candidate in an open, straightforward manner, and no matter what else McGovern has lost, he will never lose this.

The large army of workers that has come together for this campaign cannot be dissolved. This was not the children's crusade of a Gene McCarthy, nor was it the impractical candidacy of a Linda Jenness. This was one of the most efficient, hard-working campaigns in American history. Time and again, it demonstrated that a well-run, grassroots campaign can defeat a party organization, and that a group of dedicated workers is far better than any sum of money. It is to these dedicated workers that I give my wholehearted thanks. In anywhere from Peterborough, New Hampshire to Corning, New York, the goodness and dedication I found among McGovern volunteers proved much more of a victory than any election could ever be considered. I think I can include each of those volunteers and, in fact, any other McGovern workers throughout this nation when I say, "Thank you, George McGovern."

"At this important crossroads for our nation, I would hope that America could reap the bright promise of the president's inaugural address; and that in the spirit of that excellent speech, Mr. Nixon will reject the counsels of war and move to end the killing, and turn American energies back to the solution of our own problems and the search for a more decent world."

The Republican Years

By JAMES MORRISETTE

Richard Nixon has gained another administration without so much as having to mention his opponent's name. He has done it by the second largest margin, in both the popular vote and electoral vote categories in history. And now he has only his own conscience, the content of which is suspect in Massachusetts but apparently not so in the other forty-nine states, to answer four years from now. If the frightening result of this election is any indication, then his successor to the office of head of the Republican party, whether it be Agnew, Percy, Brooke or whoever (one can certainly exclude from the list Paul McCloskey and John Ashbrook) will have no barrier to victory from the past election record of his party.

And so it remains for the American people to look ahead to four, probably eight, and perhaps even twelve more years of Republican presidents. Admittedly this is quite a prognostication. But the Nixon political fortress displayed such incredible strength last Tuesday night that if the Democrats were to take one hundred electoral votes away from him by 1976 and another hundred by 1980, they still wouldn't even be close. Retrospective to what might have been provides a glaring contrast to what is.

In the Spring of 1970, with Nixon trying to ride out dissent coming from all sides as a result of the Cambodia decision and his apparent lack of genuine concern over the killings at Kent and Jackson state, it seemed improbable that he would be re-elected. One could look ahead hopefully and say to oneself, "We won't make another mistake, he'll be out by 1972 and everything will be all right again. We just have to put up with him for two more years." The American people, notable the college students but older people, too, were energetic, moving, communicating. Perhaps this was taking place for the wrong reasons. It was in effect a shameful thing that it took the decision to invade another Southeast Asian country and the killing of six students exercising their constitutional rights to generate this commitment. But nevertheless there was a discourse going on between the generations. There was a direction in which to head, that of national politics. Since there was always a strike nearby and organizers would come right to your door to get you to fall out, and just by going down to the Campus Green you could get on the Springfield news, this course required a minimum of motivation.

Now, two years later, involvement in national politics promises all the excitement of a day on the assembly line. The signing of the peace settlement and the pomp of the inauguration will be over in a matter of weeks, very hopefully, and we will be able to hear this society quiet down. All the predictions, the interpretations of speeches, the backing of local candidates, the stumping, the crowds, Agnew blowing his whistle, McGovern whispering, "Kiss my ass" to a heckler, all the fun is over. The people will have to again turn to themselves for fulfillment and, as happened in the fifties, some will strike out.

I look on the beginning of Mr. Nixon's second term with a profound weariness, the worst kind of weariness since it is for the days to come and not the days that have been. There will be Spiro Agnew, his eyes slits, peeping out at the people who may be his future electors and dazzling them with his phraseology. There will be Nixon, waving to crowds as he descends from airplanes, or letting his jowls sag and his mouth crimp up as he attempts to make a strong point. Pat will be at his side, grinning also or staring with deep admiration at her remarkable husband. Julie and Tricia will be there, more sophisticated than when they were brides but still just as demeaning to the intelligence, saying that they would die for General Thieu without having the remotest chance of ever having to back their statements up. All will be with us for four more years.

This year and last, George McGovern tried everything to get rid of this crummy facade. He plain worked his ass off. He traveled the breadth of the United States ten times over, talking himself hoarse, telling jokes, thundering like a Puritan minister, letting strangers paw at him. At the Democratic national convention he appeared in a hotel lobby in front of a wildly screaming group of kids, at risk to his personal safety, to make a point about communication, to show that he was a listener. He not only did not dump Nixon, he didn't even dent him. For his efforts his party will probably try to hustle him out of its leadership. How he could appear Wednesday morning with a smile on his face absolutely escapes me. I would be, and am, too tired to smile now.

Poor Richard's
Volume Two, Number Nine November 10, 1972

Why was there a Nixon landslide? Poor Richard's was just as confused as anyone else. We asked our resident Bokononist for an explanation. He is pictured above reading from the surviving pages of The Book of Bokonon, which were translated into English by Kurt Vonnegut, Jr.

It Was Meant To Happen: How Nixon Did It

By Ed Bryant

When Bokonon and McCabe arrived on San Lorenzo, they saw quickly that San Lorenzan reality was a drag. They had to keep San Lorenzo from bumming out, so McCabe banished Bokonon, and outlawed Bokononism. Everyone is San Lorenzo became a secret Bokononist, successfully expressing their distaste for life in San Lorenzo by practicing the outlawed religion. Bokononism is a very attractive religion; it teaches that all truths are lies. The people of Lorenzo lived happily in their squalor, practicing the sacred rite of boko-maru in secret. Anyone caught practicing bokononism was put on the hook. Every now and then someone was put on the hook, just to keep the people on their toes. The hook wasn't used very often, however; McCabe, as head of state, was himself a secret Bokononist.

Perhaps the most important teaching of Bokonon was that what happened was meant to happen. No Bokononist ever says, "as it happened." Rather they say, "as it was meant to happen." This is the most sacred truth of a religion consisting entirely of lies. Are you still there?

As it was meant to happen, Richard M. Nixon was re-elected President of the United States of America. After serving for four years, Richard Nixon asked America for "four more years." On Wednesday morning he found a big box in his bedroom. Inside the box was his very own voting booth, with a card that read "For Richard Nixon, from America, which has lots of time." Nixon stepped inside his phantom voting booth, and found himself President for four more years.

What gave America the idea that it had four more years to give to Richard Nixon? America is a complex country, and to say exactly why it voted as it did is difficult. The answer will be sought everywhere. Historians will want to know, eventually, what happened. Democrats will want to know, by 1976, what went wrong. Time and Newsweek will want to know, by next Wednesday, why what happened, happened. McGovern supporters wanted to know what happened Tuesday night; now they're not sure they want to know what happened. Nixon supporters don't want to know what happened; they think they already know, and don't wish to be confused with the truth. This attitude of theirs, ironically enough, explains exactly what happened. Let me risk the hook and explain.

America is a nation of secret criminals. Some of these criminals only break little laws. They bribe policemen to tear up their tickets; they go through yellow lights when they could stop; they bet on football games with their local bookies; they ignore their ninth grade civics teachers who told them that ninth-grade civics class never ends. Others of them break bigger laws, such as the anti-trust laws, or federal regulations governing their particular enterprise. Still others break laws which are actually only symbolic crimes, sometimes known as capers; these people pose as defenders of freedom while simultaneously using illegal means, such as wiretaps and Mexican banks, to gain election as guardians of freedom.

These people are all secret Bokononists. They believe in lies, but will not admit that the lies are their truths. To admit this would involve asking painful questions these people don't wish to ask. To ask questions would be to expose oneself to new truths, truths which might conflict with the old truths. Since all truths are lies, these people figure their lies are just as good as any others, and they therefore guard their truths closely.

There are other Bokononists in the United States, but they are not secret criminals. They admit their Bokononism, which makes the other, secret Bokononists angry. This is what happened in 1972.

Richard Nixon was elected in 1968 because he had "secret plans" while his opponents, Hubert Humphrey and George Wallace, had no secrets at all, save for the fact that no one knew if they were serious. Secrets are sacred to Bokononists, who are themselves living a secret, that of their Bokononism. Richard Nixon went on television and said "I've Got A Secret." America loved it. "I've Got A Secret" was booked for four years, during which time Americans of all types tried to guess who the real Richard Nixon was. No one could guess.

In the interval, several budding TV stars grew jealous of Nixon's popularity. Two of them, Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie, wanted to replace Nixon on "I've Got A Secret." One of them was George Wallace, who wanted his own show, "All In The Family." Finally there was George McGovern, who wanted everyone to watch the six o'clock news.

Unfortunately for Humphrey and Wallace, all the secret Bokononists were watching I've Got A Secret. No one paid attention to them. Admitted Bokononists were drawn to Wallace and McGovern, both of whom were preaching the same truth. "I'm different," each proclaimed, and admitted Bokononist all over the country rallied around them. "I'm different" was just the kind of truth everyone was looking for. Everyone, that is, except for those people who were still watching I've Got A Secret.

One day an American came along, one of the most dangerous of all Americans. This American was not a typical American at all; he wasn't a Bokononist, he didn't have a sense of humor, and he didn't own a television set. I can't even watch TV, he thought bitterly. Suddenly he had an idea. If they won't let me watch TV, he thought, I'll make them watch me on TV.

He ran over to the TV studio with a gun, looking for Richard Nixon. There were two

Bits and Pieces

Interestingly enough "The Boys in the Band" and "Sunday, Bloody, Sunday" both played on campus last week on two consecutive nights. Both dealt with the once taboo subject of homosexuality in a frank and candid manner which the mass audience has not previously seen in the cinema. Looking at the films for a second time one sees how much the public has (or has not) matured when confronting this subject in the last few years.

"Boys" is based on Matt Crowley's off-Broadway play; it is campy, outrageous, bitchy and a lot of fun and games, George and Martha style. The first half of the film comes at you like a gay "Laugh-In": a series of cutting one-liners with fast editing typical of Billy Friedkin ("French Connection"). Half of the lines aren't funny at all, the rest are just sick. All are forced. The second half of the film is a neurotic indulgence on the part of Crowley.

"Sunday Bloody Sunday" isn't as old and wears better. It has an intelligent story, excellent acting, and fine though somewhat slow-paced direction by John Schlesinger (Midnight Cowboy). It presents to the audience homosexuals without the limp wrists and swishy remarks but instead with real emotions that ring true.

The audience reaction was markedly different in response to the two films. Granted the print of "Sunday" shown in the Ballroom had a soundtrack of inferior quality, but there is an obvious relationship between how the two films portrayed homosexuals and how the audience reacted respectively. Since "Boys" presented the same "faggy" stereotype which television and motion pictures has consistently shown us in the past, the film was non-threatening and thus inoffensive. We have been conditioned to laugh at the funny fags (Big Al-"Laugh-In", Paul Lynde, Rod Steiger in "No Way to Treat a Lady"). However "Sunday" presents characters which demand our respect for them as human beings. It is the difference of laughing at a character rather than identifying with him which forces a superficial movie like "Boys" to be enjoyed more than an intelligent one like "Sunday Bloody Sunday".

It is quite evident the condition of the studios' financial departments when they have to drag out their "classics" to meet the needs of the vacuum of first run theaters. There just isn't enough decent product (or money to produce the product) to run in the showcase cinemas, so we are going to see again (and again) "Gone With the Wind", "The Graduate", "Fantasia", "Funny Girl", "Dr. Zhivago", "2001", "Ryan's Daughter", the re-issues of Chaplin's feature lengths ("City Lights", "Modern Times", etc.). And now after five years of waiting "you too can bring someone you love to share in the joy of ... "The Sound of Music"', this coming Easter and in full widescreen 70 mm. cinemascope. "The hills are alive...."

CAN'T KEEP A GOOD MAN DOWN DEP'T: Hair's creators tried to extend the Age of Aquarius on Broadway this fall with "Dude" - a sort of freak's musical version of 8-1/2. Galt McDermott (Hair, Two Gentlemen of Verona) did the music; Gerome Ragni the book. Ragni based the play supposedly on his life, unfortunately no one, including himself knew what it was all about.

After being given the go ahead to the tune of $800,000, Ragni proceeded to produce Broadway's most monumental flop, with a potential loss of one million dollars. First he himself was to play Dude, then the role was given to a white twenty-three year old actor who couldn't sing, then a thirteen year old black who could, but not the songs of a white twenty-three year old, so the thirteen year old and an older black singer were signed to share singing and acting duties.

Then the matter of the play's home theater came up. Ragni insisted to the point of locking himself in his room and not talking to anyone that the Schubert theatre be rented for the production. After much fanagling the producers got the Schubert at which point Ragni wanted the Imperial. The Imperial was unavailable so the Broadway was procured. Ragni then proceeded to literally tear it down and rebuild it to his own design. The stage was covered with dirt causing a minor dust storm. Dirt turned to mud causing the cast to slip and slide through rehearsals and threaten to walk out. Finally brown plastic covers were used to blanket the stage. The audience was broken into sections called Foothills, Treetops, Valleys (Orchestra, Balcony, etc.) and the orchestra was placed throughout the theater. The cast and crew strewn in between all of this.

Even with the assistance of literally miles of electrical cord and microphones nothing could be heard distinctly in the theatre. Frantic calls to M.I.T., Tom O'Horgan (J.C. Superstar, Hair), and anyone else foolish enough to become involved with the show, were made, but, alas, nothing could be done to save this lame duck. Funeral notices were sent out and Mr. Ragni is said to be in mourning somewhere in the Foothills just south of Broadway. No offers for a film version as of yet come forth.

Ongoing Epic

A massive documentary of the Arab-Israeli War of 1948 is the most recent product of the research team Larry Collins and Dominique Lapierre (well known as the authors of Is Paris Burning). This documentary succeeds, so says reviewer Carl Greenberg, even in its massive bulk. "Up close and personal", to coin a motto is as much horrifying here as it is informative. Good reading for an insight into an ongoing historical altercation. See page 12.

Outgoing Epic

"A football player I'm not", he says. Oh yeh? What else do you call a guy who enjoys grass stains on his clothes, blood pouring down his forehead, and a "fanny" all kicked in. Vogler finishes expose on mean coaches and mean game. Discovers it feels good to hug plastic. Other than that is the same old honcho reporter. Catch the last crushing episode. On page 16.

Nun Do It

The filmmaker of renowned High School, Hospital, Law and Order, to mention three of his five, exposes the cinema viewer to yet another social drama. This one is by far his most "astonishing", and shaking work to date. Patrick Sullivan from the Media Center looks closely at all the implications that this supposedly serene monastery raises. It is an eye opening study of excruciating contrasts. Page 20.

The Making of a Nixon Landslide

By Steve Ferber
By Howard Bloom

The seeds of the November 7th election debacle were planted just a few days after the Democratic convention. The sowing of those seeds continued up until election day, when they sprung up in a full bloom election victory for Richard M. Nixon. The reasons for the Tuesday catastrophe are clear. Let us take an inside look at the McGovern campaign. Here was an organization which had performed flawlessly throughout the primary season. Every speech the Senator delivered was perfect, and every answer to every question he was asked was just as perfect. The accuracy of the state by state count of delegates by McGovern aide Pat Caddell was equally flawless. There was complete harmony within the McGovern

But that was before the convention, and before the Eagleton affair. It, chiefly, was the cancer that ate away at the tightly knit organization McGovern had woven since the beginning of 1971. It put everyone involved-Gary Hart, Frank Mankewicz, and especially McGovern-on the American public's dunce list. The big question became: How can he run the country if he can't even take the time to pick a good running mate? It made everyone lower him ten notches on their competency chart. He deserved it.

That was not the only effect of the Eagleton dropping. Getting rid of the Missouri senator after backing him "1000 percent" left McGovern looking like he was anything but a man of his word. It started the people talking about "wishy-washiness". He began to be perceived as a man who didn't have the courage of his convictions when he was under pressure. Because of the Eagleton debacle, the McGovern non-organization spent the rest of the presidential campaign picking up the pieces of their broken dream.

There are other reasons, hidden behind the black cloud of the Eagleton drama, which contributed heavily to McGovern's landslide loss. For some reason, after the convention, McGovern decided to revamp his entire campaign organization. The scope of a national campaign probably necessitated the overhaul, but it turned out miserably. New people were brought into the organization, and faithfuls who had worked for the Senator during the primaries were kicked upstairs and downstairs. From the very beginning, there was infighting. Larry O'Brien, who was chosen by McGovern to be his link with the old pols and the party regulars, threatened to quit the McGovern camp if certain changes he deemed necessary were not made in campaign strategy. Hart and Mankeweisz added to the confusion immeasurably. They stepped on each other's toes and tongues in feeble efforts to get Nixon and his campaign chairman, Clark MacGregor, to come out of hiding. They, along with O'Brien, made rash statement after rash statement throughout the campaign: and they helped defuse Watergate and the secret political contributions as issues the public would listen to McGovern about.

They lost their credibility by harping on those subjects, because they were out of their territory. Their job was to advise McGovern, not attack Nixon. Their advice to their candidate was in equally as bad taste. They had him sounding like a raving maniac the last few days of the campaign. And before that they told him to come on like Caspar Milquetoast. People began to think that maybe they were seeing a re-run of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde instead of a Presidential candidate.

The final explanation for the McGovern trouncing lies in the inner Sanctums of American people. The way I see it, Nixon appealed to a coalition of the politically ignorant or unaware and the people interested in only their private needs and not the public good.

The explanation of why they voted to condone, in essence, policies of corruption and killing lies in their value systems. I consider it an amoral to vote for Nixon in this case. Another plausible explanation which struck me is that these Nixon backers are not political animal enough to sort out and weigh all the evidence and make a rational choice. If the former is predominant, the country is in big trouble with or without Nixon as President. If the latter is the more abundant element in the Nixon win, then the outlook is not as bleak. Over 60% of the American people fit into one of these two categories. That doesn't even make the United States a nice place to visit, does it?

Had the American people convinced me that they were informed, I really wouldn't have minded. Had the American people demonstrated to me that the media propaganda didn't sway them, I really wouldn't have minded. But my overriding concern in looking at the landslide election result of last Tuesday, is that the American electorate has been taken, taken by an incredibly shrewd organization.

I don't perceive myself as being a blind headed McGovern supporter. I respect very much what Nixon accomplished with his trips to China and Russia. I too, like many McGovern supporters, looked upon these trips as politically motivated, yet whatever his reasons, much good has come out of them, and I look upon the results with much favor.

Yet it bothers me to think that 60% of the American electorate voted for Nixon. When you support McGovern and then see him get landslided, you have to wonder why. You begin to wonder who is making the wrong judgment. You begin to wonder whether or not its YOU making the mistake. And you have to wonder why, when you think that the choice among the candidates could never be clearer, that the rest of America agrees with you, but in the opposite way.

To me its a sad indictment of the American public. The McGovern supporters lament goes, "Well the rest of America just isn't informed," or "America is too conservative for George McGovern." Are those 60% really not informed? My answer? An unequivocable yes. In fact, I think much more than 60% of the American public is really uninformed. The best support I can offer is that here at UMass, on a college campus, in the only state McGovern was to carry, many people didn't know what the hell was coming off. One would think that at a university the majority of students would have some knowledge as to the political situation of our country. Yet time and again this was disproven.

In a poll taken by Howard Bloom and myself, our telephoning assistants would report that people didn't understand the questions, that people had no idea what the answer might be, that people simply didn't know what was going on.

Its troubling to think that America doesn't know what they're voting on. Its horrible to think that television and radio commercials, along with millions of dollars worth of soliticiting, decide the election. Its disturbing to think that the more money you have, the better you will do. Its distressing to know that the slicker and more persuasive your commercials are the better you will do in the election. People just don't have the facts, and whatever access they do have they largely ignore. People don't vote on information or with intelligence. If they did Eisenhower would never have been president.

The media campaign by Nixon was brilliant. The commercials on TV were so smooth and impressive that many of my friends who supported McGovern said they had to think a moment or two about their choice after seeing one of Nixon's masterpieces. Never before in an election had it been so clear how money and machines rule the people of the United States. Still, the people remain uninformed, and to the discredit of the Democratic party they were never able to change this.

McGovern's media campaign was a sloppy one. I faulted him for this, because in order to get elected you simply have to play the media-money game well. Yet so many things that this man said and did were so uncandidate like that it was a joy to see him run. I recalled hearing him tell a voter in Connecticut, "Well if my stand on abortion is the most important one to you in the campaign, then you had better vote for somebody else." Could you hear Richard Nixon or Hubert Humphrey saying this?

It is incomprehensible to me, as an American, that the President of the United States, whether linked or not linked with many of the scandals, was allowed to get away with saying nothing at all. He was allowed to hide. He was allowed to say on television, "You know where I stand," and "I don't want to insult your intelligence" and leave it at that. This man is manipulating America. The man is "taking" the American people. One thing Nixon isn't counting on in the American electorate is intelligence. He knows that they aren't informed which is exactly why the media worked so well. He knows that it was right to run as the President, not as a Republican and not as Nixon. He's smart. He's a great politician, and unfortunately going to be with us for four more years. America - you deserve it.

Poor Richard's? You mean Poor George's this week.

The Plimpton Experiment

By Mark Vogler

"There's nothing to joke about," I thought to myself. I would go on that field tomorrow and play to the fullest of my capabilities. I would give it my all and accept the product of my efforts. Fox as Coach Pasquale had said earlier in the spring, "I don't care if you're on the fifth team. If you don't have the attitude and desire of someone on the first string, then you have no business being out there."

Then it struck me. Don't fantasize what will happen. But don't allow yourself to become so overwhelmed by all the distasteful things that could happen that you might be on the virge of a nervous breakdown. Above all, think positive, know your assignments, and try your damdest. Nobody can ask much more.

When I decided to retire for a night's rest, I fell sound asleep. The alarm clock rang at 11:00 sharp. I leaped out of bed, anxious to wash up and get dressed for the big day. I couldn't wait for the game. It would be the climax of four months of hard persistent work.

When I entered the clubhouse, I was subdued by the tense atmosphere which prevailed til game time. There was friendly razzing and joking going on pertaining to the Red-White game. It helped to keep some of the players loose. But I, for one, had the butterflies.

I walked into the training room to get my foot taped. I said hello to Vic Keedy. Vic asked me where I was yesterday. I was supposed to see him. I told him that I got tied up.

"Yes, I heard about you. You got tied up all right, tied up in a square knot."

He might have been joking, but it didn't come across that way to me. From what I've known of Vic, usually quite a friendly guy, he was not in a very good mood and this sort of added to the already tense atmosphere.

I suited up in a football uniform for the last time. I dressed up slowly, since it took my mind off the game. I then coated my shoes with a layer of lacquer. Some of the players that I got to know passed by and wished me luck.

The coaches walked in and the two teams assembled for last work instructions. Coach Pickett of the Red squad of which I was a member, gave his pre-game sermon.

"Men, we've had the draft and we've been talking since Wednesday about how good this Red team is. Well, we know it's the better squad, but let's go out there and prove it to them.

"Talk is small, men. And the only way that we're going to prove anything, is out there on that field. So we better be ready when we go to war. Just ask Coach Flood about what happened last year. He thought that he had the better team, and he was overconfident. Isn't that right coach?"

"That's right. I was as cocky as all heck. And we got our fannys kicked in. The only way that we're going to prove that we're better is out on that field."

Head coach MacPherson came in and had both teams assemble in the main locker room.

"Now we've got a pretty good rivalry going between the Red and White squads. That's nice. It's good for the team. But let's not end it here. I don't want to see anything like the scrimmage last Saturday in Brockton. Let's have a little hitting out there this afternoon."

The time came to take the field. I loosened up for a spell, then passed a football back and forth with Billy Nosel. The stadium wasn't exactly crowded, but it was one heck of a sight to see all those people in the stands to view this exhibition game.

The Red squad won the toss and elected to receive. For about 10 minutes I sat on the bench, waiting and hoping that Coach Pickett would call on me to go in for a few plays. It hurt to sit there, not being able to make some sort of contribution. It was a selfish thought, but that's how I looked at things.

Then we scored with about five minutes left in the first quarter. Since I was a member of the taxi squad, it gave me at least the opportunity to appear on the field. I wasn't nervous at all. I couldn't wait to go out with the kickoff team.

As John Ames positioned the ball on the kicking tee, I got down in my position, ready to fly into enemy territory. Although the slowest man out there, I could tell what was going on by the time that I got down there.

It was mass confusion at first, two lines of men converging with no set pattern. Then I spotted the return back breaking to the outside and then weaving inside with a patch of daylight. Here's where the mirror drill that we had practiced with great distaste came in handy.

As the back made his move to the inside, I went with him and fired at him broadside. In my anxiety to make the tackle, I pulled him forward instead of pushing him back. But regardless of my form, the job had been done. At the moment of impact I just clutched onto his helmet and hauled him down head first with a little help from players arriving on the scene of action. The tackle wasn't solo, but I was the major engineer of it.

It felt good to hug and hold that plastic. But there were other red shirts who wanted to share it. And before I knew it, I was at the bottom of the heap. It's a wonder that I didn't get injured, especially after being in the thick of the violence.

But as the pig pile dispersed, I picked myself off the ground and hussled to the bench, knowing deep inside that the job had been done. And if there had to be a climax to my three-week experience as a football player, then it had to be here.

The White squad came back to make it 7-7 in the second quarter. I still had not participated in one play from scrimmage and was getting a bit impatient. With about 11 seconds to go in the half, I stood on the side lines as Coach Pickett called for a strong safety. "I can play strong safety," I said. But another player had already beaten me to the punch.

"You can play strong safety, well..." He was going to insert me, but the play had already started. I felt a bit disappointed as time ran out.

At the half, the teams assembled in the locker room. No speeches this time, just instructions issued to defensive and offensive units individually. Coach MacPherson walked by.

"Coach Pickett? Is there anybody who hasn't played yet?"

"I think that Mark Vogler is the only one."

"Well, get him in."

I got in all right. During the second half I got into eight plays from scrimmage and three more kickoffs. I figured in two more tackles and wound up receiving some kind of contact on nearly every play.

The kickoffs were the plays which provided the biggest risk for injury. On two occasions, I came down field in very good position to make the tackle. My pursuit was good. But just a shift of direction on the part of the return back, brought me into the center of congestion.

It was mass chaos. Instead of hitting the return back square, I'd get lost in the crowd and would find myself on his leg with about three other guys on top of me. I was just part of the landscape as far as the credit for the tackle goes. It's easy to get lost in the crowd – a crowd which materializes on kickoff collisions.

Five minutes must have passed by the time Coach Pickett approached me, touching the top of my helmet, thus giving me the signal to enter the game for the first time from scrimmage.

It was mind-blowing at first. It was a feeling that is seldom experienced by non-athletes. But there I was... in a collegiate football stadium, suited up in uniform, standing in the middle of the field, waiting for the play to start. This was my goal from the first time that I thought of playing spring ball.

Eleven men on both sides of the scrimmage line circled into a huddle in a squat position with their heads facing one another.

From the defensive huddle, there was a flow of communication which could only be understood by somebody involved in the play.

"Forty-one Red Banjo. Ready, break!"

"Get set men, c'mon, let's stop 'em!"

"Pro 200! Pro 200!"

"Okay. Watch the crack! Watch the crack!"

"Crackback! Crackback!"

"Rainbow! Rainbow! Rainbow! Joe!"

"Okay, Mark! Rainbow! Rainbow!"

"Watch the sweep! Get set for the sweep!"

"SWEEPPP!!!..

...SWEEPPP!!!"

It was a sweep to my side. And anticipating the pass, I was hesitant to come up and contain the play. And as a result, they gained about eight yeards. I got knocked to the ground by one of the blockers. The next play was familiar in dialogue. But the play, itself, was different. It was an off-tackle run. I maneuvered my way into position as the running back came rocketting into the secondary region. My pursuit wasn't that good. He managed to get in front of me, but I stuck him from behind. The player had gained about 10 yeards, so the opportunity to have made a tackle really didn't thrill me that much.

The offense, which had started at about its own 20, worked its way down to our 20 in five plays, capped by a long pass. It was at this point that I got tapped on the shoulder, to return to the bench.

The White team had taken a 13-7 lead late in the third period, but we forged ahead to take a 14-13 advantage entering the final quarter.

My second series of plays was more successful than the first one. I wasn't involved in any contact, but did cover my man well enough to prevent passes in my area of coverage. But on third down situation, I encountered defeat. I was the goat, just what I feared would happen did happen.

The tight end gave me an inside fake, and I fell for it. Although I regained some of the ground on him, he was beating me and it appeared a sure TD pass was coming, and it did.

Then out of nowhere came my counterpart safety John Healy. He just leaped in front of the tight end like a cat to save me a little embarassment. The end slowed up and I managed to get behind him just in case he made the catch. But there was just no chance. Healy was determined to bat that ball out of bounds, and that's what he did.

The threat was stopped, but the White team later went back out in front, 20-14. We tied it up on a partially deflected ball which our receiver managed to spear in the endzone. We had a chance to go ahead with two minutes left to play. But the extra point snap was muffed. Kicker John Ames had trouble enough retrieving the football, let alone kicking it. And he got smothered without a chance to run the ball.

The closing moments were tense and exciting. You might have thought the two teams were engaged in the Super Bowl. Everybody was up from the bench, watching the action intently. You could tell the players who got their hits in today. Blood and sweat was rolling down their foreheads. Their uniforms were starched with dirt and grass stains.

The White team had possession with time running out. And it appeared that they had the game rapped up. But the Red team revived its own spirit when the defense handed the White squad some sizeable and costly losses of yardage. But the White team still had that field goal opportunity.

Andy Dutkanicz, the White team place kicker, was destined to become the man of the hour. The situation was reminiscent to that of Jim O'Brien, whose kick won the Super Bowl for the Baltimore Colts in 1971 with just seven seconds left.

Dutkanicz had a fairly easy task, but was kicking with a bad ankle. Out of desperation, a Red team linebacker just did manage to get a piece of the ball, just enough to knock the duck shot off target.

The Red team had one more play and decided to run the clock out to preserve a 20-20 tie. It was all over. My membership as a collegiate football player had expired.

The walk to the locker room felt great. I had accomplished the goal that I had set out to do. Coaches and players who knew of my original purpose behind playing spring ball, congratulated me.

The locker room was buzzing. There were no ill feelings. After today's tie, nobody was a loser. And the razzing that proceeded the game continued. "We would have beaten you if..."

I undressed slowly, since it would be the last time that I would wear a football uniform. And through all the excitement, a twinge of sadness touched my heart. Despite all the hardships related to spring ball, despite the miserable weather, despite all the bumps and bruises, and despite the mental pressures, I had thoroughly enjoyed my fling with collegiate football.

I had made quite a few friends and had gained the respect of practically every player that I came in contact with. I had obtained a better insight and understanding of the game. I had experienced many of the emotions that are felt by all football players. I had done something which, only months earlier, friends and relatives conceived as a big joke and quite ridiculous.

So why even feel the slightest bit of gloom at a time like this? Well, it was then that I made a realistic appraisal of a football player. To play this game took more than physical talent and mental faculties. It took a deep love and devotion for the game in order to dedicate one's self enough to continue playing.

I recalled Dug Hebert's words: "If you don't enjoy playing, you might as well get out. I know that I'll probably get cut. But I still go to practices because I like it." Yes, if I didn't enjoy the game, I most certainly wouldn't have stuck with it this long.

In the days and nights that followed, I occasionally looked back at my experiences, wondering how I did it. I remembered the various drills, the pep talks from the coaches, the encouragement I received from the players, the actual contact that's the name of the game, and the soothing atmosphere in the locker room that followed a grueling practice session. For a while, I would miss this and more.

The Monday following the spring game, it was an empty feeling not having to go down to the stadium for practice. I had somehow become a part of football and was reluctant to give it up.

Players that I met in my travels throughout the campus, often asked me if I was going to continue with the team.

My answer to them was that I was too slow and too small to continue on the collegiate level. My actual decision was based on a similar claim by those who I discovered would not be returning. There was no sense of continuing if my contribution would be nill. All the time and effort would be fruitless. If being a football player meant just putting on a uniform, then I didn't want any part of it. But one good thing that I could leave with was the experience of having survived a typical collegiate football camp and having experienced the real thing. A football player, I'm not.

1948: The Fight For Jerusalem

By Carl Greenberg

O Jerusalem! by Larry Collins and Dominique Lapierre
Simon and Schuster
637 pages, illustrated, $10.00

The authors of Is Paris Burning? and Or I'll Dress You in Mourning have applied their tremendous research skills and human insights to produce this bulky, but often moving, documentary style book on the fight for Jerusalem during the 1948 Arab-Israeli war.

Jerusalem is, of course, the most important city, spiritually, in the world. The Wailing Wall, the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, and the Dome of the Rock are all within sight of each other in Jerusalem's Old City. To refresh the reader's knowledge of the situation which Collins and Lapierre are dealing with, the British had ruled Palestine as a mandate since the days of T.E. Lawrence during the First World War. Finally, after thirty years of British rule, the United Nations voted to partition Palestine.

Partition was a difficult dream. Jewish, Arab and Christian populations were well mixed, especially in Jerusalem. Jewish refugees from the recent holocaust in Europe were immigrating to Palestine legally and illegally (S.S. Exodus, etc.). Whatever else the partition would do, both Arab and Jewish interests were determined that all of Jerusalem become theirs. The idea of an international city, proposed by many not directly concerned, was not fully acceptable to either side.

In late November, 1947, the United Nations vote for partition was a virtual assurance of war when the plan was scheduled to take effect six months later - May, 1948. The Arabs were free to prepare for the conflict. The Jews, however, were forced to plan as an underground nation. It was illegal to import arms, to raise an army, etc. The Haganah would be the Jewish underground army until the moment of partition when the State of Israel would be proclaimed and then there could be such a thing as an official Israeli army.

O Jerusalem! evokes all the frustrations and tension of the time by reporting factually all the political and military developements of both sides and mixing in personal views of the situation from all sorts of people who were involved.

One of the most interesting accounts is the story of Golda Meir. She was the daughter of a poor Russian carpenter, and, as all the Jewish leaders, had no more official power than any other resident of Palestine. Her job, however, was, on very short notice, to fly to America and raise money. Her eloquent, unrehearsed speeches inspired leaders of American Jewry to pledge millions of dollars. She told one group in Chicago, "It is not to you to decide whether we shall continue our struggle or not. We shall fight. ...but you can decide one thing– whether the victory will be ours or the Mufti's." Within minutes she had been given over one million dollars.

If the Jews were so determined to fight, the Arabs were trapping themselves with their own rhetoric. In public, they screamed for the destruction of the Jews. Privately, many felt that war was unnecessary and their hatred was artificial. The Arab's mixed emotions would prove costly.

The most bitter fighting centered around Jerusalem. Jerusalem is divided into two parts, the ancient Old City on the eastern edge, and the larger, modern New City. The Old City is completely walled in. Access is through seven gates spaced unevenly around the walls. The gates, of course, were the scenes of many bloody encounters. In short, the Arabs took the Old City, the Jews the New.

One major theme of O Jerusalem!, if documentaries can be said to have themes, is that of the constant tension and the hairbreadth nature of the war. Throughout the book is the detailing of the shortages of everything, arms, food, water. When the Jews of Jerusalem had been cut off by the Arabs, there was a constant fight against starvation. Food was so slimly rationed that they were eating almost nothing. The cease fire which allowed Israel to prepare properly came on the very last day that the meager food reserves would run out.

By its nature, O Jerusalem! is at times confusing. There are so many names and places (the maps help) that it is hard to keep any but the most important straight in your mind. Usually the authors help by reminding us of where we heard of the person before in the book.

Perhaps the most revealing element of the book is the fact that it deals not only with what happened, but that it focuses on the people it happened to. In other places we might hear of the terrible shelling and terror bombing of Jerusalem and read the statistics of those killed and wounded. In this book, though, we are shown the victims. We know the aspiring actor before his face gets shredded in an explosion. We know the people who are forced to leave their homes, and we are told what their homes were like. Indeed, one of the greatest tragedies of the war was the creation of the hundreds of thousands of Arab refugees.

One British observer had said that after the partition there should be a time for the situtation "to find its own level", before a truce was called. It is doubtful that there really is a true level for the Middle East ever to find. Boundaries seem destined to be always fluid and the 1948 war showed just how bloody level-finding was when left to the military of those whose dreams centered on that land which seems the spiritual center of the world.

It is a tribute to Collins and Lapierre that through their finely focused comment on Jerusalem's circumstances, we are able to comprehend the political climate in which the world approached the Middle Eastern conflict and the whole spectrum of Arab, British and Jewish thought.

We come to understandings of the tragedy which lead us to be even more saddened by it. A great deal of what happened was forced on the participants and a great deal was fomented by their stupidities and misunderstandings. From the plight of private citizens to the agonies of world leaders, the fight for Jerusalem and the rest of Palestine had its effect.

It is clear that men like Ben-Burion and King Abdullah of Jordan understood each other much more fully than seems likely. But allegiances and history forced them to war and their mutual compassions were not sufficient to stem the passions of the land which always has been warred over.

Collins and Lapierre force our sympathies to lie not with one side or the other, but with all the victims of the battles. They do make us understand why the Jews were so much better in the fight, taking into account all their handicaps, but we also see that it was not simple inability on the part of the Arabs which made the Israelis look so good. It is the nature of things that the Middle East be the home of all semitic races. It is an idiocy to say that the Arabs are anti-Semitic.

If we learn anything from O Jerusalem!, it is that there has always been bloodshed on the sands of the Middle East and the 1967 Six-Day War, let alone the 1948 war, will certainly not be the last war. As in the religions centered in Jerusalem, the Middle East is an eternal mixture of joys and sadnesses.

1939-1941: The Winds Of War

By Ed Smith

The Winds of War by Herman Wouk
Little, Brown

The historical novel is a valuable literary form in the sense that it presents the reader with a view of an historical situation which he might not have encountered otherwise. The outcome and ultimate results of a war are not always determined by the numbers of men and arms, but sometimes by intangible qualities that it takes a writer to discern rather than a statistician. This, it would seem, is the reason Herman Wouk spent seven years of his life writing The Winds of War. Through the juxtapostion of personalities against a backdrop of historical fact he explores the human factors which led to the start of the second World War. The perspective which he offers us has the second World War as the starting point in the chapter of history which we are presently living. In the foreword he states that it is imperative that we understand how the world got into its present situation; the threat of technological warfare and annihilation is, he says, a spectre which can be eliminated. Wouk is, as you can see, an optimistic man.

By following the travels of Captain Victor Henry from March of 1939 through December of 1941, Wouk traces the final buildup of German military power, their invasions of Poland, France and Russia and finally the entrance of the United States into the war. Captain Henry starts out the book by being assigned to the post of naval attache' in Berlin. From that point on he becomes something of a junior Henry Kissinger, travelling from Washington to Rome, back to Berlin and eventually to Moscow. He is vaulted to his position as a globe-trotting diplomat because he files a report in which he predicts the unexpected German-Soviet pact which occured in 1939. This report catches the eye of President Roosevelt who feels that Captain Henry might be a valuable person to have working personally for him. Through Henry's meetings and communications with Roosevelt, Wouk gives us a picture of a man determined to get into a war with Germany. The help which he provided England with was obviously meant to both bolster the English spirit and to antagonize Germany.

The threat he faced at home though was impeachment, due to a prevailing feeling in the country that it had no part in another European war.

While this picture of Roosevelt is well done, the more interesting figure, in terms of a world leader, is Hitler. He is shown as half a madman and half a calculating and powerful leader who came very close to getting what he wanted. The most fascinating aspect of Hitler that is shown though, is his ability to embody the German spirit. He felt very strongly in the destiny of Germany as a world power. Bitter from the treatment Germany received after the first World War, Hitler, with Germany behind him, wanted to strike back and beat the world. Only then would Germany be able to regain its stolen territory and never have to fear any other country. This is the picture as seen through Captain Henry's eyes during his stay in Berlin.

The Japanese situation is one which is explored in much less depth than the German one. There is an almost lecture-like explanation of it by Captain Henry's oldest son, Byron, a pilot stationed aboard the aircraft carrier, Enterprise. Despite the fact that Wouk devotes very little space to a discussion of the Japanese, he very strongly comments that the attack on Pearl Harbor was the moment at which the course of history took an abrupt turn. For one, it signalled the entrance of the U.S. into the war, but even more significant was the fact that the Japanese destroyed a large portion of the Pacific fleet using airplanes, foreshadowing the complete dominance machines would gain in waging war.

The personal relationships in the book provide a sharp contrast to the war. Wouk sets Captain Henry's younger son, Byron, in Italy working for a famous jewish writer, who lives in the hills of Sienna with his niece, Natalie. Travelling to Warsaw with Natalie to visit her fiance, Byron finds himself in the middle of the invasion of Poland by the Germans. Eventually they fall in love and Natalie rejects her former lover to marry Byron. The chief purpose of their relationship is to illustrate the feeling towards the Jews and their situation in Europe at this time. On the one hand we have the persecution and genocide which was brought upon the Jews by Hitler and would appear to be one of the most unprecendented and singularly heinious crimes in history. However, on the other hand we have Aaron Jastrow, the jewish author, who puts the situation in the perspective of history. Hitler, he explains, is only using an old tool in his anti-semitism. He says the past thirty or so years, counting back from 1940, in which there had not been a great deal of persecution of the Jews, was only a lull in what had otherwise been a long history of harassment of the Jews. The Crusades for example had, in part, the express purpose of slaughtering the Jews. Hitler was only reviving a latent, but very powerful hate, in order to unite his country. Their relationship, of course, has much more depth than this, but it seems as though this is the main point it impresses on the reader.

The other major relationship is that between Captain Henry and his wife, Rhoda. It is interspersed by affairs which go a long way in characterizing both the individuals and showing the bond which holds them together. The aspirations of a man in the military and why he is there is probably what comes out strongest from their relationship. The underlying bitterness which exists in the competition among career military men for prized places in the military hierarchy is indicative of Wouk's feelings towards power. The rest of the relationships in the book serve to illustrate lesser points of interest, but the remarkable thing about them is the way they all stem from the Henry family. Looking back at this it does not seem as though it is entirely credible. However, while reading the book it comes across very smoothly, much to Wouk's credit.

In The Winds of War, Wouk creates a book called World Empire Lost by General Armin von Roon. The book serves to give the German military side of the story in order to balance out the novel. It is characterized by being completely devoid of any moral justification of Germany's actions and rather dwelling on the immorality of other countries. He repeats the feeling that Germany had a right to the piece of the cake shared by other world powers. The most interesting parts of the book though, are those dealing with explanations of the military moves made by the Germans, i.e. why they invaded Russia at what seemed to be a most inopportune time. The book is related in such an obnoxious and self-rightious tone that it is almost a caricature of the German personality. These sections, despite their addition to the book as a whole, are very slow reading. Every time I came upon one I dreaded dragging my way through it; this is not so much a criticism as a warning that these parts are slow in comparison with the quick pace set in the rest of the novel.

The Caine Mutiny, Wouk's other novel about World War II, is quite dissimilar from this one. For one thing, Wouk did not have nearly the expertise in characterization that he puts to such excellent use in this novel. Even more than that though, his approach is quite different in The Winds of War than in the other novel. In this book he approaches the war from its roots and shows how the characters evolve with the threat of all our war. In The Caine Mutiny it is more of an examination of men already involved in the war and how they react to situations during it.

In terms of characterization this novel is probably closer to "Youngblood Hawke." There we have an extremely strong central figure from whom the other characters decline in varying stages. This same type of method is evident in The Winds of War, Victor Henry being that chief character.

The failure of Wouk to present a character who rationally voices objections to the United States entering the war is evident. He makes many references to the strong feeling which existed in the country in opposition to the war, but it is never put into the mouth of well developed character. However, Wouk is presently writing a sequence to this novel and some clarification of this and other issues may be forthcoming.

Finally, the theme which Wouk is driving at becomes a bit confused at times. In the tangle of relationships one forgets for a moment that this is a war we are talking about. Wouk attempts to spell out his theme and intentions in the forward of the book. This is what Wouk has to say and I, for one, hope that he is right.

"The theme and aim of The Winds of War can be found in a few words by the French Jew, Julien Benda:

'Peace, if it ever exists, will not be based on the fear of war, but on the love of peace. It will not be the abstaining from an act, but the coming of a state of mind. In this sense the most insignificant writer can serve peace, where the most powerful tribunals can do nothing.' "

German guards outside the TV station, so he went off looking for Hubert Humphrey. Hubert Humphrey was home, watching TV, and Arthur felt sorry for him. Poor Hubert. he thought, he's been trying to get on TV for twelve year. I can't shoot him.

Artie left Hubert Humphrey's house determined to be the next guy on TV. He came across George Wallace at a shopping center. Everyone there was crowding around, trying to shake hands with George Wallace. No one was crowding around to shake Artie's hand. Artie looked around, and when he saw what was pointed at George Wallace, he became ecstatic. TV cameras! Artie pulled out his gun, smiled for the first time in his life, and ran towards Wallace, shouting "I'm going to be on TV!" He shot Wallace, and the TV cameras turned to him. He was ecstatic. As the police led him away, he asked them, "How much will I get for my autobiography?"

George Wallace didn't die, but he couldn't walk any more, much less run. George McGovern was the only one left to challenge I've Got A Secret. He called all his friends together in Miami Beach, where he pledged to end I've Got A Secret. He said, "America is tired of watching Richard Nixon's show. Next year we will have a new show, with a new story. Everyone will be able to watch it in color." His friends cheered, and sent him off to convince the networks to give him a four-year contract, and to tear up Richard Nixon's contract.

George McGovern got into the TV studio, where he spoke with the people in charge of the network. This is what he told them.

I've Got A Secret has been on the air for four years now, and we still don't know who the real Richard Nixon is. People want to know who Richard Nixon is, so they can do something else for a change."

The network President turned to his friend, George Gallup. "Mr. Gallup," he said, "what do the American people want?" Gallup smiled, and replied, "They want to watch television."

Undaunted, McGovern pressed on. "Even if that's true, this show has been on for four years. It's a crummy show. The American people consider this show an insult to their intelligence. Let's give them educational television. I used to be a college professor, you know."

The network President turned to his friend, Lou Harris. "Mr. Harris, do the American people want education television?" Harris, smiling, turned to him and said, "No sir, they want to watch I've Got A Secret." The network President looked at McGovern as if it were a fait accompli. McGovern persisted.

"Just give me a chance. I'll go on TV and explain my case to the American people. I'll explain to them that the six o'clock news is more important than fun and games. I'll tell them how Nixon put a detecting device on my television so he'd know what I was watching all the time. I'll tell them that if I'm elected, the war will be taken off the six o'clock news, so they'll be able to watch it again. Just give me a chance, OK?"

The network President agreed. McGovern and his friend, Tom Eagleton, would have a chance to go on television. When they arrived at the studio, however, something terrible happened. As they tried to give their broadcast, old reruns of Medical Center appeared on the monitors, and on all the TV sets across America. McGovern looked at the monitors in surprise. There, along with Chad Everett, was Tom Eagleton, guest starring on Medical Center.

McGovern realized that Eagleton wouldn't do as a friend. Everyone would think Tom Eagleton was really sick. McGovern told Eagleton to beat it, but the director of the show informed him he had to have a friend with him, in case he lost his voice. McGovern began calling people. He called Ted Kennedy, Ed Muskie, and almost a dozen people before finally Ted Kennedy's brother-in-law was called. "Would you like to be on television?" He said sure, and came to the studio.

By the time Sargent Shriver arrived, many people had already turned off their TV sets, and McGovern's time was dwindling by the second. He talked in circles for a while. Then he took some calls from the audience. Everyone who called in wanted to know about Eagleton, or about some of the things McGovern had said. No one wanted to talk about I've Got A Secret.

Just as his time was running out, McGovern asked if he could go on I've Got A Secret that night. The network President agreed.

As soon as the challengers were seated on I've Got A Secret, George McGovern stood up and shouted, "Will the real Richard Nixon please stand up?" Everyone looked at the challengers. The one on the left stirred, the one on the right growled, and the one in the middle smiled. None of them stood up. McGovern turned to the camera, and shouted at the TV audience: "This show's contract is about to run out, and the real Richard Nixon won't stand up. Everyone who wants this show to go off the air, turn your dials to the educational station nearest you." Then he sat down.

All over the country, little gadgets counted who was watching educational television, and who was watching I've Got A Secret. Finally the network president turned to his friend, and asked, "Mr. Neilson, what do the American people want to watch?" Mr. Neilson smiled and replied, "In Massachusetts, everyone's watching Sesame Street on Channel Two. Everywhere else they're all watching I've Got A Secret.

Just then the phone rang. It was the producer of Sesame Street, who offered George McGovern a chance to do ten push-ups on his show. McGovern declined.

McGovern went back onto the set of I've Got A Secret. He spoke briefly, thanking everyone who watched Channel Two. He said, "If we've shortened this show's run by one day, it was worth it." Then he left.

Richard Nixon finished taping the show, confident he would get a new contract. The next morning he found his phantom voting booth and inside was four more years, from America, which has a lot of time.

That is the true Bokononist explanation for the re-election of Richard Nixon. The problem is not that we are a nation of Bokononists, but that Bokononism is for too many people a shameful secret. It shouldn't be a secret any longer, however. The results of Tuesday's election are clear. In a nation of Bokononists, nothing succeeds like a good lie.

In order to gain some perspective as to why I would risk the hook and admit my Bokononism in order to write these truths, a few words from Bokonon himself might be in order:

Bug got to crawl,
Bird got to fly,
Man got to ask himself, why, why, why?

Bug got to stop,
Bird got to land,
Man got to say he understand.

Investigating U.S. War Crimes In Vietnam

By LIBERATION News Service

"What sadness! Formerly, the fragrance of ripening rice would fill the ricefields. I would see flowers opening their blossoms everywhere in the forests. How beautiful it was for us!"

–traditional singer, a refugee from the Plain of Jars, Laos

"I have come into politics because of one person–Hitler. In Vietnam, Nixon is playing the same role." Frode Jakobsen, Danish member of Parliament and former delegate to the UN, told a press conference at the Church Center for the United Nations last October 16.

Jakobsen was one of six people who recently arrived from Copenhagen where they had been attending the third session of the International Commission of Inquiry, into U.S. Crimes in Indochina.

The others were: Anthony Russo, former Rand Corporation analyst and codefendant with Daniel Ellsberg in the Pentagon Papers trial; Senator Ernest Gruening (Alaska), one of the two U.S. Senators to vote against the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution; Derek Roebuck, Dean of Law School, Hobarth, Tasmania, Australia, an authority on International Law; Fred Branfman, Director of Project Air War in Washington D.C.; and Mary Kaufman, Professor of Law at Antioch College, and a former prosecutor at the Nuremberg trials.

The Commission of Inquiry is made up of people who are expert in some aspect of the Indochina conflict. By presenting fully documented evidence of the war crimes being committed by the United States in Southeast Asia they are not only recording the events for history, but are also appealing to the governments of the world to bring pressure on the United States.

Ultimately, they see their work as aiming for an end to the war and the assurance of self-determination for the people of Southeast Asia, and as far as possible, the restoration of what is theirs.

Ms. Kaufman explained that "the Committee does not purport to be a body with power to impose sanctions–our goal is to present evidence of the crimes while the evidence exists."

To this end, the Committee has met three times. The first session, in Stockholm in October, 1970, established that the use of chemical and biological weapons in Southeast Asia was of such a scope as to demonstrate a conscious attempt to commit genocide.

The second meeting, in June of 1971, uncovered the serious implications for future generations in Indochina and added ecocide to the list of charges against the U.S. This session also recorded the high incidence of violence and terror against the civilian population of South Vietnam and asserted that My Lai was only one in a series of similar massacres.

The third session, which was still in progress on October 14, 1972, further proved that the United States carried out these policies knowingly and purposefully. Their research included testimony by GIs and government workers who had taken part in the war as well as evidence supplied by victims of U.S. bombing.

Yves Lacoste, a well known French geographer and professor at the University of Paris, provided a complete report on the bombing of the Red River dikes and the probable consequences of that bombing, based on his visit to North Vietnam in August of this year.

Lacoste's group, which included former Attorney General Ramsey Clark, reported evidence of bombing of civilian targets, including hospitals, churches and schools, and testified that the dikes in the Red River Delta had been systematically bombed. Huge residential areas of Hanoi, Haiphong and Nam Dinh were completely destroyed and the city of Binh Dinh was wiped out.

Frode Jakobsen, who was also part of the fact-finding mission to North Vietnam, explained to reporters in New York that there was no way that the dikes could constitute a military target. With a few exceptions, he said, the dikes are not constructed to hold anti-aircraft guns, nor do

A South Vietnamese villager carries wounded youngster to an aid station near Song Vei, south of Danang.

He described a series of dikes 3/4 mile long, marked all along the length by bomb craters. Not one bomb fell more than 100 feet away from the dikes.

He also described one hamlet he had seen, that could not even be reached by car–hardly constituting a military target–that the group reached by wading through knee-deep mud, the sounds of screaming and crying getting louder as they approached the nearly leveled hamlet.

"If I venture to comment even further than as an eye witness," Jakobsen said, "Nixon cannot continue to do that (bomb) without committing what is called in the Geneva Convention #48–genocide."

Jakobsen said that many people have asked him why, as a Dane, he will attack an allied country, the United States. "I admit that we owe a lot to the United States, and if that is so then we owe them the truth. If we told ourselves it is better to remain silent then we would be bad allies. We must say what we believe–America has lost this war."

Asked why he thought the United Nations has remained silent throughout the war, Jakobsen replied, "because the UN can do nothing when the big powers do nothing. The United States would use its veto, and in the General Assembly it could carry more than one third–there are so many countries that are dependent on the United States."

Derek Roebuck read a detailed account of one North Vietnamese woman's experiences during and after a bombing attack. Her mother and baby were both killed, and most of the rest of her family, herself included, were injured. "Nixon took my father's eye," she told him. Roebuck told the reporters that the Vietnamese do not continue Nixon with the entire American population..."You can hear them say 'Nixon' in their language...you can hear the emotion in their voices."

Senator Gruening brought up Secretary of State Rogers' hypocritical speech to the UN about "Arab terrorism." Rogers complained that you can't even open a letter anymore without worrying about a bomb going off in your hands.

"But what is the source of these bombs?" Gruening asked the small audience. "These are the gravel bombs the United States devise, and then dropped thousands of them all over Vietnam, so that any time, even after the war is over, a child could be walking along, step on one of these and blow his leg off."

And the gravel bombs are only a small part of the air war. Fred Branfman spoke to the press about the increased use of B52s and drones, pilotless plans that are less precise than pilot-guided planes but are cheaper to make and operate and keep the attacker at a safer distance.

He cited the advancements made in the Rockeye bomb, which can shatter into such small fragments that not only are they almost impossible to locate or remove, but often escape the notice of their victim until infection has set in and it is too late to do anything about it.

This particular bomb is being tested in Northern Laos, Branfman reported. He believes that the situation in Indochina is the worst it has been in 25 years–"It's not really a war anymore...it's pure slaughter."

Anthony Russo described a report that had been prepared between 1964 and 1970 and which he himself had worked on at one point. This 60,000 page report included testimony of prisoners in South Vietnam, and was prepared by the Rand Corporation under the direct supervision of Fred Ikle, one of Henry Kissinger's closest friends.

Russo also cited reports that proved that the government had full knowledge of My Lai and many incidents like it. "Richard Nixon is the greatest mass murderer that history has ever known," Russo said, "and anyone who votes for him will have blood on his hands."

Mary Kaufman recalled the case of Japanese General Tomoyuki Yamashita who surrendered his command of the Phillipines to Douglas MacArthur in 1945. Yamashita was subsequently tried and convicted by a U.S. military court for war crimes committed by men under his command. Yamashita was convicted not because he ordered or even knew about their actions, but because according to the court he should have known. The Supreme Court denied his appeal and he was hanged on February 23, 1946.

The case with Nixon is even more clear, Ms. Kaufman and Russo pointed out. He should know about the actions of his men and he does.

Also at the press conference which Thich Thien Chau, president of the Buddhist Association in Paris. He explained to the press that the Vietnamese people were willing and ready to work together to rebuild their country, but that this could not be done until the United States withdraws and Thieu is removed from power. He denied the assertion of Fr. McLaughlin, advisor to President Nixon, that the Buddhists and the Catholics in Vietnam support the president.

At the conclusion of the press conference, New York representative Herman Badillo announced that he was going to have the entire session read into the Congressional Record.

Anyone wishing more information about the press conference or any of the documents mentioned in it, should contact Redress, the group that organized the session, at 235 East 49th Street, 3rd floor, New York, N.Y. 10017. Redress is an anti-war group composed of artists, writers, scholars, lawyers, clergy, business and professional people.

Street Theatre: Captivated, Not Captive

By Mel Gussow
Special to The New York Times

OSSINING, N.Y., May 26—Inmates in prison would seem to be a completely captive audience. But at the Ossining Correctional Facility—which used to be called Sing Sing Prison—attendance at theatricals is voluntary.

Prisoners in the audience can talk back, fall asleep, walk out, or loudly demonstrate their approval. Performers must captivate the audience.

The Street Theater, an Ossining-based traveling troupe that plays in prisons as well as on streets, stages only plays it considers relevant to its audience—such as Ed Bullins's "Street Sounds" and Imamu Baraka's "Dutchman."

Recently The Street Theater staged Lonne Elder's "Ceremonies in Dark Old Men" at Sing Sing—and the inmates were warmly and vocally responsive, cheering the characters as if they were heroes of the home team.

When Ensley-Everett in the lead role of Russell B. Parker reminisced about his days on the chain gang, the prisoners collapsed in helpless laughter. And a few of the guards, who had watched much of the rest of the play impassively, smiled broadly.

INMATES PLAY TO INMATES

Clay Stevenson, a director with The Street Theater, which was founded two years ago by Gray Smith, also runs a theater workshop at Sing Sing, and yesterday—for the first time—the members of the workshop presented an entertainment for their fellow inmates.

With only two weeks' preparation, "Prison Sounds," an original 2-hour-and-20-minute collage of short plays, monologues, poems and music, all of it written by inmates, was presented in the Sing Sing chapel. Both actors and audience rose to the occasion—with waves of identification going back and forth from stage to pews.

When one actor came to a halt in the middle of a monologue, a member of the audience shouted, "You forgot, huh?" The actor grinned, lifted his hands in defeat, and left the stage.

The only thing the audience refused to accept was sentimentality. One love poem delivered by the author, received a stony reception. With the line "snowflakes falling on rooftops," the audience jeered in disbelief.

But anger, mockery, humor—particularly when directed against the Establishment—were greeted with roars of approval.

A MAJOR CONTRIBUTOR

Twelve of the 20 contributions were written by 25-year-old Miguel G. Pinero, an inmate who acted in many of his own scenes and in a few others as well. He resembled Melvin Van Peebles, with no end to his diversification.

The show began with Pinero's tone-setting poem, "Song of Sing Sing," which "richochets from cell to cell...from the keepers to the keep...within the wall of Sing Sing."

His "Black Woman With the Blond Wig On" was a satirical monologue about a preening homosexual. "All Junkies" studied three drug addicts doddering on a street corner.

Members of the Street Theatre on campus next Monday night.

One explained "high" school:

"When you go to high school, you're high all the time—so they call it high school."

When Pinero acted in his own work, such as "Genesis," it particularly delighted the audience. The poem began:

Before the beginning God created God
In the beginning God created the ghettos and the slums
And God saw this was good
So God said Let there be more

By the fourth day, Pinero's God "was riding around Harlem in a gypsy cab," and on the seventh day, "God was tired so he collected his overtime pay, called in sick, took a paid vacation included," then changed his mind, called a press conference and "told the people to be cool."

After works by other convicts, including a one-act fantasy by A.K. Madsen, in which Pinero played a murderous demon, the show closed with two contrasting poems by Pinero. The first was a harsh view of prison life," which ran in part:

"...correctional facility and rehabilitation means prisoners running around with bars and steel in their minds guards and stones on their backs"

The second, hopeful, if not exactly optimistic, ends:

"Perhaps tomorrow will be my today to become my yesterday or perhaps where I will need no tomorrow PERHAPS TOMORROW..."

The audience stood, fists raised in salute, and several prisoners shouted, "Right On!" The actors beamed their appreciation and their relief.

As the director, Mr. Stevenson, said: "When professional actors perform for inmates, they leave the audience after the show. When the inmates put on a show, they go home to the audience."

Backstage, Pinero, surrounded by his fellow actors and writers, talked as he changed from his costume back to his prison garb. Born in Puerto Rico, he grew up in New York City slums. "I enjoyed my life as a kid," he said - even though a prison psychiatrist later told him he was "culturally deprived and psychologically underdeveloped."

AFRAID AT FIRST

He never felt deprived or underdeveloped, but he was in and out of school ("The only reason I got to seventh grade was that I was too old for sixth grade") and in and out of trouble.

"I'm a quarter of a century old," he said. He has spent seven years in jail. This January he began serving a five-year sentence for second-degree robbery.

For some time he had been writing poems and destroying them. "When I came to Sing Sing I would write in my cell, but I was afraid to show stuff to people," he said. Then one day he joined Clay Stevenson's workshop, and began writing in earnest.

Marvin Felix Camillo, a professional actor with The Street Theater submitted Pinero's "Black Woman With the Blond Wig On" to a contest sponsored by the Greenburgh Arts and Culture Committee and to the author's astonishment, it tied for second place.

"The only thing I won before," he said, "was five years in prison."

His artistic reputation is already spreading. Several of his pieces will be performed by the Soul and Latin Theater in its summer tour, and another is scheduled to be seen on Channel 13.

NOTES EFFECT

Pinero said that even for those inmates who did not want to be writers or actors, the workshop was having a beneficial effect. In the workshops the inmates improvise scenes that reflect their own life-style, and also exchange roles - pretending to be guards of parole boards. "We can stretch outselves," Pinero said.

In Sing Sing he has also been promoting the expansion of a library of books in Spanish. "We now have 250 books," he said proudly. "Before, there were only two books."

Writing, he said, "will give me an alternative to being a shipping clerk." He indicated that he planned to go into street theater when he got out, instead of back on the street.

Then he pointed to the now-empty stage and said: "That's my 10-dollar bag out there! Like wow!"

The Street Theatre of Ossining, N.Y., will present one of its most noted productions, Richard Wesley's "The Black Terror" Monday, Nov. 13, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at UMass.

This engagement is the second event of the new Third World Cultural Series being presented this year by the Fine Arts Council in conjunction with the University's Third World Alliance.

Currently, the Street Theatre is presenting several plays in New York, including Mr. Wesley's revolutionary adventure, and last summer was selected to participate in the Lincoln Center Community Street Theatre Festival. Writing of Richard Wesley's "The Black Terror", the noted New York Times critic Walter Kerr described the performance as "...verbal heat...not just jawing, genuine heat...Must blacks force protest to the point of violent revolution now, even at the price of being exterminated, or is it wiser for an assassin to live to assassinate, if need be, another day? But when Mr. Wesley comes to an ultimate narrowing down, to the ravaging two scenes in which a reluctant young killer and his fiercely committed mistress thrash out the issue with teeth bared and love abandoned, he delivers more than polemic. The contest becomes personal, it affects flesh, slogans give way as the people catch fire."

Sing-Sing Prison is one of the various Eastern locations where the company has performed. The company makes its UMass debut with its Nov. 13 performance. Tickets to "The Black Terror" are available at $1.50 ($1 to full-time UMass undergrads) through the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall,

On The College Music Circuit

In Concert: J. Geils Band/Earth, Wind & Fire -- Springfield College, Nov. 4, 1972
NRBQ/Clean Living -- Mount Holyoke, Nov. 5, 1972

When last heard from, your fearless music critic was being mercilessly buffeted in his erstwhile attempts at concert-going. All summer he had been put in hockey rinks and football stadiums and charged $6.00 to sit in the third balcony/or fifty yards from the stage. "Are they on yet?" "Who? Where?" "Look, he's waving!"

So it was a great relief to escape the clutches of Don Law and Cable Music and The Kibitzers and all. Trouble is, the homespun productions are always an adventure as you never know what will go wrong, but you know something will.

It was in desperation and hope that I turned to two local concerts for relief from the (yes indeed) fear and loathing I'd come to feel toward seeing the glory of live music.

"This is our Homecoming Concert, and we've got two groups here that represent the black and white cultures," said the nebbish on the stage at Springfield College. J. Geils representing the white culture? Half the songs they play are written by blacks. If the idiot rascals were called the blackest white band of all, where does that put J. Geils?

Earth, Wind & Fire played an up and down set, mostly down. They opened with an expanding, flowing piece that sounded like Weather Report in a light mood. From there, though, it was mostly starvation, as they managed to hit every commercial black musical cliche. Osibisa, Sly, Isaac Hayes, Billy Preston, The Temptations, Aretha Franklin, on down the line. None of the eight piece band did anything exceptionally well, but they did pull off some slick tricks on stage, and did some nice things with a strange musical finger box called a kalimba. My companion called their performance "an hour and forty-five minutes of torture." They weren't quite that bad, but they were close. They were far better, for example, than their latest album, Last Days and Time, which is horrendous.

During their set they sang some of the limpest, weakest, most pitiful lyrics I've ever, ever heard. For ten minutes they tried to get us to sing along with them. "The world needs children, Hooray for the children". We love money, Hooray for the money.

Also during their set, they asked the crowd to stand up. We did for a while, then got a good earful of the schlock they were playing and sat down. They asked us to get up again, and some of us did, and they put us down again. Once more they tried to get us up, and a few did, but they were playing the kind of music that gets the crowd on its feet only to leave.

It's a fact that no good band ever has to ask an audience to sing or dance. A great band of course has trouble keeping things down. So it was, right after "the three elements of the universe" finished playing, 1500 of the 3000 people in the Field House decided to get right in front of the stage for J. Geils. That didn't work too well, but good music makes an audience forget that it's standing on itself, and J. Geils was ready to play.

This band is obscene just walking on stage. J. Geils' purple pants, Stephen Bladd has no shame at all, Magic Dick is still called Magic Dick, Seth Justman is from Pittsfield, Danny Klein has a V-shaped pink bass that is just plain lewd, and Peter Wolf is still alive.

Their show was a combination of old and new. They did about five new numbers ("South Side Shuffle" is a hot one) in addition to their more famous tunes. Particularly blockbusting were "Serve You Right To Suffer", done like on Full House, "Whammer Jammer", better than on Full House, "Lookin' For A Love", their best version of this hit yet, with a great long drawn-out ending a la Fillmore's Grateful Dead and "Casey Jones", and "First I Look At The Purse", done Full House style.

The major complaint about their set is the one found at almost every homemade production: the sound. EW&Fire sounded fine (yippee!) but for some reason J. Geils' guitar and Wolf's vocals kept drifting in and out, left to right. The result was that on a third of their show, we on the right side heard only harmonica, organ and drums/bass. To be sure, this is a fine rhthm section, but it was like one speaker stereo. This sound-foolishness also made Wolf's insane 'tween-song commentaries inaudible. Of course when the mikes were finally fixed, Wolf was a step ahead. "Subasedasullinedah?" he say, pointing to Seth. I did hear him mumble something about "Woodrose Ballroom Blues" and hard times in Deerfield when he introduced "Whammer Jammer", so they still remember their humble beginnings.

I was apprehensive about how enthusiastic they'd be about playing Springfield, the ultimate tanktown, but they were as craza as ever. Wolf jumped on Magic Dick's back during "Lookin' For A Love", bashed Seth Justman with his foam rubber guitar and carried on all night. They did play up a storm and left us howling for more.

Another nice thing about college concerts: you can go in a half-hour before show time, pay your $3.00 (Three dollars! Remember $3.00 concerts?) and sit down fifteen feet in front of the stagé.

The next night NRBQ and Clean Living came into Chapin Auditorium at Mount Holyoke. Again, non-professional shows have great ups and deep downs. The price was right again here ($2.00) and even the stage and sound production was good. However, the two Ms. Mounties should firmly but thoughtfully get spanked for showing up fifteen minutes before show time with the tickets, thus making twenty or so true NRBQ fans truly blue waiting outside for 45 minutes.

Clean Living began, and this local outfit (snappy, huh?) is a good, competent band though unexciting. They certainly have an abundance of restrained good taste, though it didn't seem right that they should do country versions of "Party Doll", "It Takes A Lot To Laugh, It Takes A Train To Cry" and other pop and rock ditties. No one in this band is a killer on any particular instrument. They seem a lot like Area Code 615 with a similar style and philosophy. However, while Area Code 615 could outplay these boys, Clean Living have a drive and exuberance that 615 never did.

Although they ran through some great stuff, and everything that they did was well-arranged, the hit of the evening was "South Hadley's National Anthem", "In Heaven Their Is No Beer", their semi-hit single of that old Polka warhorse.

"In Heaven there is no beer
That's why we drink it here.
And when we're gone from here
Our friends will be drinking all the beer."

One of America's great undiscovered and unappreciated bands is NRBQ, a bunch of rockabillies from Kentucky. Their manager insists that they play "magic music", the kind that makes you feel great, songs like "I Wanna Hold Your Hand". They've been around for at least five years. G.T.-Staley is the drummer, and he's not flashy, but he can pull off difficult, subtle beats that few other drummers mess with. Juvenile Joey Spampinado is the weak link in the band, though he plays a competent bass. His weakness for cocktail music and lazy love songs derived from it as well as 1940-type ditties is important since the band plays his songs about a third of the time. Al Anderson is a relative newcomer on guitar, and does a good job playing and singing. The brains and main talent behind this group is Terrible Terry Adams on clavinet (A clavinet is a keyboard instrument derived from the piano. If a piano goes plunk, then a clavinet goes sproing.). Terry plays some great chops on the clavinet, sings some nice shy vocals, stomps his feet like an epilectic, and, most importantly, writes some great, great songs. Crazy Frank Gadler, who used to spin like a top while doing an occasional vocal, is gone.

NRBQ is a loose, easy-does-it-band with no ego problems, just a good time. Pure and easy. Friends. They're friends on stage, and it's not inconceivable to imagine them living down the road from you. If J. Geils is craza, NRBQ is wacky. One of their best instrumentals is a tribute to the Three Stooges. Can you imagine, say, Manassas, doing a tribute to the Three Stooges? They are so loose on stage they nearly fall apart. Staley does a spastic drum intro, Adams sings one of his best songs as if he were falling asleep. They manage to pull of things like "I love to hug/You might say I'm a huggin' bug". and sound beautiful.

Their set Sunday night wasn't as good as the one they played at UMass two years ago, but it was still fine. The played a fair assortment of stuff from their three albums as well as a healthy selection of new tunes, all of which was well-appreciated by the crowd of 400.

One final warning: don't believe the Five College Bus schedules. Otherwise you may wind up at 12:30 on a Sunday night walking two miles in nowhere with a freshman from Amherst before you get a ride home. Ask the bus driver everything.

The Spence/Libscomb Concert

By Mike McCormick

What promises to be one of the best concerts at the university this semester will be held on Friday night November 10 in the Franklin dining commons. On that evening the Central Area Council and the New Africa House will present two very fine, yet unknown musicians; Mance Libscomb and Joseph Spence.

A sharecropper all his life, Mance Libscomb has been playing his guitar around his hometown in Navasota, Texas for over 60 years. As the town musician of Navasota, Mance has learned numerous styles of guitar playing to complement a huge repetoire of songs. A typical Libscomb set might include fold, blues, waltzes, polkas, spirituals, a classical piece, rag time and a breakdown. All these songs are played with the precision of a man with over 60 years playing experience, and with the vitality of a 25 year old. Although most of Mance's gigs have been at colleges, he has been invited to both the Newport and Berkley Folk Festivals. Mance's recorded output consists of six albums, five on Arhoolie and one on Reprise.

Libscomb's first album, recorded in 1960, influenced Bob Dylan amongst others. His inexhaustable repetoire of songs and knowledge of past traditions has proved very stimulating to folklorists and song collectors such as Pete Seeger.

Joseph Spence has spent most of his 62 years as a stone mason in Nassau. Like Mance, he possesses the vigor of a man much younger. Joseph is without doubt one of America's best guitarists. He employs a fluent style of playing which makes heavy use of complex rhythms and counterpoints. Spence also has an extremely unique voice.

Spence has made only two brief visits to this country, his most recent in 1970 to record an album and to do a concert in Boston. This album was recently recorded and released by Arhoolie Records. Spence has two other albums; one on Folkways and the other on Elektra.

Whenever these musicians play they cast a "good time feel" upon their audience. Last year an unknown musician with a "good time feel", Hound Dog Tailor was well received by the UMass audience. Here's hoping that these two very deserving musicians are greeted just as warmly.

Ornette Coleman

By Gary Gomes

Ornette Coleman
"The Skies of America"
(Columbia KC 31562)
Personal: Composer, alto saxophone - Ornette Coleman; the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by David Measham)

"I wish I knew the nature of all people whose joy and pleasure could be found in listening to music, but I do not and never will know. I'll just keep trying to write and play that which I hope will have some purpose to the joy one finds in music. I find it hard to stay unaffected by someone who does not understand or care what one does in life and when music is the subject I am as open as one in all."

–Ornette Coleman

All of Ornette Coleman's Music seems to reflect this "joy" that he is fond of referring to. Real joy (revelation; highness; life) seems lacking in most of the music we hear today. Lustre seems gone from the final process, and mechanics seem to have taken over where artists once flourished (it is, of course, a question of whether artists ever flourished at all, but I'll wait for another review to discuss that, dear reader.)

Ever since Ornette Coleman first appeared in the New York jazz circuit (he was a discovery of Percy Heath and Mel Lewis of the MJQ) in 1959, with his plastic alto saxophone ("It gives Ornette a warmer sound," explained Don Cherry), along with Don Cherry on pocket trumpet ("I can hear myself better" - Cherry), he has proceeded, in his gentle way, to provide the world with some of the most barrier-shattering music ever to be performed. And it was because, at long last, the musicians were engaging in direct conversation with the audience. He was just being himself (indeed, Coleman's music has been too honest for a lot of people to take), and Coleman never really felt the need to contrive something, and then say "People will like this" – this has led to his massive experimentation of ways of playing his instrument (he also plays trumpet and violin).

Although categorized for the sake of critics and record companies in the area called jazz (note the listings, and what is considered acceptable to people -- "Classical" (a misnomer, by the way – it should be called European music for the elite) has the highest rank, (in prestige, if not sales), rock and pop, the highest commercial rank, while jazz has a little prestige, and hardly any commercial potential – and record companies treat it as such), Coleman transcends almost all musical boundaries – he is an improviser, first and foremost, but it is this improvisational freedom that has allowed him to hear new combinations possible, with all varieties of form.

Because this album has an orchestra does not mean that it is "Classical" music – Mantovani uses strings, and that ain't "classical" in any way, shape or form.

What is it then? Well, let's just call if Ornette Coleman's music, because it is Ornette Coleman that is contained within the grooves of this album, and not an academic style.

On this album, Coleman investigates the possibilities of a new approach to composing called harmolodic modulation, meaning to modulate in range, but not in key. Coleman uses eight themes (melodies) throughout the 41 minutes and 32 seconds of the piece.

The harmolodic idea is excellent, since it gives the idea of space expanding into an otherworldliness to the listener, and the entire piece, with random tympani drum explosions, makes the listener think that something very ancient,and, at the same, time, as new as tomorrow, is happening.

The composition is segmented into twenty one individual titles, each of which have a special significance for Coleman in describing what has happened under the skies of America. The opening section is expansive, giving the impression of wide open space, which then breaks wide open into a proudness – "Native Americans". It expands and breaks under the tension and confusion of "The Good Life". All of the descriptive titles are connected in that they are common for America. A couple of really standout sections are "Holiday for Heroes" which takes a standard Coleman riff and fully orchestrates it, with all its disjunct motion and abrupt starts and stops, building to an anarchic crescendo, and "All of My Life", a Coleman song which he orchestrates with weird harmonies to offset the very melodic character of the song (It's on the "Science Fiction" LP). Perhaps one of the best things on the album is a segment called "The Artist in America", on which Coleman does a moving and well developed alto sax solo, accompanied by the orchestra first, then by tympani, with the orchestra coming in at odd times. It showcases the style of improvisation that Coleman originated, with a natural buoyancy and frequent modulation of keys, evident even when he is left alone at the end of side one.

Now, the setup of the use of a symphony orchestra and the mixing of musical ideas and idioms is of course not new. Emerson did it in 1969 (with the Nice), Zappa did it with Zuben Mehta, and other rock groups (such as Deep Purple and the Moody Blues) did it earlier. Jazz musicians have been doing it for quite awhile as well (Ornette Coleman himself joined forces with Leonard Bernstein in 1963, and has also released an earlier album, wherein he used a symphony orchestra, if I am not mistaken, which I believe is now out of print.)

However, this album is one of the freshest and most original albums I have heard in many a moon, and its feeling is unparalleled by any other orchestral piece I have ever heard (including Arnold Schoenberg's early works and Stockhausen's later things). There is one segment on side two on which Coleman solos over an every changing background, deliberately avoiding the orchestra, and often moving against it. The only other person I can imagine overriding the achievements of Ornette Coleman is Cecil Taylor, and I think that this is quite probably the third best album released this year (the other two being Robert Wyatt's English album ((The End of an Ear" and Alan Silva's Celestial Communication Orchestra on Actuel records).

So there you have it – unparalleled beauty, great emotional thrust, and the best concept of orchestration I've heard in a long time. Nothing new happening? Check out this album (or any of Coleman's or Taylor's stuff) and see how wrong you are.

Peter Townshend

By Steve Feld

Who Came First -- Peter Townshend (Decca Records)

The Who, throughout their frenzied existance, have given us a visual act that was every bit as dynamic and powerful as their blasting music. Breaking onto the rock scene at the heels of Beatlemania, they were the first of the groups to present their audiences with more than just music. The stage became a Roman arena--a scene for simulated violence and rancous exhibitions that helped establish the Who, and later made them notorious throughout the land.

For their encore way back then, they performed "My Generation", a stick of musical TNT that has since been adopted as the anthem for the Youth Movement. As smoke bombs were erupting in a flash of chaos, the group proceeded to demolish their equipment – guitars crashed and drums flew signaling the end of the show. Needless to say, no one left a Who concert the same way they arrived.

At the forefront of this ebullition was Peter Townshend. It was he who made the smashing of the guitar a celebrated ritual and a symbol of the emerging power of rock music. He was the spokesman, figurehead and defender of the Who and his name became synonymous with their pseudo-subversive posturings.

Some time between The Who Sell Out and their monumental opera Tommy, Townshend obliterated fewer and fewer guitars, he became more complacent, relaxed and (that dreadful word) intellectual. The reason for this sudden transformation was religion. He had discovered Meher Baba, avatar. With his newfound wealth, he proceeded to inscribe the Who's name in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame with Tommy, the vanguard of the rock operas and a superlative, highly distinguished piece of music. Through Baba, Townshend later revealed, Tommy was an effortless labor of love and devotion.

Peter Townshend never desired to push Baba through the music of the Who. He knew that this would be cheating and taking unfair advantage of the band's hallowed and revered name. Becoming an ardent disciple of Baba and an acknowledged spokesman of his discourses, he chose to glibly articulate his sentiments to those who approached him.

Townshend on Baba: "Meher Baba works in a way where one of the first things you realize is that you're dealing with a completely different set of emotions and values. You can completely thrust the most delicate part of your make-up – the spiritual part – to Him. If you focus your life on Him, your focusing on the highest possible manifestation of consciousness. He returns your love with such an overwhelming force that sometimes it just knocks you flat on your back."

Baba afforded Townshend a crowning inspiration, and Peter fluently penned songs of his dedication. Who Came First is the first official compilation of these songs and a collection of tender, sensitive and highly personal compositions. They all succeed in revealing to us a heretofore hidden side of Townshend; a comforting look at a vulnerable yet assured follower pledging his eternal allegiance.

Thank God that the production is not elaborate or ethereal, as was the case with the pseudo-spiritualness of All Things Must Pass and all the other shlock, insincere, money-making attempts dealing with the divine wisdom. Who Came First impresses me as the most introvertive and subjective experiences on record since Lennon's primal album. "All instruments, vocals, recording, engineering, mixing, synthesizers, in fact everything except making the tea in one gynomouse (Why isn't that word in my dictionary?) ego trip by Pet Townshend", he writes on the back cover. It's simple, low-keyed and a very human record because Pete wanted it that way.

"Pure and Easy" is an extension and elaboration of "Song is Over", a magnificent opus from Who's Next. It's adorning melody succeeds in establishing and sustaining the after-hours mood of the album. "Nothing is Everything (Let's See Action)" and "Time is Passing" are songs that the Who recorded for Who's Next but proved themselves to be unfit for the group's attributes, hence Townshend re-recorded them for himself. They are as fine, may I add, as several of the offerings in Who's Next: the former being a plea for a spiritual revolution, the latter being delightfully reminiscent of "Going Mobile". "Sheraton Gibson" is a charming acoustic number about lonliness and "Content" has gospel progressions set to a poem describing tranquility. Townshend also performs a dated song that was an old favorite of Meher Baba's, "Heartache".

The impact, significance and ultimate meaning of Who Came First is not made clear until "Parvardigar", the closing song which is actually a beautiful prayer to Baba:

"You always were, always are and always will be,
You are everywhere, in everything and beyond,
In the fermament and in the sea,
On all the seven plains and farther on,
In all that's hidden to our eyes, in all we see...."

Townshend once again: "We don't know why we're here, but occasionally man gets very complacent about what he's actually doing here. People become overwhelmed by progress and moon shots – that's just evolution. Evolution is always gonna happen; it will go on and on and on yet man will be in the same position. Until they turn on themselves and look inward, they'll always keep evolving. There will always be better machines; science will never stop. It is an infinite process and this is the nature of infinity."*

It's quite impossible to argue with the changes that Peter Townshend has gone through since becoming a follower of Meher Baba. He has since condemned the use of drugs and alcohol, has become more intelligent, aware and dedicated. His love for music is second only, perhaps to his love for Baba. Listening to him we hear the music, and Who Came First is a product of a man to whom we should all listen.

J. Geils

By Mike Kostek

time: 32:54

Listen to this: "J. Giles' latest, Full House, is a live album in every sense of the word. Destined to be a definative work in its field, the album is hard core rock and roll which has had an impact which is nothing short of phenomenal." Of course that's taken from an Atlantic ad, and, like all commercial hype, is not totally true. However, unlike most hype, this description of Full House is very, very close to the reality of the situation.

J. GEILS BAND
"LIVE"

FULL HOUSE

What we've got here is not a handful of French love beans, as the ad suggests, but rather the third album released by J. Giles Band. And it's live and a true rocker's delight. Before I get incoherent in babbling Full House's praises, let's ferret out the drawbacks of this release:

First, the material has all been recorded before, and most of it is played in the same arrangement as before. Because the band plays mostly hard rockers in a dense, unrelenting style with few solos or other changes, thier material is often quick to wear out, like Creedence's. J. Giles Band plays songs with just one thread the listener can follow: power. Unlike Zappa or the Beatles or other diverse music makers, there aren't a lot of facets audible in their music. They don't play for the lyrics, they don't play to expand any musical horizons, and besides Magic Dick Sawitz on harmonica and steady J. Giles on geetar, they don't mess with long solos. This is a performing band and they exist to play live. Most of the material on their two studio albums was done in one take with little or no overdubbing, and no studio effects. J. Giles in the studio is the same J. Giles on stage though not as good. No, you can appreciate J. Giles' music only when you want to pick up that raunch power thread. That is what this band is about, and they do it beautifully.

Second, the total time of the album is a big factor. Like their other albums, Full House is barely a half hour. A great half hour to be sure, but when you've gotten hot after playing it once, there's nowhere to go but to turn it over and start again, and nothing kills tight power rock as fast as repeated playings in a short time span. So my advice sir is to beat this by playing Full House then The Morning After then J. Giles Band, start cycle again, drop out of school, etc.

Third, there is no video cassette available to go with this record. One of the great live shows is put on by these boys, and if you've ever seen them your memories will be able to light up the black vinyl, shooting the music into 3D, and sending you reaching for the volume knob, turning it up, up, up....making it crazy.

"Are you ready to get down? Are you ready fo' rocknroll? Less heerit for J. Giles Ban." Howls. Shouts. Screams. Bang, machine gun drums, and they're off and running with "First I Look At The Purse", the perfect song to open a show, any show, but especially this one in Detroit, being Smokey Robinson's MoTown. More then that, this one song almost captures J. Giles stage image of rough and ready, swaggering crass self-indulgent gut grabbers, up there for a good stompin' time.

"I wan me a soot
I wan me a cawr
I wan me to look
Lak uh Hallywud staw.
I wan MONEY.
M—O—N—E—Y, babe"

Peter Wolf, the singer, is in almost perfect voice, half hoarse, but still able to scream and shout. "Googabooga!" yells Wolf in the middle. I agree. A great powerhouse sock Wolf in the middle. I agree. A "Purse" ends with that great chopchop speedup slowdown ending, and someone in the crowd yells, right in time, "The College of Musical Knowledge!" and we shoot into a short version of "Homework" which is a good pick-up over the original.

"Homework" which is a good pick-up over the original.

"Whoooooo!
Blllluuulllluuulllwwaaaaa
Whop!" yells Wolf.
"Weeeellllll....." he says, trailing out. Silence. I can see him holding the mike way over his head in a great exaggerated silence. He and the band are frozen solid in the pregnant pause for as long as it took you to read to here from "Weelll". Finally Wolf bites it off, "Isaidnomoreslippin'ndogginro unwithyou". The band erupts and we are being slammed full force by "Pack Fair And Square", again shorter and better than the studio job. Song ends and applause rolls in, fading out slowly. We come up on a little episode performed in one of the speakers: The principles are Peter Wolf and Magic Dick Sawitz.

Says Wolf, "I said we gotta get it crazy tonight, you gonna get it crazy tonight?"

"I'll get down to it," replies Dick quietly and assuredly.

"I said you gonna get it craza?" repeats Wolf.

"I'll get down to it." repeats Dick in the same definitely uncraza tone.

"I said you gonna moogaogoogadanoogadanoo
gettmakeoitganooonoodano odamakeit getitalldown getitallright getitallnight getitallround makeitallright makeitouttasight and getit-down, baby?"

"Eah!!" yells Magic Dick, eyes popping at the realization that he is obviously dealing with a madman who will be satisfied with nothing short of great craziness.

"Whammer Jammer' let me hear you, Dickie!"

Magic Dick plays the intro really slow in the studio, trying to get a greater contrast when the drums and guitar come in to sweep the song up and out, but on stage, "Whammer Jammer" is his showcase and he plays the intro with a demonic face-blowing frenzy that kills the other dead. Then the drums and guitar come in and they all get up and fly round and round, stooping to the ground only twice, once for the "bup bup bup" of the bass drum break, and again for the end. Jesus, that's enough to drive you home, but right at the end Magic Dick yells out in a high hoarse voice "One Two Three" and LOOK OUT....

"Oh babe...babe...babe" yells Peter over the highway driving beat and "Hard Drivin' Man" starts. Drivin' just as hard as they can, this is the absolute gem of the album, and one of the great power tunes of all times. As one of my colleagues would say, "A classic!" It flows along harmlessly until the middle, and some great chicken pickin' by J. Giles, and it's the beginning of the end:

"We gonna motorvate this one, you gotta help us. Like this, watch. You heard of the Boogaloo?"

"YEAH" howls the helpless crowd.

"You heard a the Philly Freeze?"

"YEAH"

"We got the De-Troit Demolition for ya' here tonight!"

goes the crowd, now lost in total frenzy.

That's it. Going, going, gone. Grand Slam! School's out, it's curtains for dragging feet. The band members are set off one by one, J. Giles and Magic Dick start dropping in those monster solid chunk chords, Seth Justman is banging away on his old piano, Danny Klein is building up and up with heavier and louder bass patterns, Wolf is screaming "Drivin', I'm drivin' " as he leaps ten feet off the stage, and once Steve Bladd flips in that climactic drum roll, it's over! The band is blazing, the crowd has exploded and the grooves have split open in total, craza, demented frenzy. This sails on until the chorus, and everyone lets go in exhaustion. We're back down, but what a rush.

Like "Hard Drivin' Man", Side One is beautifully paced. A big slammer opener in "Purse", two short blasts from the past, "Homework" and "Fair & Square", a gut buster, "Whammer Jammer" followed up directly by the masterpiece.

Side Two is also paced well, but fails to climax the entire affair in a manner befitting the great stuff that went down before it.

So as to let us catch our breath, "Serve You Right To Suffer" starts this side. Her is J. Giles' showpiece with some great, great power guitar. He's not a great player, but he knows that it's not what you play but how you play it. Wolf howls in the background, girls are screaming in the crowd, and the tension is almost unbearable as they rock along. You know they're going to grab onto some great trick, and you just can't wait. Finally, Giles cracks open a long, long high note that breaks into a down scale slide that ends it. Great power blues with some nice South Side Chicago-Muddy Waters lickin' stick by Magic Dick in between.

With excellent sound recording and great mixing, Full House is an instant pick-up. This is the record to play if your favorite teams are from Cincinnati and you've spent the entire afternoon watching the Reds get bad-hopped out of the Series and the Bengals blow their game to the rotten Rams.

One of the hardest things to do on record is to truly capture a group's spirit. Live recordings are usually better suited to this task than studio, but even most live session miss some part of the band's total picture. Full House is a perfect picture of where these Boston rockers are. Full House has been carefully crafted, shaped, planned and put together. The result is a record that's as strong, exciting, powerful and fun as any other live record ever made, save The Who's incomparable Live At Leeds.

Tom Rapp

FAMILIAR SONGS -- Tom Rapp (Reprise Records)

Not much is known about this man Tom Rapp. He veils his life with such secrecy that makes Bob Dylan seem like an exhibitionist. This we do know: he was the leader of the esoteric, enigmatic folk group called Pearls Before Swine. With the group he recorded six excellent but discreet record albums. The first two were on a mysterious, avant-garde label called ESP Records. Other artists on this calling were the early Fugs and Charles Manson.

Through these collectors items, the major record companies heard of him, and Warner Brothers grabbed him. This was too bad because none of his subsequently released Pearls Before Swine albums succeeded in making back their money. Most of them can be found at your local bargain bin.

Nevertheless, the cults that did form around Pearls Before Swine (which was actually Tom Rapp and whoever tagged along with him) felt richly satisfied with their records. As was the case with Randy Newman, another slow starting performer, the record label stuck with him and here we finally have Rapp's long-awaited solo debut. Compared to his other albums, this one is a stand-out; it has excellent musicianship, finer arrangements, and crisp production. Congratulations are in order to Warners for giving Rapp the money and attention it took to make this record. Let's hope it won't be in vain.

Tom Rapp has a Dylan-like drawl in his singing that proves to be very amusing (Rapp and Dylan both hail from Minnesota). He writes his own material, with particular attention given to the lyrics, which are often deep, profound, and filled with clever word plays and innuendos. He is in many ways similar to the previously mentioned Randy Newman, although Rapp tends to be more melancholic and less satiric. He has a disturbing tendency to follow major-first chords with minor-thirds, and also, to metaphorsize rain and clouds too frequently with misfortune.

Familiar Songs is an alluring blend of five new songs and five songs already performed with PBS. The old ones are perked up, rearranged and reproduced enough so to easily justify their presence, while the new ones are all worthy of their composer. It is an album that demands concentration, for every phrase is carefully designed for maximum emotional impact. A set of lyrics is most conspicuously absent.

In the meantime, here is a sample of Rappian word play extracted from this album:

"I do not want to escape reality. I want reality to escape from me." – "Sail Away"

"All at once I was alone, but only when you were there." -- "If You Don't Want To (I Don't Mind)"

"My snow queen has no eyes, she will see me in her mind/And the things she left behind must make her lonely/We must touch each other in our blindness, snow queen." – "Snow Queen"

Perhaps Tom Rapp's finest piece of work ever is his cryptic, allegorical masterpiece, "The Jeweler", whose lyrics emerge as classic:

"The jeweler has a shop on the corner of the boulevard.

In the night, in small spectacles, he polishes old coins,

He uses spit and cloth and ashes,

He knows the use of ashes;
He worships God with ashes.

The coins are often very old by the time they reach the jeweler.

With his hands in ashes he will try the best he can.

He knows that he can only shine them.

Cannot repair the scratches;
He knows that even new coins have scars,

So he just smiles.

In the darkness of the night both his hands will blister badly.

They will often open painfully, and the blood flows from his hands.

He wishes he could cure the scars, when he forgets he sometimes cries.

He knows the use of ashes
He worships God with ashes."
– "The Jeweler"

Each of these ten songs are completely separate entities to be reckoned with - a superficial listening will not do. The album won't brighten anybody's day, since the despondent lyrics are accompanied by melodies often in minor keys. It will, however, serve as an emotionally explosive introduction into a most intriguing and talented artist.

Confrontations None Too Private

By Patrick Sullivan

Essene
A film by Frederick Wiseman. To be shown Monday, 11/13, 8 p.m., Channel 57.

Viewers of Wiseman's previous documentaries (Titicut Follies, High School, Law and Order, Hospital, and Basic Training) may feel a quiet astonishment at the nature and the impact of Wiseman's new film: Essene does not take place in the gritty, ominous corridors of a prison or oppressive high school, nor in the congested interiors of an urban hospital nor in the all too representative streets of a large American city. The film looks at, pays attention to an Anglican religious community which on the surface has little or no connection to the urgent social and economic problems of the previous films. A monastery in a rural setting -- what could constitute a more radical departure from the concerns of those earlier visions of institutional inhumanity? In Essene we watch instead the rituals, routines, the exchanges among a group of men committed to a life which secludes them from the deterioration of cities, the profanities of schooling, the anxieties and paralysis of so many institutional roles.

Here instead of routine cruelty to a prisoner or student we have a benevolent laying on of hands in a monastery's Pentacostal prayer service, instead of tough white talk to a tough Black juvenile we have a soft-toned discourse from the abbot regarding pharisaical and Christian definitions of law, instead of tears of shame, rage, and frustration in the other films we have the tears of a long-haired postulant as he describes his difficulty in becoming a part of the community.

With all these dissimilarities, then, why will viewers familiar with Wiseman's previous work feel strongly that they are watching a Wiseman film, and perhaps a more profound kind of Wiseman film than we have seen before? By this I mean that when the social -- largely institutional -- targets of condemnation are removed from the scene, Wiseman is able to concentrate on the irreducible problems in formulating and sustaining even the most ideal, the most pastoral sort of community.

For in Essene there are no reverential lingerings on a life of piety and composed ritualization of experience. We do see individuals alone, but we see them alone with faces familiar in their need for attention, understanding, recognition. We see men at prayer, but the prayers are always for human needs to be met, gratitude to be expressed, hopes to be given a social validity. In this most private and withdrawn of settings -- a monastery -- the basic questions of public life are revealed.

I say most ideal in the sense that here is a group supposedly united in a common faith, and each person freely committed to the role and responsibility he undertakes as a member of the community. In each of the other films we watch exercises in coercive and punitive behavior, whether overt or implied. The community portrayed in Essene suffers from no such obvious disability. So an individual's conduct, speech, mode of coming to grips with self-definition and communal responsibility, do not here reach out so quickly to larger social and economic crises over which the individual has little control.

The viewer's attention then becomes more focused on the quite specific collisions between a quite limited number of individuals. The examination of social issues in this film is not accumulated through a quick-cut sort of collage sequence of particulars so much as it is achieved through the close-quartered, representative drama of reconciling self-discovery and contentment with social responsibility and cooperativeness. The film as a whole is paced with several short sequences conveying the daily realities and routines of life in monastery: farming, meals, drive to town. But Essene's special energy, complexity, and dramatic unity Wiseman achieves through a sequence of five or six fairly lengthy scenes (this film has fewer scenes than any of the other five). If we are disengaged from the visual immediacy of a more familiar world, we are, ironically, with Essene in the presence of a more freshly dramatic situation than any of the other films provided.

The film opens with shots of individual monks sitting in a group -- strong but tight faces, unimpressive and familiar in a tense sort of dignity. It is a prayer meeting of sorts, each person calling the rest to join him in remembering a worthy person or occasion. There is a sustained evocation of a woman in New York whose group therapy became "an experience in community" and whose memory seems to judge in some way the present group. There is mention of Buber, and Hiroshima. There is strong emotion, but muted and ritualized by both the place and the persons. The group is a collection, the film makes us feel, of individuals struggling quietly to create community. The spoken word appears as an awkward and weak vehicle.

Cut to a conversation between the Abbot and a stern and disagreeable monk who disapproves of being called by his first name and who eyes the Abbot throughout the exchange with crochety disdain and fear. The Abbot seems to be appealing for means of drawing this man into the fold, of discovering some basis in mutually shared values to overcome the other's resistance, rigidity. But when the Abbot invokes the shared belief in Christ as a means of community, his opponent declines the offer of such kinship.

This mean yet comic antagonist to the Abbot's soft-spoken and benign hopefulness we see later as he drives into town for a potato peeler and other odds and ends. In the hardware store he repeatedly fails to flinch at being called by his first name, and his smile and easy manner as in remarkable contrast to what he "gave" the Abbot. He partly enjoys the stereotypes of the monastery the store worker promotes. This monk, we realize, is reaching for nothing beyond his own self-protection and secure status as an individual in an atomized, not communal, society. His stubborn, undramatic resistance to the community's growing emphasis on the shared life represents one decided strain on the monastery's attempts to manage the message of its faith.

The viewer can locate the many problems of this world through this man. The ritual of the Mass service is now in English, not Latin. And the monastery holds prayer vigils heavily emotionalized and group-oriented. Clearly this monk stands opposed to these tides of change. He may be only one, but he continually captures the attention of the community in its analysis of its faulty movement and recurring disabilities. The world of the town and the monastery may be bridged by this man, but only here does he act as any sort of connection or mediator. No bridge over troubled water is he meant or likely to be. Loneliness masked as self-righteous isolation and fear hiding behind sterile personal dogmatism: as others reach out for joy and sing "heal him, sweet Jesus," the implacable longer heads for town.

If this monastery is in actuality anything but ideal, here is clearly one reason. In a setting where everyone counts, those who discount others take a stiff toll on the group. In a setting where each is living a life immediately symbolic, revelatory of one's ultimate values, the reactionary is influential, seen, pronounced in his individual authority (this monk plays the anti-Abbot, in fact). By his presence he then strains community for others by denying it for himself, diminishes a sense of collective authority and leadership by refusing to recognize as valid the private level of need, trust, and hope which motivate such values in the first place.

Such a refusal, symptomatic of bigotry and paranoia themselves symptomatic of a stunted emotional growth, is not the only sort of behavior which threatens this small group of men. More visible and volatile, the catalyst for the film's evolving drama, is the presence of a highly emotional and assertive postulant who incarnates not rigid retreat but anarchic reformation. His arch-opponent is law made legalistic and petty by a small mind and a man fearful of compassion. But the hungry postulant's other enemy is -- in an important way -- community itself, an entity whose sustenance demands either a merging of individual selves or a transcendence of those selves as merely individual. This postulant, however, is seeking a salvation in and through this community, and he wants that community "now!" He might pronounce sentimentally the platitude that "people understand in the long run," but his full self is cinematically captured as he sits expansively alone at a piano moaning a song of self ("Deep River") which drifts in currents of personal preoccupation all but impossible to deliver over to the shared experiences of a community.

Two sorts of individualism threatening a never yet but always to be realized community: Essene gradually focuses on this basic drama, and more intently on the principal arbiter and cypher for the entire group, the Abbot himself. He must attempt to mute or erode the mean-minded reactionary spirit of the one while at the same time give some direction and criticism to the wild intensity and desperate theatricality of the other. Through the centuries old monastic theology he must attempt to articulate a therapy for the lives of men often dangerously far from "authentic contemplative peace," the ideal of a monastery according to one scholarly treatment. So the Abbot speaks in this film always in a context of disputes and personal animosities. Visually he remains benign and sympathetic, his voice calm and cautious, a blend of quiet judgment and pious hopefulness. He speaks of the necessity of the "Spirit infusing the letter of the law," and how in Biblical times the Pharisees irresponsibly tamed the dialectic by aiding with law over against Spirit. That mysterious conjunction the Abbot is clearly reaching for in his community, one which he notes is filled with tension because it rejects the pharisaical approach to life.

That rejection involves in this case a perplexing and perplexed affirmation from this monastic group of the "Pentacostal movement" in the Catholic Church: a new emotionalism and group-consciousness in liturgy and prayer. Such a movement feeds the troubled spirit of the postulant toward angry and chaotic outbursts of passion as it feeds the no-first-namer with greater disgust for change and accommodation to such trends in the brotherhood. Essene then portrays a small society at work redefining itself both in the light of its particular members but also in light of larger cultural forces it both moves toward and with.

Looked at as a whole, the film quite sympathetically directs our attention first to the absence of shared experience and directions in the community and then gives us several opportunities to witness modes of defining and arbitrating the conflicts. As the film builds to its complex conclusion, the question of leadership burns incandescently. The Abbot has led in the past through a mild but skilled consensus-building, carefully avoiding outright exclusion of anyone and therefore vulnerable to the consequences of an uneasy truce. As the film develops, that uneasy truce shows clear signs of no longer serving its limited purpose. One monk, the senior mentor figure, and others at one point insist that the dissidents must stop fighting and "start loving the brothers." The Abbot alone is faced with the task of finding a politics fitted to that simple commandment. He comes to examine the style of his own leadership near the end, and appears to emerge renewed for the possibly larger confrontations to come as the "center" ceases to hold and the community's very survival is at stake.

He works for rapprochement, reconciliation, the fusion of opposites: Martha - Mary, law - spirit, passion - discipline, his own hortatory teaching and the "laying on of hands" group spirituality. His leadership is actually and potentially only so effective, however, as the larger questions of authority become apparent. Can the group generate a collective strength insuring cooperativeness and tolerance? Can the past traditions accommodate themselves to a consciousness so group-oriented that the contemplative ideals are not hopelessly compromised? Can an ages-old theological symbol-system fulfill the demands for personal therapy placed on it by these new group dynamics?

Such questions emerge organically from Essene, and they are scarcely so private to the world of an Anglican monastery somewhere in the midwest that they don't deserve our secular and even "anti-denominational" attention. Wiseman has shown in his accustomed documentary style -- heavy on representative situations and encounters, a patient watching and listening for accumulated meanings -- that most any group which has accepted the necessity of reconstitution in today's culture is battling with basic problems of social philosophy and practice. The Abbot remains affirmative that Martha and Mary can occupy the same household and serve the same master. Others may wonder if they are even any longer sisters in anything but name. Essene is a film with a special resonance which may make it Wiseman's most important to date.

The Film Column: Films in Production

by Brian Dailey

In the past few years there has been a constant battle between directors, producers, and motion picture companies to obtain and film certain, so called, "hot" properties. In 1964 two versions of Jean Harlow's life appeared on the screen, both of which were complete bombs. Two years ago it was announced that Sarah Miles would star in the film biography of Sarah Bernhardt while at the same time Ken Russell, the director of The Music Lovers the life of Tchaikovsky, stated that he, too, was filming the life of Bernhardt but with Barbra Streisand as the "Divine Sarah." Nothing ever came of either of these two projects and Ms. Bernhardt is still waiting for her life to be filmed. A year later it was announced that a major film studio was filming the life of the famous blues singer Billie Holiday with Diane Sands in the lead but soon after Motown Records and Paramount Pictures announced that they too were making a version with the ex-Supreme's singer, Diana Ross, in the part of "Lady Day." The results of this battle can readily be seen in Springfield or Boston where Lady Sings The Blues, the current hit musical biography of Ms. Holiday, is causing much excitement and making a star out of Diana Ross!

Now there is another conflict in the works of the Motion Picture underworld and this one will be even more interesting to see the results of than the previous film projects. Last year on Broadway Claire Bloom revived Henrik Ibsen's play "A Doll's House" to rave reviews and now Ms. Bloom is scheduled to recreate her stunning stage performance for the screen. The film is being produced by her husband Hillard Elkins and directed by her stage director, Patrick Garland. Most of the film, which costars Anthony Hopkins, will be shot in the studio.

Just as in all the previous examples another version is being prepared, this time by Joseph Losey the director of The Go-Between. Losey has announced that Jane Fonda will star in his film of A Doll's House with the all star cast of Trevor Howard, David Warner, Edward Fox, and Delphine Seyrig. David Mercer is scripting the film which will be shot completely on location in Norway. In this case both productions sound worthy of completion.

After completing A Doll's House Losey plans to film Marcel Proust's enormous masterpiece Rememberances of Things Past. The film is being scripted by Harold Pinter, a long time collaborator of Losey's (The Servant-64, Accident-67, The Go-Between-71), and will possibly star Richard Burton, Alain Delon and Delphine Seyrig. Burton and Delon are currently starring in Losey's latest film The Assassination of Trotsky. The critics have given this film mixed reviews but all seem to agree that Delon's portrayal of the assassin is superb.

Carlo Ponti, the proud husband of Sophia Loren and very wise producer, is putting his name behind a number of new and promising productions. Most of these new film projects employ his wife's favorite leading man, Marcello Mastriani, but alas Ms. Loren isn't going to be costarring in any of them because she is reportedly having her second child. What, the latest film directed by Roman Polanski, stars Mastriani and is coproduced by Ponti and J. Rasson. Another Ponti-Mastriani feature is The Hostage being directed by Dino Risi and costarring Oliver Reed and Carol Andre. Ponti is also producing the new Michaelangelo Antonioni film, Technically Sweet, which again stars Oliver Reed.

Another sure fire star who Ponti among others has discovered is Dmonique Sanda, the new Garbo or Dietrich of the 70's. The twenty-one year old beauty has been in six films so far and has caused much excitement with each one of her performances. After starring in such films as Robert Bresson's Une Femme Douce and Maximillian Schell's First Love she became a star overnight in Bernardo Bertolucci's The Conformist and again proved her unique ability as an actress last year in Vittorio De Sica's The Garden of The Finzi-Continis. Now Ponti has signed her to play opposite Marcello Mastriani and Richard Burton in his next film Death in Rome.

Ms. Sanda is currently finishing work on her first English speaking film Impossible Object. The film which is being shot in France is directed by John Frankenheimer (The Fixer-68) and costars Alan Bates and Evans Evans. The story concerns a young woman obsessed by an adulterous affair with a writer who has a family of his own.

Another film in the works for Ms. Sanda is John Forman's production of The Mackintosh Man, a contemporary suspenser based on Desmond Bagley's novel "The Freedom Trap." John Huston (Fat City) is directing the film in London with Paul Newman as Ms. Sanda's costar.

Frederico Fellini has just released his latest film Fellini's Roma which some critics think is an excellent continuation of things he began in some of his earlier films like Satyricon. Even before most of us could see Felini's Roma the director has begun his next feature Il Borgo produced by Franco Cristaldi and scripted by Fellini himself and Antonino Guerra. The new film is vaguely like Sherwood Anderson's "Winesburg, Ohio" or even more like Felini's own I Vitelloni. The story set in a small town some thirty years ago deals with a family and their friends, day by day, through an entire year. The cast will be made up completely of unknowns and the film is scheduled to be shot in only twenty-three weeks. Felini has also been asked by Dino DeLaurentis to film Fellini's Cassanova. DeLaurentis calls it Felini's Cassanova as in Fellini's Roma and Fellini's Satyricon because he feels Fellini is the real star of the film and the story should be named after him because he clearly makes all his films his own personal stories.

The day of the big Hollywood studio movie is long gone by (witness the above mentioned films and their worldwide production) and now films are made almost completely on location. Presently in Boston the film The Friends of Eddie Coyle is under production. The police film starring Robert Mitchum and Peter Boyle is being produced and scripted by Paul Monash from the novel by George V. Higgins and is being directed by Peter Yates (Bullitt). It will be interesting to see if Yates has a chase scene in the film and where it will be set. He could film it on Beacon Hill but he already did a hill chase in Bullitt or he could film it under the Forest Hills-Everett Elevated trains but William Friedkin already did one of those in The French Connection. Well there is always the Southeast Expressway during rush hour, no other city has that but of course it wouldn't be a very exciting chase scene!

In neighboring Cambridge a new film called The Paper Chase is being filmed. The movie starring Timothy Bottoms of The Last Picture Show is also being shot in Toronto, Canada.

The Way We Were, a new film produced by Ray Stark (Funny Girl and The Owl and The Pussycat) and directed by Sidney Pollack (They Shoot Horses, Don't They?) is being shot partly in Pittsfield, Mass. The film scripted by Arthur Laurents from his own novel is a poignant love story set in the late thirties and forties about college. Much of the film was originally scheduled to be shot at Williams College in Williamstown, Mass. had to be shot at Union College in Schenectedy, New York because of set backs in production. Barbra Streisand and Robert Redford star in the film which will also be shot in Hollywood and New York City. Sally Kirkland plays Ms. Streisand's best friend and Bradford Dillman also has a large part in the film. It's great to see that Streisand is finally being given a good dramatic part now that she's proved she's the screen's best musical star and comedienne.

COMPOSITE THEATRE

"Composite theatre" will be introduced to the Amherst area with the appearance of Meredith Monk/The House at Hampshire College on 14 and 15 November. What Ms. Monk calls "composite theatre" is a blending of voice, movement, costumes, lights, film, objects and environment into an artistic whole. Her first attempt, "16 Millimeter Earrings," was followed by the critically acclaimed "Juice" and "Vessel,"...

JOURNEY OF THE FIFTH HORSE

The next production of the UMass Theatre will be Ronald Ribman's The Journey of the Fifth Horse, directed by Harry Mahnken of the Theatre faculty. Performances will be presented at Bartlett Auditorium on November 9-11 and 16-18 at 8:30 P.M.

The Journey of the Fifth Horse is adapted for the stage from Turgenev's "Diary of a Superfluous Man." The play was first presented in 1966 at the American Place Theatre in New York. Dustin Hoffman won an Obie Award for his portrayal of Zoditch, the central character.

A reader in a publishing house (Zoditch) is given a diary to take home and read overnight and this ordeal sets three worlds spinning: the reader's dream world, the real world of the moment, and the world of the diarist, all interlocked and interacting. In his dream world the reader imagines he is to marry the daughter of the owner, and also that his landlady is eager to wed and bed him. In the real world he actually proposes to the landlady and is promptly laughed to scorn. The diarist in his world loved a girl who fell victim to a dashing cossack and was left pregnant when his regiment moved on. The diarist is scorned for having provoked a duel, and the girl will not even have him as a foster father for the child.

Tickets for The Journey of the Fifth Horse are available at the Bartlett box office and by calling 545-2579. The box office is open Monday through Friday 10:00-4:00 and the evenings of performances. Tickets are $1.50 for UMass students and $2.50 for the general public.

LONG DAY'S JOURNEY INTO NIGHT

The UMass Theatre will present Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer Prize winning Long Day's Journey into Night on November 10, 11, 12, 17, 18, 19. The play will be presented in a "found space" - a living room - rather than in a traditional theatre. The Friday and Saturday performances (Nov. 10, 11, 17, 18) will be held in the Memorial Room of Alumni Hall (opposite Bartlett) at 7:00 P.M. The two Sunday performances (Nov. 12 and 18) will take place in the Amherst Woman's Club (35 Triangle Street) beginning at 3:00 P.M.

Long Day's Journey into Night was published posthumously and was not produced until 1956. The play explores the relationships within the Tyrone family as the four members confront the problem of Mary Tyrone's return to drug addiction. The Tyrones are O'Neill's own family. With deep pity and heartfelt forgiveness, O'Neill faces the past. "He asks forgiveness for his failure to know his family when the need for understanding was like a cry in the night, and attempts to reassure their ghosts that he knows everything awful they have done and still loves them." (Walter Kerr).

The play is under the direction of Marya Bednerik of the Theatre faculty. Bonnie Bishoff is completing her M.F.A. thesis in acting with her portrayal of Mary Tyrone.

Seating is very limited and the public is urged to arrange for tickets well in advance. All tickets are $2.50 (which includes refreshments) and are available at the Bartlett Auditorium box office (545-2579) or at the door prior to performances. Reservations will be accepted, but must be picked up by 4:00 P.M. on the day before the performance.

Walt Disney's Fantasia.

Music

THE CREATION

The Creation, a rock cantata, by David Bobrowitz and Steven Porter will be performed by the Smith College Choir Alpha under the direction of Miss Amy Kaiser. It will be presented on Sunday, November 12, at the 11:30 a.m. chapel service at the Helen Hills Chapel, and on Friday, December 1, at the 7:30 p.m. sabbath eve service. The public is invited to come hear this unique modern piece.

SMITH-AMHERST ORCHESTRA

The Smith-Amherst Orchestra under the direction of conductor William Wittig will open its new season on Tuesday, November 14, in John M. Greene Hall with a performance of two works by Beethoven, the Fidelio Overture, and the Ninth Symphony. The program will be repeated on Friday, November 17, in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College.

The Ninth Symphony, perhaps Beethoven's crowning achievement, is a massive work scored for chorus, solo voices, and orchestra. Completed in 1824, the work contains a magnificent setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

The Overture to Fidelio, completed in 1814, was the fourth written for the opera. Brief and lively, it suits the tone of the opening scene very well, in spite of the fact that it is in a different key, and contains no thematic material from the opera itself.

Both performances are scheduled to begin at 8:15 p.m., and will be open to the public at no charge.

Films

THE BANK DICK (1940)

Or W. C. Fields. One of the handful of the genuinely great movie comedians has a field day in this still wonderfully funny romp. As a reward for accidentally capturing a bank robber, Egbert Souse (Fields) is made a bank guard. Cance Main Lounge, Friday, 11/10, 10:15.

THE BEGUILED (1971)

Don Siegel (Invasion of the Body Snatchers, Dirty Harry) has called this his best film. It is a gothic drama about a wounded Union solider who is taken in by the ladies and girls of a fine Southern school. The women are uneasy about having an enemy soldier in their midst, but he soon charms them and they protect him from capture. Their virtuous facades are revealed in the film's violent climax. Well-acted by a fine cast led by Clint Eastwood, Geraldine Page, and Elizabeth Hartman. Siegel's most ambitious work to date. Released last year and virtually ignored despite the box office draw of Eastwood. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 11/12, 7 and 9:30.

CACTUS FLOWER (1969)

CLEOPATRA (1934)

Cecil B. DeMille's most expressive film. It's opening is typical of the extravagant imagery and technical expertise which characterized DeMille's Paramount films during the Thirties. Here a statue of an Egyptian god slowly turns, a nude girl lifts two smoking censers over the title, the cast list is engraved on slabs of stone. DeMille's Cleopatra is of a different mold than Shakespeare's or Show's or even Mankiewicz's. The emphasis of this retelling of the Egyptian queen's affairs with Caesar and Antony is on turning what is ludicrous into overwhelming grandeur. Hans Drier's sets and designs are remarkable. The barge is an incredible fabrication, from its bank of oars each surmounted with a carved ram's head to the pillowed dias. This barge scene is perhap's DeMille's most indulgent moment. On the dias Cleopatra seduces Mark Antony. At her signal, an inexhaustible supply of slave girls bursts out of every door to perform a series of dances; a garlanded ox is led in, to be caressed by semi-naked girls, one of whom just a second ahead of fade-out assumes before the animal a post of sexual surrender; a cat-skinned group is whipped into submission by a huge slave; a net-full, clad only in sea-weed, is dredged up to sprawl out wriggling on to the deck and offer seashells full of jewels. When Antony succumbs to her wiles, Cleopatra gestures to the slaves and, as veils rise around her bed and singing girls strew them with flower petals, the cadence drummer strikes up the rhythm that sets the oars moving, and the barge moves slowly out to sea. Other memorable moments include the most famous milk bath ever filmed and the final spectacular battle sequence. With Claudette Colbert and a huge cast of Paramount contractors in the briefest gowns and togas the studio would allow. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, 11/15.

FANTASIA (1940)

When this full length cartoon was first released it was the most costly and ambitious ever made. It is Walt Disney's visual interpretation of eight famous musical themes: Bach's "Toccata and Fugue in D minor," Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite," Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," Stravinsky's "The Rite Of Spring," Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours," Mussorgsky's "Night On Bald Mountain," and Schubert's "Ave Maria." When Disney was shown rushes of the "Pastoral Symphony" sequence he exclaimed "This will make Beethoven!" The French critic Georges Sadont has written "Disney imagined he was Goethe but mainly succeeds in achieving only something at the level of the German turn-of-the-century chrosmo." A work of middle-brow vulgarity, often straining for good fun. Some sequences are ponderous, such as the creation and evolution of the world to "The Rite Of Spring"; others are offensive, such as the Beethoven and Schubert. The film works best at its unpretentious moments: Mickey Mouse as the Sorcerer's Apprentice and the ghoulish "Night On Bald Mountain." The film was the first produced with stereophonic sound, a technical innovation in 1940 and used only in limited release. Received well by some critics, after its opening Bosley Crowther wrote in The New York Times "Motion picture history was made last night."

Audiences didn't warm quickly to Disney's vision and it lost money during the initial release. Disney became disillusioned and never again attempted a project on such a huge scale. The musical selections are by Leopold Stowkowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra, Amherst Cinema, Amherst, Calvin Theater, Northampton.

A FINE MADNESS (1966)

Sean Connery gives a very fine performance as a bold, outspoken, radical poet who gets caught up in his own momentum. Joanne Woodward as his waitress-wife is brash and funny, and the rest of the cast, mostly made up of Broadway actors, adds greatly to the inventive screwball comedy. Unconventional fun. Directed by Irving Kershner. Smith College, Sunday, 11/12, afternoon.

THE LAST HOUSE ON THE LEFT
Just remember, "It's only a movie, only a movie, only a movie..." and your only wasting your money, wasting your money, wasting your money. Trash.

When the film was originally pegged for release, a trailer was shown to preview audiences. They were so disgusted with it that no distributor would touch the film. The releasing company reshot a number of scenes, changed the title, and gave it a new advertising campaign giving the entire shoddy enterprise a degree of respect. A Boston film critic said that it remains one of the most offensive she has ever seen. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE LAST HURRAH (1958)
John Ford turned Edwin O'Conner's lovely and amusing novel about an Old Guard Democratic politician from Massachusetts into a sentimental reunion of a number of great character actors. Among them are James Gleason, Spencer Tracy, Basil Rathbone, John Carradine, Pat O'Brien, Donald Crips, Ricardo Cortez, Wallace Ford, Frank McHugh and Jane Darwell. Wright Hall, Smith College, Monday, 11/13, 7:30.

MASCULINE/FEMININE (1966)
Jean Luc Godart freely adapted two stories of Guy De Maupassant in telling this story of how issues and obsessions effect the young. A young Frenchman, Paul, returns home from his military service to Paris in December, 1965 at the time of the Presidential elections. He loves Madeleine, who finds him a job with a popular show. She is a singer and makes her first record. Paul seeks warmth and tenderness, but finds despair. The young people are described by Godart as being "the children of Mark and Coca Cola." Cance Main Lounge, Saturday, 11/11, 10:15.

THE NEW CENTURIONS
The policeman as superstar. Rome had its centurions to guard the frontiers from invading huns, we have the police ours to protect us from...Better acted than it probably deserved but only marginally entertaining. The plot moves in small bursts and doesn't seem to go anywhere, except into the bedroom of the worried wife of a cop where she faithfully awaits her husband's return each night. The film could have best been a public service spot. With George C. Scott, our best film actor, and Stacey Keach, who may well become our best new actor. Campus Cinemas, Hadley. Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton.

PRETTY MAIDS ALL IN A ROW (1971)
Roger Vadim's career slipped to a new low in this black comedy about a high school teacher who murders some of his female students. Rock Hudson, who is serviceable in his fluffy sex parts is hopeless in a role which suggest much more breadth. Featured is Angie Dickinson. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 11/16, 7 and 9.

SAVAGE MESSIAH
Ken Russell's latest film "I want to take the 'mystique' away from art and show that success is usually 5 per cent inspiration and 95 per cent perspiration and hard slog" Ken Russell. But where's the sweat? This biography of Henri Gaudier-Bresha, the French sculptor who died in the trenches during the First World War at the age of twenty-four, spends five percent of its time showing young Henri in the studio and ninety-five percent involved in his affair with Sophie Breska, a polish woman twice his age. The film explores Russell's favorite theme: the relationship of art upon life. Here the life is that of lush studio romances and the art is a contrives excuse for Russell to indulge once more with this theme. He did it before, and better, in The Music Lovers. The usual Russell flamboyance is missing: no more vomiting nuns of insane nymphomaniacs, and the film is boring by their absence. Beautifully played by Dorothy Tutin and newcomer Scott Antony. Palace Cinemas, West Springfield.

A SEPARATE PEACE
John Knowles classic story of the relationship between two boys at a New England prep school during the Second World War is filled with dialogue lifted from the book and spoken all over the lovely grounds of Philip Exeter Academy. Fine if you enjoy tours. Director Larry Peerce's attempt at naturalism eliminates the story's dramatic value. It unfolds in a series of lyrical scenes which lead nowhere. The non-professional actors do well enough. One of the year's major disappointments. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

The film which established actor John Cassavettes' career as a film director. This episodic film was shot without a script for about $15,000 in 16 mm. It is primarily a series of improvisations that gradually reveal the mood of the city and relationships of the three characters. The story concerns two Negro brothers and a sister who share an apartment in New York. The film has a spontaneity which commercial films often lack. It has greatly influenced the development of what has been called "the new American cinema." Two versions of the film exist, the second, better version has a number of scenes. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 11/12, 7:15.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE-FIVE
Kurt Vonnegut Jr.'s college classic was obediently transformed by George Roy Hill into a sleek, lifeless, and shallow film which time trips decades with ease, but never approaches the interesting implications about time and space. The story concerns an Army medic who jumps from the bombing of Dresden to Babbitt-like life in a Midwestern city to conjugal splendor in an interstellar penthouse. Vonnegut's point, it seems, is life but a random sampling of events and one should emphasize the good and ignore the bad. The film emphasizes the silly sort of satire about Middle America that young people would feel manic toward if it were aimed at them. Here they laugh. Worse is the power of positive believing which is at the center of Vonnegut's argument. The film is admirably edited yet cold in its maching-like precision. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE STERILE CUCKOO (1968)
Liza Minelli as Pookie Adams, the mixed-up college freshman who has her first affair. The campus they attend is right out of Salinger's Fifties rather than the activist Sixties. Ms. Minelli's performance is memorable, especially in the telephone sequence which is the best of its kind since Luis Rainier took an Oscar for a similar moment in The Great Ziegfeld. Engaging supporting performance by Wendell Burton as her boyfriend. Directed by Alan Pakula. Student Union Ballroom, Friday, 11/10, 7 and 9.

TOUCH OF EVIL (1958)
Orson Welles' only American film in twenty-five years; some regard it as his greatest, even superceding Citizen Kane. The story is of a Mexican narcotics officer who comes to a seedy Mexican border town to investigate the automobile bombing which killed the town boss. He receives the reluctant cooperation of the corrupt American detective in charge of the case. They spar off, against each other and against the suspects. An often complicated and banal plot which Welles uses as a personal vendetta against police authority. Welles has said: I firmly believe that in the modern world we have to choose between the morality of law and the morality of basic justice. That is to say, between lynching someone and letting him go free. I prefer to let a murderer go free than to let the police arrest him by mistake." The film is heavily ladened with Goya-like imagery; the seediness is that of an infected universe. Welles twist reality with culmitative technical mastery. The slums, the dives, and the odd assortment of character types have a hypnotic authenticity. Especially fine are Marlene Dietrich pianola, Akim Tamiross's dope pusher, and Mercedes MacCambridge's black leather dyke. A most memorable opening which encompasses an entire street to the ticking of a time bomb. The corrupt town detective, Quinlan, is memorably played by Orson Welles. With Charleston Heston and Janet Leigh. Thompson 104, Sunday, 11/12, 7 and 9.

THE VALACHI PAPERS
The first of the Godfather follow up films. Directed by Terence Young. With Charles Bronson. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

WHAT'S UP DOC?
Peter Bogdanovich's tribute to the great comedies of the Thirties comes off as technical knock out. It is funny, but considering the wealth of comic material contained in this ninety minute film, it should have been side-splitting. It still is a good deal of fun, with a seventeen minute chase around the streets of San Francisco and two beautiful comic bits: a harrassment through a hotel lobby and a bewildered judge preparing for night court. Otherwise the film strikes you as oddly vacant. Fun, yes, but not the great screwball comedies of the Thirties. Barbra Striesand again proves herself to be our leading screen comedienne, but Ryan O'Neal shows that his imitation of Cary Grant is purielc at best. One garish comic performance by Madeiline Kahn as O'Neal's girlfriend. The music is Cole Porter; Barbra opens the film with "You're The Top" and, midway through in a beautiful 360 degree pan sings "As Time Goes By." All sorts of cinematic trivia abounds, too bad it wasn't funnier. Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton, Wednesday, Academy of Music, Northampton.

WHAT'S UP, TIGER LILY (1966)
The background of this frequently funny and always wacky film is every bit as crazy as the film itself. The zany Woody Allen wrote some incongruous English dialogue to accompany a magnificently photographed Japanese ('64) spy story which just happened to be a terrible film without any prospect of a profitable release in the U.S. This juxtaposition of original footage with a new soundtrack has been done before, but a lot of this is quite wild. Mahar, Saturday, 11/11, 6:15, 8:30, and 11:15.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO BABY JANE? (1962)
Despite critical ignorance of this 1962 film, this exercise in Grand Guignol is noteworthy for its bravuro performances by Bette Davis and Joan Crawford and tour de force directing by Robert Aldrich. It concerns the bizarre inter dependent relationship between two sisters, one an aging child star (Bette) and the other (Joan) whose budding film career was stopped short by an untimely accident which crippled her for life. There are many nice touches throughout the film, especially Miss Davis' wonderfully bitchy imitation of Miss Crawford, all done by the magic of the movies. Letters To The Editor

Recycling Wrong Notions

To The Editor:
I am writing this letter to 1) thank the Collegian for printing the article about recycling (Thursday, November 9) and 2) to clear up some items which were stated inaccurately and which may be misleading.

First, the paper project was initiated three years ago through the efforts of Eva Schiffer, a member of the Sierra Club. With the cooperation and support of CEQ, Dr. Schiffer made the necessary contacts and literally pushed the pilot project through.

Second, the University itself has been instrumental and invaluable in maintaining this project. The twelve or so dumpsters now being used were supplied by the Physical Plant (contrary to the "quote" in the article stating that CEQ had bought them), and we have not had to return them. Also, the number of dumpsters has increased since the initiation of the program. However, since University funding has decreased in this area, we cannot count on too many more dumpsters for this purpose. (Unless this program becomes more effective in which case the University could convert "garbage" dumpsters into paper dumpsters). As for the number of trucks needed to empty these dumpsters--only one a week is necessary, not six.

Third, the bins placed in various locations in the student union and the Campus Center are emptied each day by a student.

Lastly, although the article was correct in asserting that contamination of dumpsters and diminished student interest has led to failure of recycling efforts in residential areas in the past, it made no mention of the fact that recycling in these areas will be attempted again this year. This year CEQ has purchased six dumpsters solely for use in residential areas.

Much support is needed to maintain and to increase the paper recycling on campus--and needless to say, much support is sought from the students themselves to make paper recycling in dorm areas a reality. The problem is there--but if enough interest is not generated to keep the dorm pilot project alive, this will undoubtedly be the last year this attempt will be made.

For those who are willing to do their share, please call me at 549-6861 or come to a Tuesday night meeting of CEQ (student activities office, first floor of the Campus Center). There is definitely a solution to the problem of waste paper, but it takes a lot of cooperation and support.

Hail The King

To The Editor:
The reign of King Richard will continue for four more thought provoking years. Our sovereign has received his mandate. He can now rest assured that the majority of his subjects could care less about: Watergate; the napalm burned body of Kim; ITT and Dita Beard; and the bodies of four students staining the ground red at that infamous institution of higher learning in Ohio. Our leader can now sleep peacefully at night knowing full well that his public has forgotten Checkers, 15,624 additional men killed and forty two billion additional dollars spent in Vietnam, his few televised press conferences, and his seclusion during the last campaign.

The public has chosen to remember the many glorious aspects of his reign. Who can forget Creighton Abrams, Henry Kissinger and Jill St. John, San Clemente, The Great Wall of China, Tricia's wedding, effete intellectual snobs, Neil Armstrong, Vietnamization, The Super Bowl and the Godfather.

Pay homage to your king fellow subjects. REMEMBER HE KEPT OUR BOYS OUT OF NORTHERN IRELAND.

Marching Band

To The Editor:
It may have come to your attention that the marching band is having financial difficulties. I find this to be particularly distressing because I am a music major and have been a member of the marching band for three years. I take a very deep and personal pride in the band and feel that it gives me a sense of belonging that is otherwise missing at a large university. But most important, the marching band is a learning experience that is a vital part of my education. Virtually every secondary school in this state has a marching band so in order for me to get a job, I must be able to cope with that facet of music education. The only way this is possible is through a university marching band so I ask the university community to support me and one hundred others like me by signing the marching band petition.

Magic Bus

To The Editor:
In regard to Mr. McGrath's recent letter (Nov. 7, 1972) concerning the five-college bus system: I have been taking the Mount Holyoke bus from South Hadley to U Mass. and back every week day since the beginning of the semester, and except for two mechanical breakdowns (one of them on Nov. 5, the day Mr. McGrath had all his trouble), the bus has always been on time. In addition, I have found the bus driver on that run to be extremely courteous and conscientious, in short, a very professional driver. I believe that Mr. McGrath's letter paints an inaccurate picture of the U.Mass- Mt. Holyoke run.

Let The Flyer Beware

To The Editor:
It's that time of year again when a number of chartered flight organizations offer seemingly carefree trips to tropical islands and resort locations. I would like to interject a note of caution to the unsuspecting would-be traveler: be prepared to pay an additional fee to board the plane after your luggage has been loaded; do not be surprised to find out that your first-class hotel reservations have been changed for some "unforeseen" reason and that you will be staying in a dive not even rated in a hotel listing guide; be prepared to lose two days of your vacation because your luggage was taken to another hotel on arrival, and on departure check-out time is 11 AM but your plane doesn't leave until 11 at night; oh yes, and remember to save extra cash just in case you have to pay an additional charge to get home (that is if your plane is even there). You may note that on the back of the contract you sign, (if you can interpret it), the charter companies are covered for all the above incidents and more of the same. So, if you don't mind being shuffled around like cattle by a fraudulent misrepresented disorganized group of businessmen by all means take a chartered trip.

However, one would be better off to go youth-fare, handle the reservations through an agent or make them yourself thereby insuring a place to stay, a return trip at no extra cost, and not allowing yourself to be stigmatized as a member of an "unruly disrespectful group".

More On Bob Estelle

To The Editor:
It is somehow reassuring to know that Mr. Estelle's brand of bellythink survives yet in the land; it makes you think that maybe George Washington did throw that silver dollar across the Rappahannock, that it was Santa Claus who ate the cookies and milk you left, that all we have to do to make this land of ours safe for Truth, Justice, and all the rest is to keep a close eye on the goddamn furriners...

Not that Mr. Estelle's reasoning is correct. Indeed, his chain of thought is an endless loop quite unprepared to receive new links--as he might discover if he were to occasionally to poke his nose outside the American Opinion Bookstore. It is simply that his thinking leans heavily on all-American social icons--Commies bad, Constitution good--which are in turn rooted firmly in American myth, and it gives the myth a bad name. I frankly wish it were possible to live in the intellectual Eden in which the Minutemen and the Liberty Bell are ensconced, but Mr. Estelle compels me to take a bite of the apple.

And so onward into the mud. Vietnam, I will grant Mr. Estelle, has been a political and diplomatic circus from the beginning, but he is out of his patriotic gourd when he maintains that the war could have been won in one month if the influences of the State Department and the United Nations had been removed. Douglas MacArthur said that a ground war in Southeast Asia would be a hopeless military undertaking, in a quote which Robert Welch apparently forgot when he put forth--in a John Birch Society monthly Bulletin--this intriguing one month idea (his rationale was that there could be no acceptable excuse for a nation the size of the United States failing to whip a bunch of half-starved guerrillas in a nation half the size of Missouri. He must have had it all worked out on that wall map in his Belmont office).

I am acquainted with the G. Edward Griffin book The Fearful Master. It is well documented and makes many valid points but is, lamentably, screamingly ideological and bends many of its arguments accordingly--which perhaps explains why it is published by a John Birch Society affiliated publishing house and owes virtually its entire distribution to the Society.

It is difficult to respond to the proposition that the United States defenses under George McGovern would have been so weak that the Soviets could overrun them at any time; one may as well argue with the Flat Earth Society. I honestly wonder, however, whether Mr. Estelle will be disappointed if the next few years do not see Russian tanks rumbling down the interstates-though he may take heart in the knowledge that the toll booths do not accept rubles.

Mr. Estelle informs us, in his letter of November 6, that he has an open mind. If so, it is for him a new acquisition and one against whose nefarious influences he should be on guard; I would really miss his letters, should he suffer from enlightenment.

An Open Letter To George

To The Editor:
Dear Senator McGovern,
The country has made its decision in a most decisive manner. I cannot help but think however, that it based its decision on the most incomplete and misleading information. I and so many others had hoped as volunteers in the last weeks of your campaign to help correct that imbalance. I can only conclude we failed. But the reason for the failure goes deeper than the number of leaflets or person to person contacts we may or may not have delivered or made. It revolves around the fundamental fact that a substantial plurality of the American people refuse to accept the guilt for the War in Vietnam, or even to acknowledge the fundamental horror caused by our madness there. Massachusetts has had a long history of opposition to this war and this in large measure accounts for it being along with the District of Columbia the only state in the Union to give you its Electoral vote by a large majority. This refusal on the part of the American people to come to terms with this destructive potential which lies within the nation's very soul can only bode ill for the future of this country on dealing with its own Domestic problems and those of a wider nature in the world at large. Beyond all the particular reforms and programs you outlined so eloquently in your campaign this was the unifying theme, the life-giving essence. The programs were the practical realizations of this almost spiritual quest to understand our nature and to act for the common good based on that understanding. The American people were not up to that struggle. I can understand their reluctance. It is a difficult and demanding task. But it is a necessary one nonetheless. Not to attempt it can only lead to other Vietnams, more corruption in high places, and the further erosion of our most cherished freedoms and rights. You have so very courageously carried on this battle even when I and others were only dimly aware of either its necessity or value. You were responsible for awakening me to the problems and above all you instilled in me, by your example, faith in the possiblity of their resolution, even as so many bullets and bombs and burning Napalm had tried to prevent its germination.

I do not see you as a hero or a saint, but a man of heroic proportions who has got to be the finest and best man ever to have run for the Presidency. I thank you for entering Public life and for attempting the impossible dream. When my son or daughter asks me the question it seems every generation asks of its fathers: What did I do in the War, I will be so very proud to say I worked for the election of George McGovern.

Blank Policy Check

By MARK L. MAWRENCE

While I sit here in New York City after working rather ardously today, election day, I find it extremely difficult to contain my cynicism. The "Mandate" Richard Nixon so amoursly requested seems to be a stark reality here in the face of the landslide he attained. The simple fact that the American people so graciously delivered on a silver platter this "blank policy check" simply scares the hell out of me. The issues have been explored, the corruption presumably exposed, the empiricism of an unified distribution of wealth, and the scents of repressive years ahead all indicate to me that something is desperately wrong with our country that would overwhelmingly re-elect Richard Nixon.

The explanations are endless for the faith put in Nixon and the fear of Senator McGovern. Some people I spoke with in New York said to me that if this would have been a Kennedy campaign the "Iron Hand" would have clamped down upon those who dared to disrupt and spy upon committee meetings and orgaizations. The Watergate Issue would have had to have been more thoroughly explored. Factionalism would not have appeared under a more forceful candidate it's said. The laxity of Senator McGovern accounted for a good deal of disunity and mistrust, and allowed loyalties to sway to one who perhaps did not paint a perfect picture, but who was indeed in a position to speak from a definite position of strength, infrequently, but effectively. President Nixon won the election without referring to Senator McGovern once by name. This does wonders for the members of the loyal opposition, as at times with the security of the polls and the incumbency, it seemed as if perhaps there was really none at all. Just a Prainie Populist ranting and raving about all the ills of our society. The issues were authentic, valid and indeed crucial to the future of America. The people, however, simply became far too weary of listening to their shortcomings as a nation, and chose to disassociate themselves. George McGovern's truth was alienating to many, and I feel that the results of this election represent the incapacity of the nation as a whole to empathize and relate to the responsibility and integrity of the values our democratic society intrinsically ar to illustrate.

Perhaps this is far too idealistic for today's accelerated pragmatic and impersonalized character of political society. George McGovern did not seem to think so. He felt that perhaps ideals that would attempt to stem the tide of inhumanity and non-concern of government would appeal to the people. He felt that the people could see that special interests and concerns were dictating the prioriities of the administr ..on, and that perhaps their own humanity would stimulate a responsible conscience and dictate a necessity for more concern, and more responsiveness to human needs and progressive values. He was wrong, we were all badly mistaken. George McGovern represented too much. The desired response would have required a stimulus far more vast and sweeping than the Senator or any other man in these times could have accumulated. This seems to be a tragic irony as I truly feel that he could have initiated this change, in such a way that the fundamental values we have been attempting to obtain would have been achieved as a nation, as a whole, and for the people.

It will be difficult for me, as with others to re-align my sentiments and values to a position of effectuality within the framework of the years ahead under Nixon. The structure of this campaign has been one of a unique relationship with people, trying to relate to them, understand them, and explore their needs, and your own with them as a person. I sincerely feel we tried, and yet the responsiveness was so highly negligible that it really stimulates a wonder and indeed a concern for the people we have tried to reach. Perhaps I am quite wrong in assuming that the illustraton of Senator McGovern warranted such a transoformation and awakening of moral and spiritual character in American society. Perhaps Richard Nixon will reach out and seek a relationship with the people he represents. Perhaps he will see that to attain his desired place in History he must answer to the many cries from our country, with compassion that is of the sort that Senator McGovern attempted to bring about. Perhaps it is rather naive to assume that this sort of responsive interaction is possible today. The hopes or illusions were perhaps far too high, and yet the empericism of the past four years is again reality, as is the hesitance, apprehension and fear of the next four, or twelve years. We are in the twilight of a separation between individual concern, and universal responsibility, in which the integrity and historical responsibility, of a people are being lost. This contetion comes from a deep concern, and indeed a hope that I will be proven quite resoundingly wrong. I, too, have a dream, and yet it seems to be progressively transforming itself into a nightmarish realm in which objectivity and freedom are being massed into a poitional concensus where our "Ministry of Truth" in Washington will assume and dictate America into Oblivion.

"Judge Not..."

To The Editor:

After reading in Tuesday's Collegian that the Dining Commons workers accused of stealing food face dismissal, I could not help but be struck by the great contradiction that appears here. Namely, that students must account for at least 80% of the food stolen from the Dining Commons each year.

This is not to say that the food thieves, whoever they may be, should not be punished. However, I sincerely doubt that the dismissal of these workers will drastically lower the amount of food stolen from the Dining Commons. But let us look to more fruitful methods for stopping this thievery. For example: why does a student need to bring his knapsack in while he's eating? How about checking these likely suspects as they leave the Dining Commons?

As was brought up in a letter a few days ago, it's the student who suffers, through board increases, when his friends (or himself) steal food, silverware or plates. Students hearken: "Judge not, lest ye be judged...!"

Concert In Franklin Tonight

Tonight the Central Area Council and the New Africa House will co-sponsor a concert at the Franklin Dining Commons, featuring two of America's finest Black musicians, Mance Lipscomb and Joseph Spence.

Mance Lipscomb is a 78-year-old Texas sharecropper, who has been playing guitar for over 65 years. It has been said that he plays the guitar with the vitality of a man 50 years his junior. Lipscomb's repertoire includes several styles of music. He plays blues, folk, breakdowns, waltzes, polkas, ballads, children's songs, and spirituals.

His blues style has been compared to that of his fellow Texan Lightning Hopkins. Such musicians as Bob Dylan, Pete Seegar, and B.B. King have been influenced by Mance Lipscomb. Over the years, he has recorded six albums, five on the Arhoolie label and one on Reprise.

Joseph Spence is a native of Nassau of the Bahamas. For this reason he is virtually unknown in this country. However, he has released three albums in America; one on the Folkways label, another on the Elektra label, and one other on Arhoolie.

His fluent style of guitar playing is characterized by complex rhythms and counterpoints. His vocal style is both unique and inimitable. Because Spence is such a unique-sounding musician, it is impossible to categorize him.

Spence is particularly a blues musician, but his verswility like Lipscomb's, ranges over a wide variety of musical styles.

The concert will begin at 8:30 tonight in the Franklin Dining Commons. Tickets will be sold at the door.

Lost & Found Week Declared

Lost & Found has over 100 pairs of glasses which have been lost this semester. Over 300 books have also been left unclaimed this semester and Lost & Found has collected an infinite number of notebooks of all sizes, color, and shape.

Books, glasses, and notbooks are just a few of the articles which have been collected by the girls in Lost & Found. Because we have more Lost articles than our space can hold, we have decided to declare Nov. 13 to Nov. 17 LOST & FOUND week.

During this week, anyone who rightfully claims his or her lost article will receive a small token of our appreciation. More details will be given in a later edition of the Collegian.

Lost & Found is located at the bottom of the escalator in the Campus Center. We are open from 8 A.M. to 8 P.M. Monday thru Saturday; Sunday 1-8 P.M.

Nixon Hits "Shield" Bill

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP)–President Nixon has indicated that he does not favor federal legislation "at this time" to permit newsmen to protect the identity of their sources.

Nixon's views were expressed in a letter to Robert G. Fichenberg, executive editor of the Knickerbocker News-Union Star and chairman of the Freedom of Information Committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

The letter, dated Nov. 4 and received Wednesday, was in response to questions sent by Fichenberg to the major presidential candidates. Sen. George McGovern earlier had replied that he would support such legislation without qualification.

Nixon wrote that he supports guidelines set by former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell. They require "careful consideration" by a federal prosecutor of each situation involving information sought from a newsman by a federal grand jury, suggest extensive negotiation with the newsman and finally, if necessary, a request for a subpoena only after express authorization from the attorney general.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled last summer that the media do not have automatic immunity from revealing confidential sources and information to a grand jury. Since then 21 newsmen's "shield bills" have been introduced in Congress but none has been passed.

Cell Death Inquest Begins

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)–An inquest into the death of Lawrence Largey, 17, who died in a Cambridge police cell, began yesterday with about 50 witnesses subpoenaed to testify.

East Cambridge District Court Judge Morris N. Gould is presiding at the closed inquest to determine the legal cause of the youth's death.

Attorneys involved, including the Largey family's counsel and Cambridge City Solicitor Edward W. McCarthy, were banned from the courtroom except when their clients were on the stand giving testimony.

Largey's family was represented by Michael Haroz who was told he could be present only when testimony was being given by Dr. David Spain, retained by the family to perform a separate autopsy.

Dr. Charles Robinson, who performed the original autopsy, ruled there was no evidence physical violence caused the youth's death. He attributed death to a probable overdose of drugs and alcohol.

Largey and a friend, Thomas Doyle, 19, were arrested for drunkenness on Oct. 21, near Roosevelt Towers, Cambridge, following Largey's alleged breaking of a plate glass window.

The Largey family maintains that the youth died as the result of being beaten after arrest.

Meeting Tonight On Loyalty Oath

By GILBERT J. SALK

There will be a public meeting about the loyalty oath at 8:00 tonight in Rm. 163 of the Campus Center. The meeting will cover some of the complexities of the oath, including the legal fight being waged by Berkshire Community College, the discriminatory application of the law, the University's position on the requirement, and other aspects of the situation.

By law, all employees of the University are required to sign the oath, and the University has set a tentative deadline of November 15 for employes to file their signed copy of the oath. However, indications are that failure to sign will not result in immediate termination or suspension of pay. What sanctions will eventually be taken, if any, still seems to be an open topic.

Speakers at the public meeting will include an administration representative, Sam Smith, the Director of Development at Berkshire Community College and leader of the fight against the oath there, will speak about the work he has been doing. Atty. Bill Norris, who is representing BCC employees who are opposed to the mandatory signing of the oath, will discuss legal alternatives to the law.

Jim Matlack and Milton Mayer, both UMass faculty members, will discuss their opposition to the requirement.

There will be an open microphone so that others present can talk about their feeelings about the oath, and for those who are opposed to it to consider ways of acting upon their opposition. One possibility which will be considered is the initiation of a law suit patterned on the one being conducted by BCC.

The BCC group, which represents about 25% of the employees there, have obtained a restraining order from District Court which was upheld in the State Supreme Court after an appeal by the Atty. General's Office.

NEW YORK (AP)–Oakland's mustachioed Ath .tics, including their unlikely hero Gene Tenace, will receive a record $20,705.01 each for winning baseball's World Series and the losing Cincinnati Reds get $15,080.25.

A biggest-ever World Series pot of $1,882,178.15 was carved up Thursday by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn. The A's and Reds bagged most of it, but 10 other major league teams got smaller shares.

Oakland's total payoff was $677,584.14 for winning the seven-game World Series. It was split into 27 full shares plus lesser amounts for 27 others including batboys and clubhouse help.

Cincinnati awarded 32 full paychecks from its $508,188.10 and listed 15 persons for cash grants.

The Detroit Tigers, who dropped the American League final playoffs 3-2 to Oakland, will receive full shares of $6,859.77 for almost making it. Thirty-two persons participated.

National League playoff runnerup Pittsburgh earned $6,549.55 each in postseason money. The Pirates lost the league championship series 3-2 to the Reds.

Breakdowns of other teams full shares included the Houston Astros, $1,295.711 Chicago Cubs $1,267.70; Boston Red Sox, $1,208.15; Chicago White Sox, $1,208.15; Baltimore Orioles, $330.88; Minnesota Twins, $308.22; Los Angeles Dodgers, $292.15; and New York Mets, $280.09.

With records falling at every financial turn, the World Series and playoffs grossed $5,187,475.99 with the Series itself pulling in $3,954,542.99.

The previous record for individual payoffs in the World Series was set in the 1969 series between the New York Mets and the Baltimore Orioles. Each member of the winning Mets received $18,388.18. Each of the Orioles got $14,904.21.

Run in Rain? Not Riva Ridge

By ED SCHUYLER
Associated Press Sportswriter

LAUREL, Md. (AP)–Riva Ridge and Cougar II, two of three U.S. representatives entered in Saturday's $150,000 Washington, D.C., International won't run if it rains, their trainers said Thursday.

The weather forecast is for a chance of rain for the 25th running of the international over 1 1/2 miles on the grass at Laurel Race Course.

"He won't run if it rains," Lucien Laurin said after watching Riva Ridge, the Kentucky Derby winner, work a half-mile in 53 seconds over a turf course already soft from heavy rain. The Meadow Stable 3-year-old has never raced on the grass. Cougar II was scratched from the international last year because of rain and his owner, Mary F. Jones, said he won't run this year if it is wet. Trainer Charlie Wittingham concurred.

If Riva Ridge and the 6-year-old Chilena-bred Cougar II, winner of 10 stakes in 1971 and this year, don't run, the lone U.S. representative will be John M. Schiff's Drol Role, winner of six races in 18 starts this year, including the Canadian international championship on the grass in his last outing.

Others entered Thursday for the international were Countess Margit Batthyany's San San, representing France; Ravi Tikkoo's Steel Pulse and Roderick More O'Farrell's Parnell, both of England; Belle Geste of Canada; Boreen of Ireland; Toyokichi Kitano's Mejiro-Musashi of Japan and Jumbo Jet of Singapore.

"IT JUST DON'T SEEM TO FIT."

Minutemen: Some Reactions

By STEVE CROWE

The name "Redmen" is gone forever, but its memory will long be remembered...at least until the uniforms wear out.

Frank McInerney, Head of the Department of Athletics, has declared that, by no means, will there be purchase of any new uniforms until it is necessary to do so because they are "worn-out." The athletic department just can't afford new uniforms at this time."

McInerney, however, does not expect any trouble from Indian groups because of this.

"I was under the impression that the Indian interest groups were looking for progress in that direction (of complete obliteration of Indian references on this campus) and to my knowledge, no immediate date has been set for the completion of that goal," he said.

But, to the coaches who are affected by this change, the problem of changing the name is not as simple as that.

"Do you mean to tell me that we are supposed to play with one name printed on our uniform while everyone calls us by another? That seems pretty stupid to me," complained one coach.

It is true that the possibility of buying brand new uniforms is completely out of the question, but what about buying new patches? Unfortunately, even the cost of new patches would be too expensive. The J.V. basketball jersey has "Redmen" printed right across the chest as does that of the baseball uniform. Other teams have an Indian design on their uniforms. The hockey team's has an Indian profile (valued at about $15) and also a patch with two tomahawks forming an "M" on the shoulder. The baseball shirt has "Redmen" across the chest and a smaller version of the Indian profile on the sleeve (about $5) and the varsity basketball team has an Indian design on the side of the trunks.

Not only were many of the coaches disappointed that the nickname had to be changed, but many of them were completely turned off by choice of "Minutemen."

"It (the election of the new name) was like the 1964 presidential election between Johnson and Goldwater," observed golf and J.V. basketball coach "Fan" Ga tte "there wasn't much of choice."

At le t half of the coaches felt this way. Basketball Coach Jack Leaman felt that "Minutemen" was a "blah" name and anything would have been better. He personally liked "The Amazin' Aggies."

Other coaches were looking for a "catchy animal name," like "Wildcats" or "Cougars".. something that might generate some excitement and spirit to make up for the loss of the "colorful" Redmen name."

Some coaches, however, were very happy with the change to "Minutemen."

"I can't think of a better name for this school," said Track Coach Ken O'Brien. "As a matter of fact, the Yankee Conference just changed its symbol from a map of the New England states to a Minuteman. Maybe this will be a sign that UMass will dominate the conference for years to come."

Wrestling Coach Homer Barr also liked the selection.

"I think that once we get over the problems of the "Redmen" uniforms, we are going to see that 'Minutemen' was the best choice after all...'Redmen' was only a good name for this valley, but 'Minutemen' is representative of the entire state." (Minutemen is also the best selection that could be made for the wrestling team; when a wrestler pins his man in less than one minute, he is called a "minuteman".)

"They never should have changed the name from the cow college days..."Farmers" (Aggies) said Tennis Coach Steve Kosakowski (UMass' answer to Casey Stengel). "When Amherst College used to play Mass. Aggie, the Amherst fans would sing "The Farmer in the Dell" to us at half-time. I miss that."

In the opinion of this writer, there could be no better choice than 'Minutemen' for this university. In a year or two it will seem as though 'Minutemen" has always been the name of the UMass athletic teams. It's that kind of name; it's unique. Everyone knows that the "Irish" are from Notre Dame and that the "Buckeyes" are from Ohio State. Soon "Minutemen" will be the same way. (Where else would a team named "Minutemen" be from except the state of Massachusetts?

You talk about the "Redmen" tradition...when 'Minutemen' achieves this level of recognition and immediate association with the University of Massachusetts, try to change the name then...No way!

Denver Olympics Still Alive But Hope is Dim

DENVER (AP) - The Denver Olympic Organizing Committee voted Thursday to formally withdraw Denver from consideration as the site for the 1976 Winter Olympics, but was restrained by a court order from informing the International Olympic Committee of its decision.

The restraining order was obtained by attorneys for three private citizens who said the passage of a state constitutional amendment to cut off further spending for the Games could not be interpreted as a vote against the Games themselves.

The anti-Olympics proposal on tuesday's state ballot passed by a 520,000-to-345,000 vote, and a proposal banning the city from providing any more money waa also approved by a wide margin.

Attorney Harry L. Arkin said the injunction was sought to give the newly-formed Colorado Committee to Save the Winter Games a chance to go before the IOC executive committee Monday in Lausanne, Switzerland and plead its cause.

"All we'll ask is 30 days," said Arkin, "and I think it's possible to come up with the money."

The DOOC resolution expressed a belief, however that the Olympics could not be conducted without financial aid from Colorado and Denver.

"If we could hold the Games in Colorado, I'd be all for it," said DOOC Chairman W. R. Goodwin, "but I just don't think it's possible.

"The practical considerations are overwhelming," he continued, saying opponents of the Games would be able to argue against the use of any city or state police to maintain security during the Olympics, or even the use of roads for construction work.

Colorado's passage of the anti-Olympics amendment already has spurred the hopes of at least two other U.S. cities, and a half-dozen foreign cities, which would like a chance to host the 1976 Olympics.

They include Lake Placid, N.Y.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Vancouver, B.C.; Innsbruck, Austria; Grenoble, France; Oslo, Norway, and St. Moritz, Switzerland.

But Lord Killanin, president of the IOC, said Thursday in London that a decision may not be reached until the IOC holds its formal meeting next March.

During the brief meeting, the DOOC, all of whose members have been ardent supporters of the games, found itself in the position of having to defend itself from other Olympic backers.

Arkin handed the court order to DOOC President Carl DeTemple as the session began and later answered questions from board members about the meaning of the injunction.

"The citizenry is asking a chance to continue the efforts," said the attorney, adding that he believes there is also a possibility of obtaining more funds from the federal government.

Arkin criticized the DOOC for being "so quick to close its doors on the Olympics."

Several committee members and Denver Mayor Bill McNichols countered that it was simply too late and Denver must bow out.

"To drag it along any further would be useless," said McNichols.

In addition to calling for withdrawal of Denver's Olympic invitation, the resolution passed by the committee directed its officers to liquidate the corporation and terminate all its business.

Minutemen Face Tough HC

By EARLE BARROLL

At this time last year, the UMass football team was 1-3-1. This year they're 6-1. The opposition for the next game is the same, Holy Cross. The situation is the same--UMass needs a win, and realistically more so this year.

You can try to divorce the idea of Bowl. You can look at the word and call it a no-no. But you're seven games into the season and true, Delaware scouts were supposedly at Bucknell last week to look at the Bisons who'll they'll be playing in two weeks.

But, one has to be naive not to think they were just looking at UMass as a barometer to rate Bucknell.

And so tomorrow and Holy Cross at Fitton Field in Worcester with kickoff at 1:30. There really doesn't have to be much said or written about what UMass vs. Holy Cross is all about. Talk to the players, think about the mayhem at Curry Hicks Cage two out of the last three years when the Crusaders were in town.

As assistant coach Errol Prisby said at the Varsity M Club luncheon on Wednesday, "I remember what it was like to play Miami of Ohio when I was at Cincinnati. And after being around the lockerroom for the first couple of days of this week I've got the same feeling.

So far this season Holy Cross is 3-2-1. They're a team that looms big in the future plans of UMass football for the season. And they're what coaches and experts like to refer to as a more than stiff challenge.

Head coach Ed Doherty has been a miracle worker since taking over after the Cross was out of action for almost a year when the entire team was struck with hepatitis.

Since that time he has molded a well-oiled machine that in its last outing scored an impressive 26-9 win over Villanova, a team that had lost to Boston College, 21-20, on a missed point after.

Last week at Bucknell the Minutemen had their problems stopping the groundwork of Mitch Farbstein (113 yds.) and Bob Langan (88 yds.). This week the problem becomes more acute as the Crusaders have one of the finest running tandems in the east (possibly the nation) in Joe Wipson (sure early round draft pick) and Steve Buchanan.

Wilson has played in only four of H.C.'s six games (both losses) and has rushed for 547 yards. Buchanan has only gained 531 yards in six games.

The defense has kept Holy Cross close in every game it has played to date. In fact, in four of its last five games, the defense has scored five times, on two blocked punts, two interceptions and a fumble recovery.

Last year these two teams put on an explosive battle at Alumni Stadium with UMass winning 38-27. It was in this game that Paul Metallo rambled for some 256 yards and four td's that earned him a place on the UPI national backfield of the week.

Metallo is back although his health is still a question. Other Minutemen with physical ailments are Dick Cummings who was on crutches as of yesterday, John Healy who is not yet fully recovered from his thigh injury and Cummings replacement Phil Roland who was shken up last week at Bucknell.

Other than that (understatement???) the rest of the team is ready. And there doesn't have to be too much psychological analysis to understand what they feel this game with Holy Cross is all about.

Season Finale

High Stakes as Booters Face UNH

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMass varsity soccer team will be more than just completing a successful season when it meets the UNH Wildcats tomorrow at 1:00 p.m. Much more rides upon the results of the game.

First, the Redmond-men will be gunning for a winning season in the Yankee Conference. They enter the game with a 2-2-1 standing and a win, coupled with a UConn victory over URI the following Saturday, would get them a share of second place.

Secondly, perhaps most important of all, the Minutemen are seeking to prove they are a good soccer team - oh, they know they are a good soccer team and anyone who has seen them play know that fact is true. They want to prove it to all New England.

The foremost desire of Gerry Redmond and his charges has been to be ranked in the top ten in the New England ratings. They defeated Amherst, rated ninth, in pre-season scrimmage. They defeated UConn by a decisive 3-1 score, but were again frustrated by the back-stabbing comments of Joe Morrone, the Husky mentor, and a further denial of the least bit of recognition.

There latest accomplishment was a 4-3 upset win over fourth-ranked Springfield, the team that is good enough to be given the number two seed in the NCAA regional soccer tournament for college division teams.

The booters have very little faith in Morrone and his cronies on the rating board. They believe they must get one more big victory - for that one last try - to prove once and for all that they are good enough to rate being rated. They must beat New Hampshire!

This game has all the earmarks of an extremely exciting game - one that all you sports fans should witness. First, you have a game that means a great deal in the YanCon race. UNH needs the win to have a shot at a tie for the title. UMass needs the win for a chance to tie for second.

Secondly, you have the two best goalies in the Yankee Conference facing each other. Jim Mueller, ranked number one, has given up just one goal a game and has sparked his team to a fine 6-2-2 record. Carl Vercollone, who rose to the difficult task of replacing the great John Kiah in goal, has allowed just 1.2 goals per game into the nets.

And then, you have two of the most explosive offensive threats in the league who will be gunning for scores. UMass' Tom Coburn, who got the "trick" against Springfield, is tied with Vermont's Peter Breen for most goals with 11. Joe Murdoch of the 'Cats has contributed six goals and five assists to the team's success.

"A victory over New Hampshire means quite a bit to the team," remarked Coach Gerry Redmond "especially since it will be the final game for many of the players, including our co-captains Ed Doherty and Dave Ouelette, who have given great service to the University soccer club over the years."

Mike Nugent summed it up best when he said, "We've got to win to show we're good enough to be rated. And the Coach is the best around and we want it for him."

Frosh Host UConn

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

You win a big game, you have another biggie the next week. That's the way it is for a winning football team. The Freshman gridders are in such a situation having to play the tough Huskies of Connecticut this afternoon at Alumni Stadium, coming off their big victory over the Boston College Eagles last Sunday afternoon.

In the words of freshman coach Billy Maxwell, UConn is a "very worthy opponent for the Minutemen". The Huskies have looked strong through a 5 game slate although last week when they were upset by Yan-Con rival UNH. Among their accomplishments are a 55-24 whipping of BU (the Minutemen beat the Terriers 33-13) and a 28-7 victory over URI (Minutemen beat URI 53-7). They have also beaten the Coast Guard Academy, so they have proven themselves as an established team that is capable of playing with the Minutemen.

The frosh will be trying to protect their undefeated record (3-0) with out the services of Rich Bienna, who also missed the BC game but should be ready to play soon, and Linebacker Neil Desmaris who has a badly bruised knee which he received in the rain last Sunday. Assorted other players will be playing with minor bruises and scrapes.

One thing to watch out for in a situation like the Minutemen are in, is a mental letdown. The team has played so well together to this point, and hopefully the guys will get themselves up for this contest, like they have for the first 3 games.

If the Minutemen play anything like they have - as a tremendously potent cohesive unit which has scored points by the truckload (131) they will give UConn a battle like they haven't had all year long.

This afternoon, Alumni Stadium, 2:00. Come out and see the Frosh machine in action.

WASHINGTON, D.C., October 12, 1974--'Tis a sorry state of affairs. Things (belive it or not) have gotten worse both at home and abroad. The United States now has "police forces" in Ireland, Israel, and Massachusetts (the latter being in the middle of a drawn-out subversion trial because of its failure to bring Michard Rilhouse a clear-cut 50 state mandate.

Employment is down, welfare is up, the economic outlook is very bleak, and steak if $4.59 a pound (that's the cheap stuff, too....you should see the price of top round). It is also quite clear that racial tensions in the country are about to unleash themselves at any moment.

And remember Vietnam? Well, in a strange turn of events, President "coalition is a dirty word" Thieu was assassinated by agents of Kenry Hissinger. Mr. Hissinger then took control of South Vietnam with the help of an army of mercenaries that he is paying off with Thieu's Swiss bank account. In fact, he has the North Vietnamese army bending and about to break.

If Mr. Hissinger does attain victory in Vietnam, it is expected that he will be proclaimed the new leader of the United States (officially this time), deposing the present leader, Michard Rilhouse.

Now, the question that has been haunting the minds of at least 33 people in the US (that's besides Pat, Julie, David, Tricia, and Ed) is--where has Mr. Rilhouse gone? He has not made a public appearance since he was thrown out of his third football locker room in two weeks. It is feared that this humiliation, domestic and international problems, plus the impending surge to power of Mr. Hissinger have been too much for Michy to handle.

But wait. We are getting an audio report right at this moment. It's from Koward Smay Hitch, who as you probably know has taken it upon himself to track down the president to "let him know that everything will be all right, Michy." So we'll switch you now to Mr. Hith's live report....

"Ladies and gentlemen, this is indeed a momentous occasion. I HAVE found our president. I repeat, I HAVE FOUND our president. He has shut himself inside a walk-in closet in the far northeast corner of his Camp David retreat. He won't let me in, but he has promised to talk to me through the door."

"Mr. President, why are you in hiding?"

"Are you kidding me Koward? Would you show your face if you were about to lose your job to Kenry Hissinger? Would you show your face if you were about to lose your life to anyone of about 2,000,000 maniacs who happen to be a tiny bit unhappy with me? And--I want to be clear to you on this because it hurts most--would you show your face after being thrown out of three football locker rooms--including the Washington Redskins? After All, a couple of years ago, I could walk into any football locker room and be treated as the nation's number one Superjock should be treated. But now--do you know what one of the Redskin players told me? He told me to quit playing games and go and do my job! Is there no justice left Koward?

"It does certainly seem a shame to me, Mr. President." How quickly these people have forgotten that you almost beat inflation in this country; that you almost lowered the unemployment rate, that you almost ended the Vietnam war two years ago. Ah, it does seem that there is no justice left, Mr. President. And I assure you that I'm not talking about the crime rate. But please, Michy, come back. There are some of us who still need you."

"I can't come back yet, Koward. It's only the third quarter."

"But Mr. President, I thought that football teams were not treating you too well."

"True, ture, but this is high school football. Not just high school tootball though--this game is for the District of Columbia championship. And guess what! No matter which team wins, it will allow me into the locker room after the game. Don't you see, Koward? This is a chance for me to come all the way back. Look what I did after I lost that election in 1962. I came all the way back, didn't I? Well, I'll do it again. Just wait. I'll show those Redskins, I'll show Hissinger, I'll show ALL the people! Now please leave me alone Koward. I'm writing my congratulating speech."

Faculty Group Seeking Block Of Loyalty Oath

By MARK VOGLER

A group of UMass faculty members who are testing the state's loyalty oath, will seek a temporary restraining order from Hampshire County Court today, their attorney, William Norris of Cummington said Friday night.

Such a restraining order, if issued, would protect those who have not already been administered the oath from possible penalties if the dead line is not met. As it stands now, failure to sign the loyalty oath to the Commonwealth by Wednesday, could result in their dismissal from the university.

Norris, who is currently representing a group of faculty and staff members at Berkshire Community College, had successfully obtained a temporary restraining order for his clients of B.C.C. against the oath.

He said that if a restraining order was denied today for those he is representing at UMass, it could not be appealed and another quick course of action would have to be taken.

Some of the issues which Norris will file in his bill of complaints will include unequal protection-- the oath is being administered more strongly on college employees than other state employees.

Another argument Norris quotes is the way the statute is worded. According to Massachusetts law, the oath must be administered before anyone enters upon the discharge of his duties. There is no reference made for those who were employed during the three year period in which the oath was under ajudication.

Norris also added that a teacher cannot be justly fired without some kind of hearing. He said to do so, would violate the due process of law. He confirmed that the oath could not be fought on the grounds of vagueness, since the Supreme Court had already challenged the oath on those grounds.

It was in that case, an employee of a state hospital filed a grievance against the employees oath in the lower court and won. But the Supreme Court reversed the decision last Spring.

Friday night, English professor Milton Mayer, who is a spokesman for the group of UMass faculty members opposed to the loyalty oath, organized a meeting to discuss the morality of the oath and to propose methods to have it repealed.

Sam Smith, Director of Development at Berkshire Community College and one of the leaders of the B.C.C. opposition against the oath, said that the oath is not in the best interests of the country.

According to Smith, "This is a free country. Your loyalty isn't measured by a piece of paper. It's measured by being a citizen day-to-day. It's absurd and demeaning at the least.

"Signing that oath is doing something which is against what's inside of me. True, the oath may be forgotten. On the other hand, it's also possible that we may get a harder government someday. And if we've gotten through the first stage of signing the oath, it won't be difficult to move along."

James Matlack, an English professor at the university, said he was willing to take whatever steps are possible to take the issue to court.

"If the government encroaches the rights of the people, then it's their responsibility to challenge that encroachment.

The oath is dangerous and repugnant in a university where, more than any other part of societv, the range of ideas is so wide and diverse.

"It cuts back against the basic belief of freedom of speech, ideas, and intellectual pursuit--which is the essence of the university. It's a basic threat to personal liberty."

Mayer commented that there is no indication that the university is enthusiastic about administering the oath.

"But the Commonwealth will compell the university to dismiss them," he said. "The university's hands are tied as long as the law remains in effect."

Several alternatives for possible consideration were brought up out of Friday's discussion. The initial proposal made was that a law suit be filed by a person who refused to take the oath. The other alternatives discussed were:

--That a class suit be filed by a group of persons in behalf of all those who oppose the oath, whether or not they've taken it.

--Go to the legislature with a petition signed by a large number of faculty and staff members of this institution to appeal to the legislature to rescind the law.

--Go to the court and obtain a restraining order or injunction.

Matlack said plans are going forward to solicit funds for legal costs. He also said that the ad hoc committee will seek to recruit members and will lobby for greater support.

Members of the executive committee include: Mayer, Matlack, Don Kesselman; a professor from the School of Ed, David Griffiths; a Physics instructor, Frank Heny; an assistant professor of Linguistics, Patricia Brown; a Rhetoric teaching associate, M. L. McGuigan; a Botany lecturer, Mike Best; of the Economics Department, and Stan Burns; a student.

Alumni Tell Students Of Outside World

By A. KENT BEST

UMass Alumni are returning to the Amherst campus to inform students about on the job training, experience of working, and the career opportunities that face the student in the next few years.

The Student Alumni Career Seminar Program was created by career adviser Clark Edwards and Alumni Director Art Petrosemelo just this year.

Petrosemelo said, "Our major aim is to get to the freshman that is asking himself, why am I going to school and where is it leading me?"

He added, "There is a tremendous need to bring the outside world on campus and there is no better way than through personnel that are familiar with UMass."

Clark Edwards commented that programs of this nature were present before on campus, but usually through various clubs and colleges.

Edwards emphasized, "We are making a conscious, organized effort to bring Alumni back to see the growth at UMass."

The first of these seminars was held November 2, in which the program included two people from the health science careers, two doctors, two dentists and two nurses, all UMass Alumni.

The second such program was held which included five people in business career of banking that covered positions ranging from senior vice president to a 1972 graduate.

On November 16 the program will feature Alumni in the retail and marketing field and that program will include a company president and two owners of clothing type stores.

Petrosemolo concluded, "The program is not set up theatre style, rather interested students may come and go as they please, with the program lasting some one and a half hours."

The Alumni return to speak to students for free and the programs are absolutely free of charge. For publicity posters, department notices and direct mail are being utilized.

Edwards and Petrosemolo urged students to make use of this unique service being provided through the cooperation of the Alumni-Career Placement Program in the career planning office on the second floor of the Whitmore Administration Bldg.

Boltwood Plan Near Final Stage

The Amherst Redevelopment Authority is approaching the execution stage of the Boltwood Walk Plan, a plan promising new life for the heart of Amherst through construction of a multi-purpose complex of housing, commercial space and community facilities, according to the ARA.

The ARA, with the help of community representatives, has spent over a year evaluating and planning for use of an area called the Central School Complex in Amherst center and is now presenting the Boltwood Walk plan to the town - the last step before beginning construction.

At present, the ARA is being opposed by a referendum which was drawn up by local businessmen and community members who are voicing objections of the plan on grounds of the impact it will have on the character of Amherst and the problems that the town currently is facing.

Tad Walsh, one of the businessmen involved in the action to stop Boltwood Walk, said he feels the plan is a threat to the ecology of Amherst center, that it will conflict with the old New England atmosphere of Amherst, and that it is undemocratic in that the planners are attempting to take land by force through emminent domain.

The plan began in 1969 when the Board of Selectmen of Amherst asked the Development and Industrial Commission to evaluate an area of about 3.2 acres where the old Intermediate school presently stands near the corner of Main and Pleasant Sts., in regard to its effect on the growth and character of Amherst center.

The Central School Complex Committee was set up and, in October, 1971, they presented a plan for the construction of the multi-purpose complex on a 9.6 acre site which includes Sweetser Park, the land owned by the Amherst Boys Club, approximately 3 acres of town land, and land currently owned by private businesses.

The Central School Complex Committee has evolved into the ARA, and the Boltwood Walk Plan is the ARA's plan for use of the site.

Proposed construction includes three 2-5 story apartment buildings with at least 50 total living units, primarily for the elderly, as well as a Senior Center, Community Health Center, shops, a new Nursing Home where the old one currently stands, a multi-purpose building with shops on the first level and a double gymnasium on the second, and remodeling of the Odd Fellows building and intermediate school to contain more shops and community facilities.

According to the ARA the main priorities in planning the construction of the complex were that there be a balance between income-producing and public facilities (so that the complex could pay for itself and make money after 25 years), and that all the buildings in the complex would be consistent with a basic design.

One of the complaints of Amherst businessmen is that the new facilities will add congestion and traffic problems to Amherst center where there is already a serious problem with traffic and parking. Tad Walsh, owner of Walsh's in Amherst, said he feels the land should be used to relieve the problem rather than create a worse problem. The ARA claims the complex will be able to handle all the traffic it draws to the apartments, commercial and recreational facilities.

Steve Hamilton, who has run the Amherst Boys Club since it was organized in 1922 said that the ARA is trying to take the land and Boys Club Building through emminent domain and doesn't offer anything practical in return. However, the ARA feels the double gymnasium facility would sufficiently make up for the loss of the club.

These questions and more will be brought out in meetings between the ARA and the Boys Club representatives on tonight, and the ARA and the Chamber of Commerce Wednesday night.

Outreach Helps Students Reach Out To Others

Reaching out to help others, an increasingly popular activity on college campuses, is easier to do these days at the university.

Because of a new UMass office called The Center for Outreach Programs, 120 more students are performing some public service this year. They answered Outreach ads in the Collegian. Outreach has also placed 12 political science majors in on-the-job "classes"-six in Cong. Michael Harrington's Washington office, two in his Salem office, three in the office of Newton Mayor Theodore Mann, and one who has been working on the state-wide Democratic party platform.

The 12 students are earning 15 credits in political science, history, and economics for their full-time volunteer work this semester.

Outreach Director William M. Burke says more programs will be set up to enable students to help communities.

Outreach has three functions: keeping up-to-date a list of UMass public service programs, getting off-campus social agencies and students together, and developing programs whereby students may earn academic credit for social service.

A student who wants to do volunteer work is referred to existing campus programs, and if what he wants to do is not possible there, he is then referred to an outside agency. The Center was created to give agencies a central campus office to contact for volunteers. Outreach is in 318 Arnold House, telephone 545-2021.

On Montana Road, "Dawg" Awaits Master

HELMVILLE, Mont. (AP) - A shy and scruffy canine called "Dawg" by residents of this isolated Montana community is keeping a lonely vigil on Highway 271, apparently awaiting the return of her master.

Dawg kept her distance from residents of the town until recently, but she now allows residents to approach and pet her.

She rarely strays from her self-appointed post near the road. Austin Dillreee, Powell County road foreman, moved a tar-papered dog house to the area to give Dawg some shelter for next winter.

Dawg, who appears to be part Golden Labrador Retriever, was first sighted last January northeast of this community between Helena and Missoula.

Residents say the dog had a head injury last winter and may have fallen from the back of a truck that passed through the area. Ranchers occasionally have tossed Dawg a dead calf, food she readily accepts.

Residents say all efforts have failed to lead Dawg to better quarters, as the animal refused to enter any cars or leave her post. Passersby say she cocks her ear at every passing vehicle, waiting perhaps for her master to return and collect her.

Police Find No D.C. Employee Theft

David Johnston, Director of Security at the UMass Police Department, says that the Dining Commons have not been able to determine any large scale theft of food. "We can find no evidence that these people (Dining Commons workers) in fact, were taking unauthorized material," he said.

By MARK VOGLER

The UMass Security Department said last week that a preliminary investigation shows evidence to substantiate accusations that dining commons employees are involved in large scale food thefts from the commons.

David L. Johnston, Director of Security, said Friday that the Dining Commons have not been able to determine any substantial losses. He said that although Food Services director Joel Stoneham has not conducted a formal inventory. A preliminary spot check has determined no loss of food stuffs has occurred.

According to Johnston, "It's relatively safe to say that no extensive theft has occurred at this point. After Mr. Stoneham has concluded his inventory, we may be able to confirm this.

"There's a lot of reason to believe that his inventory system can discover food thefts, because in the past this department has apprehended people on this basis."

Johnston said the department had followed up a thorough investigation of a photo published by the Collegian which showed two dining commons employees--one carrying a plastic bag which was allegedly said to contain "stolen" food.

It was that photo which appeared with a page one story in the MDC two weeks ago, with the faces of the two workers had been blocked out to conceal their identity. However, it was obvious to some people who were employed in the dining commons who the two were.

After careful inspection of the controversial photo, Johnston said: "We can find no evidence that these people, in fact, were taking unauthorized material.

"The ladies that appear in the photo, are two of the very best dining common employees. One woman spends 20 hours a week doing voluntary work. There is quite a story about this woman as to how she makes Christmas decorations out of discarded material. In the picture, in fact, she was carrying a bag of discarded material."

Assistant Director of Security Saul Chafin displayed a bag which contained aluminum foil pie plates. He reported that he had received the bag from assistant director of Food Services Art Warren. Chafin indicated that the bag and its contents were identical to that which the lady was carrying the night the photo was taken.

He supported his conclusion with newspaper clippings of the lady concerning her decorative work and statements from people who knew her. Chafin said that she is a chairman of a decorative committee for a charitable organization in North Hadley.

"This woman rightfully wants it known that she's not guilty of anything," Chafin stated. Her ability to make Christmas decorations out of nothing is unquestionable. She has had permission from her superiors to take home the discarded articles." Chafin exhibited some of the decorations that the lady had made.

Chafin said that on three occasions he had witnessed plastic bags containing trash and garbage being taken out. "This can't even be considered stolen property," he said. "It can't even be alleged."

In regard to the two male students who claimed that they had witnessed theft of food by D. C. employees, Chafin said that their evidence was insubstantial.

"Neither are able to identify any specific person," he pointed out. This leaves a gap in the investigation. We are unable to identify theft because we are unable to identify specific persons. We really haven't got much evidence to go on."

Chafin said that he is aware of the fact that Worcester Dining Commons, the place where the alleged thefts took place, has quite a problem in that it has 10 exits. He said that he would suggest to Stoneham how these exits might be regulated to serve as a safeguard to unauthorized items leaving the building.

The assistant director of security also pointed out that accusing employees was a very difficult and dangerous matter to engage in. He said that workers going to Munchies after work hours must pass through the exits in order to leave the building.

Asked why the department of Food Services could easily pin the blame of "unestimated quantities of stolen food" on student patrons, and yet fail to unveil theft by commons employees, according to Assistant Director of Food Services Arthur Warren, Chafin admitted it was a very valid point for discussion.

"How can they say and be able to substantiate one thing, and not another?" said Chafin.

Johnson said that the investigation is not closed and urged anyone who has any helpful information to cooperate and devulge it to the police.

"This department depends on cooperation from the community and we need the cooperation of the press. In the future, if you find any valuable information, please don't hesitate to help us out."

Mandatory Faculty Fees Raising Questions

By BARBARA VOORHEES

The question of mandatory fees for faculty is one that has been drawing increasing attention over the last couple of years.

Proposed mandatory Campus Center and Student Activities fees for faculty are currently being studied by the Faculty Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate.

The Student Senate recommended that a study of the fees be made in a proposal on September 12.

Student Senate President Larry Ladd said that the fees would cover use of the Campus Center, the Collegian, WMUA, and such other services which undergraduates pay for. He also said that mandatory faculty fees would reduce the undergraduate fees. Students now pay $31.25 Campus Center fee and $17.50 Student Activities fee.

Faculty members do not pay any fees at present and therefore do not receive the Collegian or get a discount at the Top of the Campus or in the bookstore. In addition the faculty has no office space in the Campus Center.

The Faculty Affairs Committee has said that it has no principal opposition to the faculty paying an equitable proportion of certain fees. However, the committee has raised questions as to whether or not the faculty will have equitable representation on boards which administer funds, and use of office space in the Campus Center for the Faculty Senate.

Questions concerning faculty participation in the health services program, the Fine Arts program and the athletic program have also been raised.

Secretary of the Faculty Senate, Robert Wellman, said that he feels mandatory Campus Center and Student Activities fees would be objectionable to the faculty and perhaps unlawful.

Wellman said that voluntary faculty fees for such things as Fine Arts, Athletics, and the Collegian would be much more widely accepted by the faculty.

He also stated that the Faculty Senate approved pre-paid health services for faculty three years ago, but that this program could not go into effect because the present health services are not large enough to accommodate the faculty. The Faculty Senate is now seeking nominations for someone to set up a faculty health service.

Wellman said that the problem of the proposed mandatory Campus Center fee is most complex. A special committee of Faculty Senators and Student Senators will discuss this and other problems concerning faculty fees in the upcoming months.

Jazz Guitarist Plays Saturday

Larry Coryell, a jazz guitar player who got started when "his grandmother in Texas gave him a ukelele for his 12th birthday", will be appearing at Worcester Dining Commons Saturday, at 7:30 and 10:30 p.m.

Coryell and his group Foreplay are being sponsored by the Orchard Hill Music Series. The group consists of Steve Marcus on saxophone, Mike Mandel, a truly fine master of his electric piano, Mervin Bronson on bass, and Harry Wilkinson playing drums.

The excitement that Coryell generates comes from his remarkable speed and the incredible things he can make his $1,000 Gibson do. His creativity goes as far as using the feedback of his guitar as a seventh string which he bends like the other six.

Tickets for the concert are available at the RSO office in the Campus Center for $1.50 and should be purchased early.

Security Department, Courts Work To Ease Parking Crisis

By ARNIE NEWBERGER

Court summonses for unpaid parking tickets and the addition of 9 new busses are two of the main features of administrative efforts to alleviate the parking crisis on campus, according to Gerald O'Neil, Assistant Director of Security and Parking Office Head.

O'Neil said in an interview that his office is currently negotiating with the District Court in Northampton so that procedures for the issuance of summonses to delinquent ticket holders can be finalized.

O'Neil said that stricter endorsement of parking citations will help solve some of the University's parking problems. The addition of 9 new busses, some of them to make daily runs to Belchertown and Sunderland, will also help, he said.

"These busses will be of a great help during the winter, especially. We lose some 500 to 600 parking spaces every snowstorm due to plowing and drifts and if people will use these buses during storms then traffic jams can be reduced," he said.

O'Neil's comments followed the release of a report to the Faculty-Senate by Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage that outlined all the steps taken in the last year to alleviate the parking crisis.

Steps mentioned in the report are:

1) The addition of 250 parking meters around the campus to accommodate short term visitors to the campus.

2) Clarification of parking areas and more clearly painted parking signs to insure more efficient use of parking areas.

3) Training of security guards to make them more aware of the parking problems facing the University.

4) The tightening of controls and accountability over parking citations to make it more difficult to fix or void and parking ticket.

5) Expansion of Lot 14 by 400 hundred parking spaces--the first increase in parking spaces in several years.

Long-range planning is currently being handled by two separate bodies--the Transportation and Parking Council, and the Parking Office.

The Council is comprised of students, faculty, and staff in equal numbers and is developing programs to cope with present problems as well as planning for the future.

The Parking Office is the official body charged with long range planning and is currently re-programming its computers in an effort to establish a more fair vehicle registration system.

The production will also be presented on Saturday, at 8:15 p.m. The program is open to the five college community and admission is free.

Long Hijack Ends, Passengers Return

MIAMI (AP) - Thirty one weary captives who spent 28 hours "in hell" under the guns of three hijackers returned from Cuba yesterday with praise for the pilot who landed their crippled plane on a foam-covered Havana runway after his copilot had been shot.

The wounded copilot and three other passengers from the Southern Airways jet were removed from the plane on stretchers to Hialeah Hospital.

"I'm glad to be alive," said copilot Billy Johnson, 37, of College City, Ark., who was shot as he sat in the DC9. Hospital spokesmen said Johnson suffered a compound fracture of the right arm and the bullet was still lodged in his shoulder.

The injured passengers were identified as Gale Buchanan, 35, of Auburn, Ala., who suffered knee injuries; J. Frank Robinson, 47, of Tampa, Fla., who suffered a fractured leg; and Alvin Fortsan, 83, of Trumann, Ark., who suffered head injuries.

A few of the other passengers deplaned at Miami, but a spokesman for the Dade County Sheriff's Department told newsmen waiting at the airport that most of them would immediately board another Southern flight to retrace, in reverse, the route the plane was to have taken when it was hijacked over Alabama on Friday.

The reverse flight was scheduled to stop in Orlando, Fla.; Birmingham, Ala.; Atlanta, Ga.; and Memphis, Tenn.

Buchanan, a professor of weed science at Auburn University, said the pilot, Capt. Bill Haas of La Grange, Tenn., was "as courageous a person as I ever met. He instilled confidence."

Haas put the twin-engine jet down at Havana three hours after FBI agents shot out four of its tires as it made its takeoff from Orlando, Fla.,

Orlando was the last stop on the plane's hopscotch journey that started when the jet was commandeered over Alabama Friday night by three fugitives who demanded $10 million and, at one point, threatened to bomb a nuclear facility. The plane stopped at eight cities and made two trips to Cuba.

Buchanan said that when the tires were shot out, "it scared hell out of me. Everyone thought he was going to die."

Mrs. Robert Button of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., who managed to talk to her son Eacie Welch, 40, of Montgomery, Ala., when he arrived at the airport, said he told her he'd "gone through hell."

As the passengers filed off the plane into a customs area, Mrs. Alex Halverstadt of Key Biscayne, Fla., waved at her husband, who was on the hijacked craft.

"I feel very relieved - like the weight of the world has been taken off my shoulders," said Mrs. Halverstadt. She said she had not slept since the hijack was first reported.

"When we get home," she said, "I'm going to fix him the biggest dinner he's ever had and a tall martini."

FBI agents were waiting at the airport to question the passengers and crew of the plane, which remained in Cuba while Southern technicians repaired damage caused after FBI marksmen shot out four of the craft's tires as it left Orlando, Fla., Saturday night.

In a broadcast monitored in Miami, Radio Havana said the three hijackers - identified as two fugitives from Detroit and a prison escapee from Tennessee - were "rapidly apprehended" and that three persons aboard the Southern flight were hospitalized.

One was copilot Billy Harloyd "Harold" Johnson, 37, of College City, Ark., wounded in the left shoulder by a revolver shot, according to the Cuban radio station. In College City, Johnson's wife said she had been told by airline officials her husband was in good condition.

The other two were an 83-year-old man who suffered nervous shock and a passenger with a fractured foot.

The landing in Havana climaxed an ordeal which began Friday night over Alabama when the three heavily-armed hijackers took control of the plane and started it on an odyssey to eight cities ranging from Toronto to Havana.

The hijackers demanded a $10 million ransom and threatened to crash the aircraft into the Oak Ridge, Tenn., Nuclear Research Laboratories if they didn't get it. An undetermined amount of money was taken aboard the aircraft at a Chattanooga, Tenn., stop. The hijackers also attempted to talk with President Nixon, but failed.

The 12:32 a.m. EST landing in Havana came under "strict emergency conditions," said Radio Havana. The landing was the plane's second visit to the Cuban capital.

"The FBI attempt against the aircraft made necessary an extraordinary display of measures in order to guarantee the lives of the passengers and crewmen," said the government broadcast. "After burning off the fuel, the aircraft finally made a safe landing, in spite of the odds motivated by the contact of the asphalt with the steel of the wheels."

The government broadcast quoted a young passenger as saying, "Please convey our appreciation to Prime Minister Fidel Castro for saving our lives. I can say this on behalf of all the passengers."

Radio Havana said a pale young woman with a two-year-old son in tow commented, "the shooting of the plane tires while taking off at McCoy air base was a criminal act that endangered the lives of the passengers."

In Atlanta, a Southern Airways spokesman said the Havana landing was rough but controlled. "It would be a lot like riding in your car if you ran over something and blew out a couple of tires...We occasionally have tires blow on normal takeoffs, so our pilots take this in stride."

The hijackers were identified as Henry D. Jackson, 25, and Lewis D. Moore, 27, both of Detroit and both facing charges of assault with attempt to commit rape, and Melvin Cale, 21, of Oak Ridge, Tenn., who police said escaped Oct. 29 from a Nashville, Tenn., work-release program while serving a five-year term for grand larceny.

Southern's Flight 49 was taken over shortly after it left Birmingham, Ala. It was forced to Jackson, Miss., to refuel.

A spokesman for Southern Airways said the hijackers, said to be armed with grenades and guns, passed through a metal detection device at the airport. He said he did not know why their weapons were not picked up by the scanner.

From Jackson it hopscotched across three countries with landings at Cleveland, Ohio; Toronto; Lexington, Ky.; Chattanooga, Tenn., and then Havana.

Agence France Press reported from Havana that Castro was at the airport when the airplane made its first visit to Cuba. AFP said Castro refused to come to the aircraft, as demanded by the hijackers, who apparently grew nervous at the sight of Cuban officials who attempted to surround the plane. The aircraft was ordered back in the air after about two hours on the ground.

It returned to Florida, landing at Key West and then Orlando, where it touched down at 9:25 p.m. It was followed almost immediately by a Navy plane loaded with FBI sharpshooters.

The hijackers demanded and got fuel, maps and charts at McCoy. As the plane started rolling for a takeoff, FBI marksmen opened fire and struck the plane's landing gear. Big chunks of rubber from the aircraft's wheels and large amounts of oil were found on the runway. The plane's oil situation was described then as "extremely critical."

"Moderate" Demos Form New Group

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly two dozen veteran Democratic office holders, authors and strategists, upset by what they call George McGovern's "new politics," are starting an organization for "restoring the party to its rightful place of leadership."

Called the Coalition for a Democratic Majority, it is envisioned as a base through which moderate and so-called "old line" Democrats will influence the party structure and Democratic members of Congress.

"It's still very much in the formative stages, but we think it will be like a moderate version of the Americans for Democratic Action," said Ben J. Wattenberg, one of the leaders in the move.

Wattenberg said the CDM "will concentrate on ideas and issues, not personalities" but made it clear in an interview that it is McGovern and his ideas that prompted establishment of the organization. "There is a real confrontation of ideas in the party now and we want to be heard."

Wattenberg, an author, political analyst and campaign aide for the unsuccessful presidential bid of Democratic Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, said the CDM was conceived earlier this fall when "many of us sensed a catastrophe brewing" for McGovern's election chance against President Nixon.

Others among the initial sponsors include: Democratic Reps. Richard Bolling of Missouri and Thomas S. Foley of Washington; Patricia Roberts Harris, one time ambassador to Luxembourg and chairman of the Credentials Committee at the Democratic National Convention last July; Max Kampelman, a Washington attorney and former aide to Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey; authors Nathan Glazer and Seymore Martin Lipset; and columnist John P. Roche.

In an appeal for members now being mailed out, the CDM says the election last Tuesday was "a clear signal to the Democratic party to return to the great tradition through which it had come to represent the wishes and hopes of a majority of the American people."

McGovern is never actually named in the leaflet, titled "Come Home, Democrats." McGovern's campaign slogan was "Come Home, America."

In general terms, the appeal for members opposes McGovern's positions on making deep cuts in the defense budget, quota systems in hiring, which McGovern had trouble convincing voters he opposed, and what CDM calls "the idea that American society is sick and morally bankrupt."

Wattenberg said the CDM will set up local chapters around the country.

"And I wouldn't rule out the possibility of the group eventually being a strong practical force" in elective politics, Wattenberg said. But, he added, the CDM is in no way intended to compete with the two major parties as a third force.

More Peace Talks Seen Coming

SAIGON (AP)--U.S. officials indicated yesterday that Washington and Saigon have narrowed their differences on a disputed draft agreement that would halt the Vietnam war and send American forces home.

Two days of talks between Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., one of President Nixon's special peace envoys, and President Nguyen Van Thieu appeared to have cleared the way for a resumption of private negotiations with North Vietnam in Paris.

The U.S. Embassy issued a statement on Haig's departure saying the talks were "cordial and constructive" but did not elaborate. The statement was interpreted by some here to mean that progress was made toward resolving differences.

A feeling is growing among some U.S. officials that a cease-fire is nearing, perhaps by the end of this month. These officials disclosed for the first time that the United States had completed its contingency plans for the recovery of all American prisoners of war and for the withdrawal of all American prisoners of war and for the withdrawal of all American troops within 60 days after the agreement is signed.

There was no official comment on reports that Thieu had agreed to a separate accord between the United States and North Vietnam.

But South Vietnamese officials have said several times in the past Thieu himself has declared that any such bilateral agreement covering the release of American prisoners of war and a halt in U.S. military activity against North Vietnam would be of no concern to his government.

Thieu emphasized, however, that any bilateral agreement concerning the political shape of South Vietnam would be invalid without his signature, and this issue must be resolved between Saigon and the Viet Cong.

Nixon was reported to have made several points in a letter to Thieu, urging him to accept a cease-fire as soon as possible. Nixon also reaffirmed that the United States would not attempt to impose a coalition government or a political solution on South Vietnam.

One sticking point with Thieu in the draft agreement has been a provision that would establish a so-called National Council of Reconciliation and Concord with the general task of helping to promote the maintenance of a cease fire and supervising the elections to which the Saigon and Communist sides might agree.

240 Strikes

SAIGON (AP) — American war planes mounted their heaviest attacks against North Vietnam since the air war was restricted to targets below the 20th parallel, the U.S. Command announced yesterday.

Air Force and carrier-based planes launched more than 240 tactical strikes Saturday in a bid to disrupt a flood of fresh war material to the battlefronts of South Vietnam.

Peterson acknowledged that the availability to the United States of the Soviet Union's huge supply of natural gas was discussed during a visit to Moscow this year.

Mariner Ends Mission

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Mariner 9, which dropped into orbit around Mars one year ago today gave man his most piercing look at the once-mysterious red planet.

At 7:40 p.m. EST, Nov. 13, 1971, Mariner 9 probe became the first man-made object to circle another planet.

In 697 orbits, Mariner changed man's concept of his closest planetary neighbor. Scientists said they learned more about Mars during Mariner 9's mission than from the centuries of observations by men peering through telescopes.

Mariner ended its $125-million mission Oct. 27. It is still orbiting the planet but it no longer transmits scientific data and is expected to crash on Mars in about 50 years.

The space probe gathered evidence that Mars may have once supported life on the microbe level, said Dr. Thomas Vrebalovich, assistant project scientist at California Institute of Technology's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

"The mission also raised a slim possibility of life there now," he said in an interview.

In 1976, a Viking probe will parachute to the Martian surface to seek evidence of life.

A picture of a dynamic planet wracked by countless volcanoes and scarred with mountain ranges, canyons, pits and hollows emerged from the mission.

During the 349 days Mariner monitored Mars, it mapped the entire planet and transmitted 7,329 photographs that showed:

—A canyon up to 20,000 feet deep stretching the distance from Washington, D.C., to Los Angeles.

—A volcanic mountain 300 miles across that is twice as broad as the largest volcanic mountain on earth.

—A dust storm that scoured the entire planet with winds up to 115 miles per hour.

—Clouds believed to contain water ice rather than the more prevalent carbon dioxide ice.

—Evidence there was free-flowing water in Mars' distant past.

"The biggest thing is that Mars is really more earth-like than we expected from previous missions," Vrebalovich said.

Scientists discovered four major geological regions on Mars: a volcanic area, an equatorial plateau scarred with faults and rifts, an area both cratered and smooth in the northern and southern hemispheres, and polar caps blanketed by glacial sediment.

If large quantitites of water exist on Mars, they are locked up in permanent polar caps, scientists said.

Researchers also found a hood of variable clouds flowing west to east in the northern latitudes. Local dust storms, some resembling small cyclones, were sighted.

Judge To Instruct Jury In 'Fragging' Court-Martial

FT. ORD, Calif. (AP)–A jury of seven officers is to receive its final instructions today in the "fragging" court martial of Pvt. Billy Dean Smith.

Smith, 24, of Los Angeles, is charged with killing two young Army lieutenants in their Bien Hoa, South Vietnam, quarters with a grenade the prosecution has contended was meant for his commanding officer and first sergeant.

The presiding judge, Col. Rawls H. Frazier, said he would instruct the jury Monday. The prosecution and defense completed their final arguments over the weekend.

Frazier has ruled that the jury will deliberate only during working hours and will be sequestered during off-hours.

Although there have been numerous fragging incidents in the Vietnam war, the trial here is the first of its kind to be held in the United States.

When the court-martial began Sept. 6, Frazier ruled that Smith, if convicted, could not receive the death penalty, but he faces the possibility of life imprisonment.

The Army has charged Smith with killing 1st Lt. Thomas Dellwo of Choteau, Mont., and 2nd Lt. Richard Harlan of Dallas, Tex. The government says Smith "fragged" the two men–killed them with a fragmentation grenade–hoping to murder his commanding officer, Capt. Randall Rigby of Ft. Sill, Okla., and 1st Sgt. Billie Willis of Big Stony Gap, Va., who were not present.

French To Make Electric Cars

DIJON, France (AP)–The first electric-powered automobiles to look like real cars instead of beach buggies or props for circus bears will go unglamorously into service next year in Dijon.

Only the standard engine and transmission have been replaced in a series of 80 workaday Renault R4s that Electricite de France, the state-owned utility monopoly, is modifying to serve as repair and customer relations cars.

It wants to push the idea that autos that don't make smoke or noise have grown out of the futureland sections of amusement parks and into something solid enough that its repairmen can start driving in June.

"As far as we know, there's no other experimentation with electronic cars on this scale. Obviously, it's costing us, but we feel we are getting in right at the beginning of something that will have tremendous growth," said Pierre Wolf, the monopoly's research director, in introducing the cars in Dijon.

Turning the starter key in the remodeled R4s brings the disarming novelty of power and motion without noise. The transmission is anchored to second gear, but the car accelerates rapidly, the engine working itself up to the drone of a vaguely souped-up electric razor.

The source of power is 16 regular automotive batteries placed across the width of the car where a back seat normally would be. The batteries drive an electric motor linked to each axle. The weight of the batteries–close to 800 pounds–and their cumbersomeness is one of the big disadvantages of the car.

The cars' range in city driving is 40 to 48 miles without recharging the batteries. Electricite de France says this corresponds to the normal in-town daily mileage of its vehicles in Dijon. The cars have a top speed of 40 miles per hour.

Recharging the batteries takes 10 hours, but Electricite de France maintains this is unimportant because the cars normally would be out of service and garaged at night. The cost in electricity works out to about two cents per mile.

"There's a great deal of research going on to get a greater yield from the batteries," says Wolf. "We have enough faith in the program to have projected building 250 of the cars for our own fleet by 1976."

The choice of Dijon, a city of 150,000 in the center of France, as a test center is probably most honestly explained by the presence of Robert Poujade, the French government's minister of environment, as mayor of Dijon.

Ex-Minister Meets Brandt Foe

BONN, Germany (AP)–With the election a week away, Chancellor Willy Brandt's opponent, Rainer Barzel, stole the headlines yesterday by secretly meeting with a former key Brandt cabinet member whose support could affect the outcome.

Barzel met twice over the weekend with Prof. Karl Schiller, who earlier this year quit as Brandt's economics and finance minister in a row over how to curb inflation.

Schiller, whose reputation as an economics wizard had helped Brandt win the 1969 election, discussed possible cooperation with Barzel to hold back rising prices if the opposition Christian Democrats win the election, informed sources said.

The secret meetings, with no formal Barzel-Schiller agreement announced yet, were immediately seen as a Barzel attempt to make inflation over-shadow Chancellor Brandt's Nobel Prize-winning peace policy as the main issue.

Until yesterday, Brandt had dominated the news with his good neighbors treaty with Communist East Germany, initialed Wednesday.

Brandt shot back with a bitter attack on his former cabinet comrade. Prices rose even when Schiller was in the cabinet, Brandt said in a statement, and "phrase-making and conceit still do not add up to stability."

The word "conceit" was seen as a stinging reference to Schiller's image among his enemies as a prima donna.

Although nominally independent now, the economics professor has joined former Christian Democrat Chancellor Ludwig Erhard in a series of pro-Barzel advertisements assailing high prices.

Barzel's attempt to make inflation a winning issue also got a boost over the weekend with a government report that the cost of living index for October rose 6.4 per cent from the year-earlier level.

Inflation is a sensitive issue among Germans, who still remember how the value of their money was wiped out between the two world wars.

Opinion polls indicate next Sunday's balloting could be close.

A new dramatic move by Schiller, such as joining Barzel's Christian Democratic party in the closing days of the campaign, could be important in such a close election, observers said.

But the still-unresolved question was what Barzel could offer Schiller in return for such open support.

Barzel's shadow cabinet already is made up, and the economics and finance ministries already are promised to men who represent powerful factions in Barzel's party. Speculation centered on the possibility of Barzel creating a new cabinet post for Schiller or at least taking him on as a special "price stability" adviser if the opposition unseats Brandt.

Brandt, expressing strong confidence in the campaign for the first time, said last night that his coalition government has a good chance of being reelected.

Meningitis Vaccine To Brazil

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) — An experimental vaccine being tested in Connecticut against spinal meningitis, will be flown to Sao Paulo, Brazil for a massive child inoculation program next week, said Dr. Irving Goldschneider, one of the vaccine's developers.

The vaccine, developed at the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Washington, will be given to 200,000 children under four years of age Nov. 27-30 to combat a large outbreak of the disease, he said.

Dr. Goldschneider, who helped develop the vaccine at the institute, is now supervising tests on school children in Newington and Danbury, Conn. He is assistant professor of pathology at the University of Connecticut Health Center.

Dr. Goldschneider said there had been thousands of cases of type "C" meningitis in Sao Paulo after it appeared in January. He said hospitals report up to 15 new cases per day and that the death rate among infants is running 40 per cent and among adults at 25 per cent. Three fourths of the cases are in children, he said.

The vaccine is not approved for general use in the United States. The emergency shipment is from a U.S. Army stockpile, developed in 1967 to combat frequent meningitis epidemics at recruit training bases, Dr. Goldschneider said.

"The Habitat Project" Looks At Ecology

Channel 57's Environmental Reporting Team–Elliot Porter, Dan Kain (center), and John Kennedy–will present the first of many programs known as "The Habitat Project" on Monday, November 13 at 9:30. Check Channel 57 to see what's happening right here in Western Massachusetts.

"The Habitat Project" is about the work being done by Channel 57's Environmental Reporting Team. The program is on tonight at 9:30 and is the first of many programs about ecological issues throughout the Connecticut River watershed.

John Kennedy, Dan Kain and Elliot Porter have conducted hundreds of interviews with people in western Massachusetts, and clips from the video tape footage will be seen in this first presentation of "The Habitat Project".

The program also features a close-up of the controversy in Amherst concerning land development for housing. The Habitat Project will give a history of the problems involved with Amherst Fields, 600 acres of land undergoing rapid change as the Papparazzo builders get underway. Firsthand accounts of the situation will come from these people involved.

The Channel 57 Environmental Reporting Team will explain many complexities of the Raytheon Plan, which involves establishing regional solid waste districts.

The goal of the Environmental Reporting Team according to Channel 57 is to raise significantly the level of environmental literacy in Western Massachusetts. The three team members came to Channel 57 in September.

Project Director John L. Kennedy is a member of the faculty at Yale University's School of Art and a recent free-lance producer and director of programs for Connecticut Public TV, WNET-TV in New York, and CBC Toronto. Prior to moving to Yale in 1967, he was a television and film producer-director for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Dan Kain, the Team's producer-director, joins Channel 57 from the University of Wisconsin where he was a producer of instructional materials. With degrees from Marquette and Boston University, he served as the media coordinator for the Peace Corps in the midwest and a producer for WBBM-TV, CBS, Chicago.

Environmental reporter Elliot Porter has three degrees from Yale, including a Master in City Planning from the School of Art and Architecture and a Master of Forestry Science from the School of Forestry. For the last two years, he has focused on developing videotape as a tool for environmental research and education.

Ziff Wants Major In Journalism

By MARK VOLGER

Professor Howard Ziff, head of the Journalism program at UMass, said Thursday night a full fledged journalism major is needed here at the university in order to properly train aspiring journalists before they enter the field.

Ziff, a former reporter for the Chicago Daily News who also taught at the University of Chicago, lectured on journalism education before members of Alpha Phi Gamma–the National Honor Fraternity of Journalists.

He said that a first rate journalism department is something which is aspired to at the university, but is not a reality at the present time. Ziff is opposed to a double-major in Journalism–a curriculum which pools together a social science or humanity with what he refers to as a "minor" in Journalism.

He agreed that a future journalist doesn't need to major in Journalism any more than a musician prospect needs to major in Music. But he indicated that it would be to the advantage of the journalist hopeful to pursue a Journalism Major.

According to Ziff, "It is possible to receive the adequate training on the job. But it's better to receive the adequate training in the classroom.

"For one thing, if you make a mistake in the classroom, it's expected. If you do it on the job, you may get fired. Worse than that, you may not because the journalism standards in some places today are low."

Ziff said that there is a toughness and disillusionment built into the newspaper business. For the unprepared novice, on-the-job training simply doesn't exist, he said.

And as Ziff put it: "It's either sink or swim, and swimming means remaining afloat. Technical skills are taught more quickly in the classroom than on the job."

Ziff described the key role of Journalism education as being able to understand have "the models of signification" are used. He added that the social sciences are not reflective enough about their model building roles.

He said that every course should illustrate not just the technique alone, but how the technique formulates a way of knowing.

"It's one thing to know techniques, it's another thing to understand techniques and master the matrices from which they spring," Ziff said.

Professor Barney Emart, former chairman of the Journalistic Studies Department, questioned Ziff about a double-major, which Ziff called "an administrative handicap."

"It's illogical. It's an administrative mess. You can't chart the progress of the particular program combinations, and it's difficult to properly council the students enrolled under such a program," he said.

Ziff proposes to institute a 30-credit Journalism program at the university, but said that it may take some time--possibly two years.

As he sees it: "We now have a program. We now need a department and a news room full of typewriters. We also have to enlarge our faculty to an appropriate size."

Ziff discussed two journalism courses which he highly regards for student journalists. The History of Journalism and Journalism and Government.

"It's absolutely essential, if you engage in a career, that you understand how others feel about it. vital that you understand how your career stands in the wider social context."

"Journalism is a liberal art. So it's important that we know the models of signification in the other disciplines," he said.

During the course of his lecture, Ziff tried to explain the use of the word "professionalism" with regard to Journalism.

"A journalist plays a highly conditioned social role," Ziff said. "But his role is different in comparison to other professions. His role is not socially defined. His goal is simply the truth."

"Ultimately, the search for truth is a very different kind of thing than the search for justice, good health, or victory. A professional tries to control the consequences. The journalist tries to take the consequences.

"The journalist is a seeker of truth. His search is not a professional exercise, but rather an intellectual act. Journalism is a humanistic pursuit. It is not softened or sweetened by liberal arts.

Oil Co.'s Investigated

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP)--Attorneys general from many states are expected here today to discuss possible antitrust action against major gasoline companies.

Virginia Atty. Gen. Andrew P. Miller, chairman of the antitrust committee of the National Association of Attorneys General, called the meeting "a shirtsleeve session" to investigate legal grounds for such action.

Last June the NAAG adopted a resolution setting their primary objective of the year–the filing of "a multidistrict civil antitrust suit" against the major oil companies. All 50 states would be invited to join in the suit if one is filed.

16 Activists Sue N.Y. 'Red Squad'

NEW YORK (LNS) - Sixteen political activists won a preliminary battle in court recently when Federal Court Judge Edward Weinfeld - rejected defense efforts to dismiss their law suit challenging the activities of the Security and Investigation Section (SIS) of New York City's Police Department.

The suit charges the SIS, better known in New York City as the "Red Squad" with violating the constitutional rights of the plaintiffs.

If you've ever been in a demonstration in New York you've probably seen the Red Squad. Some of them are dapper, conventionally dressed middle-aged men who eye everyone and often trade slightly menancing quips with familiar faces. Others are not-so-conspicuous people who manage to look and dress like everyone else or pose as media people at demonstrations.

In recent years New York's Red Squad has changed from, in the words of one long time movement activist, "the shock troops of the cops" that used karate and brass knuckles to "beat the shit out of people", to a more discrete organization known for infiltrating New York movement groups.

The Red Squad freely admits in a court affidavit to using methods ranging from wiretaps and eavesdropping to photography and infiltration. They claim these techniques are used to "secure information relating to the activities of any person or group which is likely to result in a crime or a serious police problem."

Who are these groups? Well, just about anyone you can name because as soon as any group applies for a demonstration or march permit the SIS assigns undercover agents to cover the event. And they don't hide that fact either.

The lawsuit complains of the "chilling effect" of the activities of the Red Squad and charges that the constitutional rights of political activists are violated by the way the squad used informers, infiltration, interrogation, overt surveillance, intelligence-gathering and electronic surveillance.

These activities continue the complaint, inhibit freedom of speech, assembly and association and are designed to discourage political action groups from advocating unpopular views.

Judge Weinfeld noted that the defense affadavit, submitted by New York Police Commissioner Patrick V. Murphy denied that the Red Squad infringed on constitutional rights.

"In sum," said Weinfeld of Murphy's affidavit, "he states that the practices and procedures followed by the S.I.S. in carrying out its intelligence functions are within the scope of the duties imposed by the New York City Charter to protect the health, safety and welfare of the public."

But, Weinfeld ruled that, "the factual allegations contained in the commissioner's affidavit failed to conclusively refute those set forth by plaintiffs in their complaint."

The complaint does not challenge the use of informers and undercover agents as such, Weinfeld noted; it alleges that the Red Squad "exceeds permissable limits and goes beyond legitimate surveillance activities."

Murphy's affidavit did not contend that all the practices of the Red Squad were justified by law, noted Weinfeld, but stated that if there were any cases of police excessively harassing people it was a "violation of department policy."

However, if harassment did occur through "violations, that the political activists were still entitled to an injunction to prevent their constitutional rights from being further violated by this practice.

Weinfeld emphasized that this was not a ruling on the validity of the charges against the police but an affirmation that the activists are entitled to a hearing to air their charges.

Citing a recent Supreme Court case, Laird vs. Tatum, the judge noted that the mere existence of Army surveillance of civilians has been upheld. But he pointed out that the charges against the New York police include concrete cases of direct injury resulting from governmental action, bringing this case "beyond the pele" of the Tatum case.

The case is now going into a period of "Pretrial discovery" in which both sides will introduce more evidence. One of the lawyers for the plaintiffs, Marty Stolar, has indicated that the first pre-trial deposition that they take will be from William Knapp and Willis, chief executives for the Red Squad.

"We are asking that they hand over their depositions on December 4 at 7:30 at Washington Square Methodist Church," said Stolar. "By making it a public deposition we can inform people what the evidence against the SIS is."

Much of what the plaintiffs are trying to do is to find out how the SIS works. Who do they follow or bug? How do they decide who they are going to deal with? How extensive is their surveillance?

Groups like the Red Squad exist in some form in every large or medium size urban area and form the local links to the huge intelligence network that includes 20 federal agencies including the FBI, Army Intelligence and the Secret Service. This network and the paranoia that travels with it are growing but law suits such as this one could prove one way to make their job more difficult.

A film made by the Pacific Street Film collective in New York about the Red Squad is also going to be part of the plaintiffs case. But the biggest problem is getting the SIS to expose themselves. "The hard thing," says Stolar, "is that most of the information that we need to win this case is information that only the Red Squad has access to."

Teachers Charged With Cruelty

Miami (LNS) - A trial on the constitutionality of corporal punishment has revealed in sworn testimony that teachers in Miami's classrooms frequently use wooden sticks, belt buckles and brass knuckles to "maintain discipline and order."

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court by two students, claims that Dade County, Florida (Miami) teachers are using cruel and unusual punishment to enforce school rules.

The case stems from the beatings of two former junior high school students, but testimony has disclosed a much wider picture of disciplinary abuses by instructors and school officials throughout the country.

Numerous students from different schools in the Miami area said they have been beaten and bruised by over-zealous teachers and at least two youths testified that they received permanent disfiguring injuries from corporal punishment.

A 14 year old eighth grader said the assistant principal at his school, Drew Junior High a crumbling ghetto landmark, struck him on the back and head with a wooden paddle. When the student refused more corporal punishment he hit him with a belt buckle. Rodney Williams told the court that the school official chased him as he attempted to crawl away, knocking over desks as he swung wildly at the student.

Williams testified that the beating stopped only when blood gushed from his head and he was "shaking all over." The youngster, who is not one of those named in the suit, showed Judge Joe Eaton an inch-long scar on the side of his forehead he said was caused by the incident.

The assistant principal at Drew is on trial along with three other Drew administrators and the Dade County School Board. At stake is their controversial corporal punishment policy.

The School Board's guidelines for corporal punishment states that "no instrument shall be used that will produce physical injury...and no part of the body above the waist or below the knees may be struck." But many students and teachers have stated that certain school personnel freely wield dangerous weapons while "keeping order" in the classrooms.

Three separate witnesses said they saw a Dade County assistant principal wearing brass knuckles during confrontations with students. A fourth witness testified that he saw the administrator beat a youth with the knuckles.

Although the policy for corporal punishment makes it the principal's responsibility, a number of classroom teachers have taken it upon themselves to administer paddlings.

A large number of witnesses said nude boys were subjected to beatings by physical education teachers for being too noisy or for not "being in uniform" because they could not afford gym shorts. Other students said that entire physical education classes were hit repeatedly because someone had lost money and nobody would replace it.

Interviews with former Dade County teachers seemed to confirm the constant abuses of corporal punishment rules. Typically, a science teacher who once worked at Ada Merritt Junior High, said: "Teachers used their big, wooden paddles freely in the classroom for all infractions of the rules."

Two students from wealthy Key Biscayne, where President Nixon has his winter White House, joined ghetto and suburban youths in testifying. One of the junior high students said that his assistant principal forced another student to paddle him. When the administrator was not satisfied that the boy was hit hard enough, he had him paddled again by his classmate.

School Board rules state that corporal punishment must be administered "under conditions not calculated to hold the student up to ridicule or shame."

Attorney Alfred Feinberg, representing the two students who initiated the suit, said that any policy of corporal punishment in Dade County schools and damages for his clients.

Because it is being tried in Federal Courts on constitutional grounds, the case is expected to affect school districts far from South Florida. The suit, which is in adjournment, will resume on November 28th.

Another Letter-Bomb Found In Glasgow

LONDON (AP) - Detectives checking the offices of 50 Jewish firms in Glasgow found another letter bomb yesterday the 19th to reach Britain from India.

The cream-colored letter was discovered among unopened mail at an unidentified firm on the south side of Scotland's largest city. The envelope, posted in India on Nov. 5, contained plastic explosive and a metal detonating device.

It was the second mail bomb found and disposed of in Glasgow since Saturday. Another 17 terror envelopes, all postmarked either New Delhi or Bombay, have been discovered in London.

One of the first batch exploded and wounded a Jewish diamond merchant in his London office Friday.

Scotland Yard, which has set up a special squad to handle the postal menace blamed on the Arab terrorist "Black September" movement, warned Jewish businessmen to be extra careful in dealing with the Monday morning mail. The 50 firms checked by Glasgow police Sunday all were listed in the Zionist Year Book.

Detective Chief Superintendent James Binnie, Glasgow's top crime-buster, told newsmen: "We have stopped all mail that has arrived in the city's post offices from India. It will not be delivered until today. We have warned the Jewish community."

A London attorney, meanwhile, issued a public warning that private Jewish organizations and individuals may be forced to take the law into their own hands in the fight against terrorism.

Malvyn Benjamin, deputy chairman of the right-wing Heruth Movement, told the British section of the World Jewish Congress: "If we cannot rely on governments and police forces of the world to protect their own Jews from terrorism, then we must end the policy of reconciliation...It is time for the terrorists to become the terrorized."

The congress passed a resolution proposed by Benjamin demanding that the United Nations and all governments take effective steps "to hunt down and eliminate these killers."

In Copenhagen, meanwhile, Danish police warned Jewish and Israeli persons and organizations Sunday against letter bombs.

They also warned all post offices after receiving a note from India which said it found three letter bombs meant for Denmark together with letter bombs for England and Switzerland.

A warning broadcast by Danish radio said the letters contained plastic explosives in thin plates powerful enough to kill a man.

Yale Delays Coed Decision

NEW HAVEN (AP)--Yale University trustees have bowed to an alumni association request to postpone a decision on the future of undergraduate coeducation at the Ivy League school.

The trustees had been expected to issue a decision Sunday on the male-female ratio the university would aim for in the years to come. Yale began coeducation in the fall of 1969 and now has about four men students to every woman.

The trustees put off further consideration of the issue until their December meeting, after a request to do from the newly formed Association of Yale Alumni AYA.

Loser's Lament

Led by Representative Louis Morini, Amherst area Republicans, in the wake of a poor showing in last Tuesday's elections, will file legislation which would repeal the ruling allowing students to vote in college towns. Among charges levelled by the Republican candidates are that students are very temporary members of the community and that they are so hard to keep track of they could probably vote twice, here and at home.

This sudden burst of legislative frenzy on the part of the Republicans can be directly attributed to the fact that most of them ended up on the short end of the balloting last Tuesday. The idea that the student vote is unjust would proably never had occurred to them had they been the victors in the election. Four years is by no means temporary time to be living in a community, and while we are living here we are governed by the laws of that community. As far as the allegation that students might be able to vote twice goes, that is just plain ridiculous.

It would almost be an infringement on the rights of students if they were not allowed to vote in their college towns. It is unfair to force such a large bloc of people to go through the bother of having to go home to vote especially when the college administration refuses to cancel classes on election day or get an absentee ballot. The ruling which allows students to vote in their college towns aids the proper execution of the democratic process, and as such should not be repealed.

The Rules Of The Game

In the course of the recent campaign there was more than a little bit of rhetoric flying back and forth between the supporters of the various candidates, with quite a few cries of "foul" from all sides. In view of the fact that some of those cries were directed at these pages it seems appropriate at this time to outline the basic rules that govern the operation of the editorial pages so that people might have a better insight into just what kind of thinking determines editorial policy and just what rules we live by around here.

First of all, there is the policy of what exactly the newspaper stands for and what is private opinion. This is simple enough to define, being merely that all letters, cartoons, or columns which have a name affixed to them represent the view of the author only. On the other hand, anything that is unsigned represents the views of the newspaper. So far this year, and this will probably apply to 99 44/100% of the cases, the only unsigned piece on the editorial pages has been the daily policy editorial, set in a double column in larger than average print on the lefthand side of the columns page. Anyone may suggest material for a policy editorial, but it will only be used if the Board of Editors agrees with the opinion expressed and if it is deemed important enough to be used as a policy editorial.

There is also the policy of rebuttal on all letters, columns, and unsigned editorials, the policy being that anyone who wishes to reply to anything on the pages has the right to do so. There are times when there is not enough room to put a reply in immediately, but they all get in eventually unless there is some kind of slander involved in the reply. As far as editing goes, no letter is ever edited for content without the express consent of the author. However, it may be edited for spelling or grammatical errors, or for cases of space limitation, and as long as the content isn't changed the author's consent need not be solicited.

At times it happens that response to a certain issue is overwhelmingly or completely in favor of one side of an argument. If someone wishes to take an opposite stand, he/she is certainly welcome to do so, and that stand will be printed. But if no one steps forward to defend an opposite viewpoint, in most cases we don't consider it our responsibility to draft someone who will. The national political campaigns gave us a sterling example of this. Out of a campus of about 23,000 people, only one person took a pro-Nixon and/or anti-McGovern stand on the editorial pages in the form of a column, while there was a very great pro-McGovern/anti-Nixon turnout. Either the campus was heavily in favor of McGovern or the Nixonites weren't talking. Whatever the case, all we ended up with from the conservative point of view was that writer's column every Thursday.

In conclusion it should again be stressed that the editorial pages are open to everyone on campus, and everyone on campus is welcome to them. As long as what you write is not libelous we'll take it, and do our best to print it as soon as possible.

Steve Tripoli is Executive Editor.

Election '72-A Perspective

By FRED JOHN

Well, I suppose we shouldn't be too surprised - we were amply prepared for it by the pollsters and newsmen. And yet, the anchormen's constant reminder of "the greatest landslide in history;" the smug Oval Office tele-sneer; topped off by the ballroom scene of jubilant bodies sporting partially outstretched arms coordinated with the chanting of "Four more years!"; and the special attention given to Nixon's walking insurance policy and would-be heir-as-apparent-as-possible, Spiro Agnew: all of this was still painful, in the most profound way, and sent chills up the spine.

It was even worse in contrast with McGovern's noble, totally honest concession appearance. The commentators, eager to get in one final stab at what they termed McGovern's inconsistency, pointed out that , the Senator had said earlier he would not call for the country to rally behind the President, and now apparently he was doing just that. As usual, the press misunderstood him. The Senator said very specifically that his wire to Nixon offered his help to any administration effort to find peace and establish justice. I doubt if McGovern will be able to find four minutes in the next four years when he can activate his pledge.

The idea of four more years is frightening, and before we prepare to numb ourselves again (so we will not be petrified by each new outrage that will surely follow), we should consider just why this sickening set of circumstances has come about. it's easy to say that America will get what she deserves, that every worker who voted Republican will pay the price in food, high taxes, continued risk of military conflict, and the inevitable social consequences of sweeping all our problems under the rug. But this ignores the fact that those most drastically effected by Nixon's policies had no vote in the election - the people of Southeast Asia. They are not getting what they deserve Nor are the millions of poor, unemployed, or enlightened people who will continue to suffer from the President's indifference, hostility, or increased repression.

A real understanding of what is taking place revolves around such indefinite words as "tone" and "mood." A President, beyond his formal powers, sets a tone which has a tremendous impact over the mood of the nation. His attitudes toward change, his personal honesty or crookedness, his idealism or cynicism the ideas of his life-long Supreme Court appointees, all spill over into other branches and levels of government, and into other branches and levels of government, and into the national morality. National moods go in cycles, and sometimes these moods are in phase with the President's, sometimes not and some waiting or catching up takes place. But no nation can stand indefinitely on the threshold of change. We are now in the process of moving away from it.

Since World War II this country has approached that threshold several times, but has always backed away too soon. The whole world reacted to the horror of Nazism by swinging to the left, and in many countries coalitions of progressive parties hoped to lead the world away from the abyss. The U.S. started on that path but stopped short. Of many reasons, the refusal to recognize the implications of Nazi racism and imperialism in our own society was certainly one. The coming of the Cold War (a result of both Soviet and American policies) let the American people off the hook. Under Eisenhower much could have been done, but the President set a tone of do-nothingness that reenforced the mood of passivity that only waned as the civil rights movement grew.

John Kennedy may have done little as President, but he set a tone of youthful action that let people believe that progress was possible, and this hopeful mood lasted for almost a decade. Lyndon Johnson at first capitalized on this mood to push through much legislation, then squandered it as he became obsessed with the war.

Nixon is even worse, for while Johnson had some real programs, Nixon has none. He doesn't really believe weighty social problems can be solved, not at a price he is willing to pay, so he prefers covering them up, mainly by suppressing those who would discuss them. Few Presidents have been as cynical and amoral as Richard Nixon.

Increasingly since late 1965 the White House has been the home of reaction, and the national mood has finally swung back to the racism, militarism, and uncritical passivity that has marked most of post-war America. Fortunately, much of the progress already achieved cannot be taken away, especially that achieved in self-awareness. All oppressed minorities are stronger and more action-oriented than ever before, and their consciousness is something internalized, to be harbored and nourished. (I found it particularly gratifying that American Indians were occupying Interior Department offices on the day of Nixon's greatest triumph.) And this awareness will help push the pendulum back so that, hopefully by 1976, the reaction to inertia will be upon us again, and Nixon, Agnew, and all the hawks and rascists and their blind robot followers will be swept away. Let us be ready for that time.

Letters To The Editor

Refractive Reflection

To The Editor:

This letter is in response to Reid Fishman's 10 November editorial, which praised the McGovern campaign while labeling the Jenness/Pulley SWP campaign as "impractical".

The real impractical candidates in the recent election were McGovern and Nixon, as their allegiances lie not to the people, but to a doomed system--that of capitalism, in its highest and last stage, imperialism. Anyone who is familiar with the basic writings of Marx, Lenin and Trotsky, realizes that capitalism cannot last, as it uses the method of over-production in a finite world to survive. It is not individual politicians who breed wars, but the capitalist system itself. And no matter how much McGovern tried to hide his politics by projecting a liberal, "grassroots", now image, the fact remains that he is first and foremost a capitalist; for the ruling class, of the ruling class, and by the ruling class.

McGovern's campaign was one long sellout. Check his Senate voting record; he voted pro-war up until 1969, pro-draft until 1967, anti-Civil Liberties until 1968, and anti-labor until 1967. And then, all of a sudden, BANGO! he's a liberal. I saw him on Boston Common on 15 October, 1969, denouncing the war and urging people to participate in mass demonstrations. I heard him again in the Spring of 1972 denouncing mass demonstrations, the backbone of the anti-war movement which gave him the spotlight. He couldn't use the movement anymore, so he dumped it. I watched him use Women, Blacks, and Gays to obtain the Democratic nominaion, and later dump and ignore these same oppressed groups because they were "embarassing to his campaign." I saw him seek an endorsement from the Chicano La Raza Unida Party, and when LRUP decided to remain an independent movement, I heard McGovern level smear charges--with ugly racist overtones--against the Chicanoes and other unnamed Black "militants". This, then, is a portrait of the man Mr. Fishman considered a practical "grassroots" candidate. Are not Women, Students, Workers, Blacks, Gays and Chicanos part of the "grassroots"? Why then, did McGovern use and ignore these groups in favor of the Daly machine and the Meany bureaucracy?

Above all, McGovern was as much of an imperialist as Nixon. St. George promised continued massive support for Israel, a U.S. beachhead of imperialism which is denying over two million Palestinians the right to self-determination. And his stand on Indochina was so twisted and watered down after the nomination that it differed little from Nixon/s. Which is the "Lesser-evil"; a Republican hawk or a Democrat hawk in doves feathers?

In regards to Mr. Fishman's statement "...America "relieved itself" of one of the greatest men (McGovern) in its history." I half agree with this. America certainly relieved itself. However, the blame lies with George alone--for turning his so-called "grassroots" movement into a bowel movement.

It's A Bitch

To The Editor:

To Republican Representative Louis Morini, Hampshire County: FUCK YOU!

Who the hell do you think you are?
What kind of shit are you trying to pull?
Dig this.

Morini intends "to file legislation to repeal the ruling allowing students to vote in college towns."

"'The vote of the colleges is the worst thing that's ever happened; Morini charged..." (MDC, 11-10-72)

In Western Massachusetts, where 90-plus-% of registered voters turned out, the student vote, in particular, was responsible for the election of Democrat state representative, James Collins, 2nd Hampshire District, and for the election of John Olver as a Democratic Massachusetts state senator, thereby ousting Morini's protege, Republican John Barrus.

(Not to mention, the victory of the Massachusetts populace.)

Ain't it a bitch? Hunh, Louey?

Nixon wouldn't even use your face as his throne. (And not many voters in the U.S. would use him as their's.)

Do you actually believe that such ludicrous legislation has even the most remote possibility of being enacted?

One way to find out, right?
Go on. File it, Louey.
We'll stomp all over you, mother-fucker!
We will stomp all over you.

The Fine Arts

AN OPEN LETTER:

As students, we are concerned with how our student monies are spent. Only rarely do we have the opportunity to effect the decisions that use student monies. And when those opportunities do arise, if we are sincere in voicing our opinions, I feel we should utilize them.

One organization on campus that uses student monies is the Fine Arts Council. The Fine Arts Council is supported by the Fine Arts fee paid by UMass undergraduate students each semester. Its reponsibility is to provide the University community with a varied, well-balanced program in the professional arts, including classical and popular music, theatre, dance, art, and film.

So that its programs will be reflective of the interests of the University community, the Fine Arts Council welcomes suggestions from the University community as to what they would like to see on this campus in the area of fine arts.

This week, from Monday the 13th until Friday the 17th, there will be a suggestion box at the Information Desk on the Campus Center Concourse for those who have suggestions as to what they would like the Fine Arts Council to bring for next year. I urge you to exercise this privilege so that the Fine Arts Council will be more representative of you.

Earl H. Strickland
Student Manager, Fine Arts Council

You'll Get Yours

To The Editor:

I have read the replies to my letter of November 6 and I am tempted to answer them back but, unfortunately, I don't have the time to get locked into a big debate with anyone on any kind of issue. The people who wrote me via the Collegian will get personal replies from me shortly.

Personally, I don't like doing business this way but I just don't have the time to keep writing to the "Letters to the Editor" or to carry on an extensive debate.

However, I do have one conclusion: From what I have seen, read and heard from the people that have reacted to my letters, I can only conclude that the majority of people around UMass would like to see the Indian on the Massachusetts State Seal taken off and have a hammer and sickle put in its place!

General Rhetoric? Yess, General Rhetoric!! HaHa! We're all going to learn General Rhetoric. HaHaHaHaHaHa...!

Did you catch Governor Sargent's letter to the students? He's telling us how to reform education. Just don't spend any money. What a mind for figures!

Hooray For The Senate!

To The Editor:

Please excuse this impersonal method of communication. It is the only way I have, however of communicating with all Senators at one time.

I want to express my personal appreciation for last Thursday's discussion of the Rhetoric Program. While I was pleased with the vote, I was also pleased, as a relative newcomer to the campus, with the open and relevant discussion carried on.

I am most anxious to move ahead to meet the needs of the campus community in improving the ability of our students to communicate while exempting as many as possible from unnecessary requirements. I hope that you will not lose your interest in the improvement of this program.

While, at your direction, an all University Committee will be set up to make recommendations, I would be pleased to hear from you about your views and the views of your constituents. I would be pleased to meet with interested groups of faculty members and students to achieve maximum input for our re-examination of the program. Please call me if I can be of service to you.

What Rhetoric!

To The Editor:

It occasions exquisite pain in me that the good Mr. Ellsworth Barnard should have construed my defense of the rhetoric requirement as actuated by an "overbearing and self-righteous" attitude. What occasions more pain, though, is the gentleman's belief that his impressionistic and self-abnegating meanderings constitute a rebuttal.

First, Mr. Barnard maintains that the average UMass student is "the most literate" he has taught, in a nomadic stint of tutoring that included Wisconsin, Williams, and Bowdoin. I was four years at Bowdoin, and know for a certainty that he is wrong in at least one of his examples. But his contention contains two unexamined postulates: (1) that "literacy" can be equated with the kinds of skills the rhetoric requirement aims to instill, and (2) that the alleged paramount literacy of the UMass student entails his being beyond need for further instruction. Mr. Barnard's claim that only 6 of 77 composition students under his tutelage needed the course is perhaps more a sign of his low aim than his charge's high competence.

Second, I do not despise the UMass student in urging that he or she, in general, needs the rhetoric requirement. I have met many intelligent and industrious students in my teaching here. However, the demands of rhetoric for a mastery of material and structure are of a different order than the self-indulgent rhapsodizing that afflicts all too many English composition classes, and does not settle Muse-gifted upon the undergraduate shoulder. There is no royal road to rhetoric, no person so silvered of tongue or imperious of gesture that he cannot profit much from some delving in the rudiments of analysis and argument and explication. Such is my considered, and humble, opinion.

Thanking you for you indulgence,
Clark Irwin

Stop Soviet Blackmail

To The Editor:

It is a great act of courage for a Soviet Jew to apply for an exit visa. Once he submits his petition to leave for Israel, he is immediately dismissed from his job and quite often his children are expelled from school. The applicant and his family are closely checked by police and numerous impediments are placed in their way. At worst, through an interlocking chain of events, this bold step may lead to a jail sentence-imprisonment for the ostensibly innocent act of requesting an exit visa. This is an infringement upon internationally recognized human rights.

Recently the Soviet government has stepped up their campaign to severely limit the emigration of Jews, by imposing the notorious Head Tax. This ransom tax is directly aimed at educated Jews. They must pay to the government exhorbitant fees for the level of education which they have attained. The Soviet government has transformed the intelligentsia into a class of indentured servants. One Soviet Jew recently said: "An average specialist must pay about 10,000 rubles, about the average salary of an engineer for ten years. There is not one person in the Soviet Union who has such a sum of money. Even if a person had such a sum of money he would be taken as a thief because an honest person cannot get such a sum for his work."

There has been overwhelming senate support for the Jackson Amendment. The measure, attached to the East-West trade Bill, will deny any trade concessions and credits to the USSR until they rescind this Ransom tax. The Jackson Amendment places congress in opposition to the White House which is pressing for speedy and fairly unhindered trade with the USSR. History seems to repeat itself. In December 1911 the House approved a measure by 300-1 directing President Taft to abrogate a USA—Russian trade treaty because of Czarist anti-semitism. After intense pressure, Taft finally complied.

It behooves every student and professor on this campus to protest now. I urge everyone to cut out today's full page ad in the Collegian and send it to Premier Kosygin, President Nixon, and our elected officials. We must say no. We cannot allow the Soviet government to carry on this systematic Blackmail!

Women's Caucus In Marathon

The Woman's Caucus of the School of Education is participating in Marathon because they feel that "an important audience is created by this event." Educators from not only this community, but from many others are attending; and they are painfully aware of the lack of serious attention given to sexism in education. This not only refers to teacher's attitudes and curriculum, but also to the position of women within learning institutions.

However, they want their presentation to be different from the usual process of experiences that occur during Marathon week; therefore, they are devoting one full day to discussing women's issues in education. Their hope is to bring together women in spirit and work to become engaged in an on-going dialogue.

The Women's Caucus has chosen Tuesday as the day by for and about women. The central meeting place is Mark's Meadow School which is behind the School of Education. It begins at 2:30 and will end at 10:00 P.M.

The schedule of events is:

2:30-4:00: A raising of provocative issues regarding sexism in education.

4:00-5:30: Women bearing testimony about sexist bias encountered within the School of Education and within the educational establishment.

5:30-7:00: Pot Luck Supper-come and share conversation food and ideas. Showing of "The Women's Film".

7:00-8:00: Sexism in Public Schools

Odyssey of a Woman

A View of Women's Roles in the History of Education

A Look at Women in Administrative Positions in Public Schools.

8:00-9:00: A New Approach to Female Counseling

Women in the High School

The Status of Women in the University of Mass

An Introduction to Conciousness Raising in Groups

9:00-10:00: Body Movement and Improvisation

On Wednesday from 3:00-4:00 in Rm. 126 of the School of Education there will be a workshop on the Profile of Women and Sexism within the School of Ed. All interested people are welcomed.

LAME DUCK--Elmer, the pet duck of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Maly of Macdonald, Man., was kicked by a horse recently and suffered a broken leg and a crushed wing. Into traction he went, with a stovepipe elbow serving as a cast and the rubber boots preventing him from walking about. The Malys are hoping for a quick recovery so Elmer can join his fellow pet ducks, Bert and Ernie. (CP)

Roman Fertility Gods Found

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Two previously unknown Roman fertility gods have been discovered by a joint Harvard-Cornell University archaeology expedition to the city of Sardis in western Turkey.

Archaeologists found a stone inscription describing the gods along with a seventh century lime kiln which may have been used to melt down statues of the gods-called Abundance and Growth-who were said to be children of the Roman corn goddess.

The director of the expedition, Professor George Hanfmann of Harvard, theorizes that a fertility cult existed around the worship of these dieties.

"It is presumed the cult was built around the worship of these dieties.

"It is presumed the cult was built around food," Hanfmann says. "These were not bloody gods and there were no animal sacrifices. The gods were probably offered the first fruits of harvest-vegetables, corn and other grain-in a ceremony sort of like our Thanksgiving."

The find was made this summer in a gymnasium at the Sardis site, which has been under excavation since 1958.

The inscription said the statutes of the gods had been given to the city's gymnasium by a wealthy Roman in the third century A.D. to insure the prosperity of the city and the suburbs of Sardis.

Hanfmann says archaeologists found the lime kiln within a few feet of the statue base and theorizes that the god statues and many others in the gymnasium hall probably were melted down. Many pieces of sculpture littered the floor around the kiln indicating that a number of statues were destroyed.

The statues were a readily available source of lime, Hanfmann says, which was used to make cement for buildings and roads. He says investigations show the kiln was used in the seventh century after the Persians had destroyed the city.

This summer's expedition also discovered a large bathing pool connected to an advanced subterranean drainage system, which excavaters discovered in the gymnasium.

Archaeologists theorize that the pool inside the gymnasium was ringed with sculpture because the marble pedestal of a sculpture, with an opening in its side to hold a water pipe, was found in the pool.

An inscription on the pedestal indicated that Basilikos, a previously unknown governor of the Roman province of Lydia, gave a fountain to the baths at the time when they were rebuilt-probably after one of the severe regional earthquakes which occurred in the fourth century.

RESCIND THE HEAD TAX

We the undersigned members of the University of Massachusetts community* express our moral outrage to the Soviet government for levying a ransom tax upon educated Jews. Such a practice is unknown in any free country. There are tens of thousands of Jews who see no future as Jews in the USSR and wish to leave. This systematic blackmail is a harrassment which attempts to limit the emigration of Jews to Israel. It is an infringement upon internationally recognized human rights.

We strongly support the seventy-six United States Senators who have endorsed the Jackson Amendment. Whereas we welcome the opening of trade with the USSR, the pending East-West Trade Bill which treats Russia as a favored nation should not be signed at the expense of human freedom.

We urge the Soviet Government to end discrimination of the USSR Jews and rescind this notorious law.

"Black Terror" Stage Tonight

"The Black Terror", a revolutionary adventure, will be performed this evening, at 8 in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. This production by The Street Theatre of Ossining, N.Y. is sponsored by the Fine Arts Council in conjunction with the University's Third World Alliance.

Richard Wesley's play is offered for the first time outside of its run at Joseph Papp's Public Theatre in New York. "Jet" magazine has characterized the work as "...a play about revolution, not TV revolution or the Park Avenue kind, but real revolution where hard decisions have to be made about who's going to live and who's going to die."

Remaining tickets for "The Black Terror" are $1 to full-time UMass undergraduates and $1.50 to others and may be obtained through the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall until 4 p.m. today. At 7 p.m. a box office will open at Bowker Auditorium. Box offices may be reached by telephoning (413) 545-0202.

Mr. Stevenson has built a solid reputation in theatre circles for his success with the Street Theatre performances and is expected to discuss, in an informal way, the techniques and problems of the Street Theatre movement.

The Street Theatre of Ossining, New York is visiting the University today under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council in conjunction with the Third World Alliance. Following the performance a reception will be held in the Colonial Lounge, Student Union, so that the University community will have an opportunity to visit with this noted theatre group.

QE2 Leaves Hub Harbor

BOSTON (AP)-The Cunard liner Queen Elizabeth II made a trouble-beset call on Boston Saturday, but finally sailed more than three hours late, for a nine-day cruise in the Caribbean.

The big ship came directly to Boston from England, skipping her scheduled stop in New York, because she was several days late in starting the crossing.

New York was passed up so the ship could keep to a schedule she has for a number of cruises out of Boston in the next couple of months.

She brought 1,400 passenger to Boston, many of them unhappy over the delay and because they had to go by train, bus or plane to New York.

The disembarkation was slowed because of an unusually high tide which raised the ship so high that some baggage doors along her port side were too far above the pier to be used.

Longshoremen estimated that 5,000 pieces of luggage, including many trunks, had to be unloaded through hatches and other openings which were available.

Customs searches and immigration checks also stretched out the landing procedures for the passengers, and a further complication came when the Coast Guard ordered that the entire crew of 90 conduct a lifeboat drill.

In addition to the cruise passengers, QE2 also took aboard 30 carpenters, who are to continue repair work during the Caribbean cruise.

Poll Shows Kennedy Strong

PRINCETON N.J. (AP)-The Gallup Poll said Sunday that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., would have been a stronger candidate against President Nixon than Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., was.

The pollster's next to last survey before Election Day, which showed Nixon preferred over McGovern by 59 to 36 per cent of those asked, also should the President leading Kennedy by on 52-43 among tne same voters.

Gallup said that the Massachusetts senator scored well without having campaigned for the presidency.

The poll said Kennedy showed up as early as December, 1971 as the strongest potential candidate among Democratic voters, trailing Nixon by only three percentage points at that time.

Kennedy was stronger in several categories where defections hurt the South Dakota senator.

While Nixon won the under-30 vote, Kennedy led the President 55-41 in the survey. Kennedy had a 53-41 margin over Nixon in the October survey among blue collar workers, a sampling in which McGovern trailed the President 44-49. Among Catholics, Kennedy led Nixon 53-43, and McGovern trailed him 37-59.

Younger Legislators Win

By The Associated Press

There will be a younger look in state legislative chambers across the nation as a result of last week's elections.

Teen-agers, college students and young working and professional people won legislative races from Rhode Island to Hawaii. None are politically radical, most are conservative dressers and few attribute their victories to the youth vote.

The election of people in their 20s to state assemblies and senates is no longer a novelty. But their number probably doubled this year and, for the first time, a scattering of teen-agers won legislative races.

The trend toward electing youthful public officials surfaced in other contests. Delaware voters elected Joseph R. Bidden to the U.S. Senate. Bidden won't be 30, minimum age to serve in the Senate, for another week. And a 26-year-old political novice, Saburt Atkinson, won the job of drain commissioner in Muskegon County, Mich.

But it was in state legislative races that the youth movement really took hold:

--Steve Fowler, 22, will drop out of the University of Nebraska to take the Nebraska Legislature seat he won by ousting the chairman of the legislature's executive board.

--The two youngest members ever to serve in the Vermont House of Representatives, 18-year-old Michael Obchowski and 19-year-old Gregory Reed, both Republicans, were elected with no particular help from the youth vote.

--Archie Hapri III, a 26-year-old Vietnam veteran, was elected to Hawaii's House of Representatives over 68-year-old Mindru Inaba, the state's oldest candidate.

--Two 19-year-olds, Roger Begin and P. Michael Taylor, ran for state representative in Rhode Island. Begin won and Taylor held a 31-vote lead with all but absentee ballots counted.

--Four young Democrats with a combined age of 88 years won election to the Republican-controlled House of Representatives in Kansas by defeating incumbents whose ages total 239 years.

Marc Gaspard, 24, easily won a seat in the Washington State House of Representatives. He campaigned on jobs and taxes and said he planned no legislation aimed at satisfying the demands of young people.

James A. Yost, 24, a retailer and wholesaler of dairy products in Idaho, campaigned on better representation for his district. Short-haired and politically conservative, Yost said he did not campaign for the youth vote and most observers felt his election reflected a statewide trend to put more Republicans in the legislature.

The youth vote did play an important part in the election of Michael G. Glover, 25, a recent graduate of the University of Kansas, to the Kansas House of Representatives.

Glover ran in Douglas County, home of the university, where the campus' 18,000 students represent nearly one-third of the population.

Search Widened For Missing Boy

NORTH ATTLEBORO, Mass. (AP) - A widening search was underway yesterday for Paul Cavalieri, 14, missing since Thursday, after the arrest of Edward Stanley Lykus, 19, of Woonsocket, R.I. on federal charges of possession of money in connection with a kidnaping.

Cavalieri, the son of Anthony Cavalieri, a contractor, disappeared Nov. 2, and in subsequent days, police reported, his parents received letters and telephone calls demanding a $50,000 ransom.

Police said the money was paid and was picked up Thursday.

The boy's father denied that any ransom demand was received, or that any money was paid.

Police and FBI agents, however, swarmed through the area and arrested Lykus in an automobile in North Attleboro Saturday.

He was arraigned on the money possession charge before U.S. Magistrate Luke Smith in New Bedford, and was held in the Bristol County Jail there in $500,000 bail.

Lykus, 6-foot-9 and weighing 260 pounds, is the son of a former police chief in Attleboro. His father died Dec. 21, 1970 of a self-inflicted gunshot wound.

Commuters Sponsor VD Seminar

The fifth seminar in the Commuter Health Education Series will be held tomorrow at 12:00 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. This series is being sponsored by the Commuter Assembly and The Health Education Division of the University Health Services.

Tuesday's guest will be Dr. Thomas McBride, Chief of Staff at the University Health Center, who will discuss venereal disease on campus. The incidence of venereal disease, particularly gonorrhea, is reaching epidemic proportions in the nation. Dr. McBride will discuss this phenomenon and how it relates to these diseases at UMass. He will also talk about ways of prevention, early detection, methods of treatment, and the prognosis for treated cases and for those that go untreated.

One of the problems in dealing with VD is the social stigma attached and he will describe the ways the Health Center tries to overcome this stigma in their efforts to follow-up cases.

There will be 2 more talks scheduled in this series, one on Nov. 28, which will be conducted by a member of Mental Health Services, and the last on Dec. 12, which will be with a physician from the Health Center to field any general questions the students might have to ask. During the series, we have attempted to provide information to the off-campus population about many of the health problems they may face.

The Commuter Assembly would like feedback from the students on desirability of continuing this series next semester. The Commuter Assembly office is located on the first floor of The Campus Center in the Student Activities Office.

UMass Day School Full Up For Spring

The University Day School, located at Bowditch Lodge on University Drive, has a waiting list of 45 children for the spring semester, and says it is impossible to admit any more children.

The demand for low-cost pre-school care in the area is great, and the University Day School is providing an alternative for UMass student/-parents of children under age 5. What the school is willing to do is help parents set up their own parent-run pre-school programs. They will provide materials, workshops. Possibly aides, and a liaison with the State licensing agencies.

If you are interested in such a program and would like to know more about it, call Janie Rewak or Betsy Pelz at the University Day School at 545-2466 or Janice at 253-9670.

Scheduling-A Complex Game

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Sophistication has crept into all areas of sports and nowhere is this more evident than in the selection of opponents. In football, games are planned as far ahead as 1980, while in other sports, such as basketball, opponents are scheduled one full season in advance.

Many years ago, all it took was a handshake between the leaders of the two teams. Now, it is comparative to trying to date the most popular girl on campus. There are so many other considerations.

Scheduling involves strategy, as well as trying to put the right peg in the right hole. The intertwining of sports (For Homecoming weekend, there is a home soccer game in the morning, followed by a home football game in the afternoon against the same school) along with such items for consideration, as being in the Yankee Conference and the goals for each sport, make the job even more complex. Even if two schools do agree to play each other in a certain sport, there is a time lag before this can be implemented.

Most of the legwork and paperwork in the scheduling process is done by Robert O'Connell, the Assistant Director of Athletics. He communicates with other schools and then confers with the coach involved. He said, "90% of the time, neither school gets exactly what they want. It is too much to expect to get exactly what you want. It involves playing by ear and always talking to the coaches."

A new schedule is not thought up each year. Instead it evolves over the years. The first considerations are converence and perrenial opponents. O'Connell said, "Every sport in our program has a schedule which is at least 80% repetition (same teams each year)."

The conference and NCAA rules determine how many games will be played. Finances go a long way in determining who and where. O'Connell said, "You try to get schools into slots you would like to have them and keep them there by using corresponding dates." That is why we play such schools as Boston College in football always on the last Saturday of the schedule.

Other considerations include: maintenance of a home and away balance, the academic schedule, the geographical distance, the way each school sees itself and whether the two schools can fit each other into their schedules.

Each year, the number of home and away games are approximately the same. So, if a team is dropped or drops you, then a team must be selected that can play in Amherst when the dropee was supposed to.

The academic scnedule dictates when the players are eligible to play and, especially in the winter, when the students will be in session and therefore able to attend a home game. When there are final exams or a break in classes, the schedule has to be altered accordingly. This year, from December 17 to January 27, the basketball and hockey teams are forced to play an away schedule.

The distance away the school is also determines whether and when we play them. We don't play football and basketball in California, because we don't have the funds available. We play a team such as West Virginia on Saturday, due to the long distance.

When a new team is being considered, such thoughts as are they too strong, too weak or financially unattractive are considered. At the same time, the opponent is considering the same ideas.

So, scheduling is a game in itself. Bob O'Connell is competing with his counterpart at another school, while the coach is trying to use the schedule which is finally attained to his advantage.

Head Football Coach Dick MacPherson said, "My job is to coach football with the schedule given me. Our schedule is so designed that if we win all our games, we will be number one in New England."

Head Basketball Coach Jack Leaman has the same goal. He considers a good schedule to be one in which, "We are favored 50% and underdogs 50%."

Cross Country Coach Ken O'Brien has a novel way of solving the scheduling jumble. He sends out his top runners only in the races he considers important, while in other races which are scheduled he races his younger players for experience.

Scheduling games is really a game in itself.

Editor's Note: This story is part 1 of a two part series dealing with some of the problems caused by sports scheduling. Tomorrow Part II looks how the Springfield Civic Center will effect the winter sports program.)

Pro Football Roundup

Pats Obliterated, 52-0

MIAMI (AP) — Mercury Morris ran for three first-half touchdowns Sunday as the unbeaten Miami Dolphins crushed the New England Patriots 52-0 to make Don Shula the first National Football League coach to ever win 100 games in his first 10 seasons.

The victory put the Dolphins in a position to clinch a playoff spot in their home game next week against the New York Jets.

The defending American Football Conference champions boosted their record to 9-0 by scoring every time they got their hands on the ball in the first half for a 31-0 lead.

Morris scored twice on four-yard sweeps around left end for a 14-0 lead after the Dolphins' first five offensive plays. A six-yard run by Morris concluded the first-half scoring against the hapless Patriots, now 2-7.

The rout started when safety Dick Anderson intercepted a Jim Plunkett pass on the third play of the game. Anderson made a falling catch at the New England 26, got up and ran to the four and ficials ruled the ball dead at the four and Morris carried it in on the ficials ruled the ball dead at th. four and Morris carried it in on the next play.

Garo Yepremian kicked a 16-yard field goal and Larry Csonka bulled his way over from the three for other first half scores against the AFC's worst defensive team against the run.

Miami quarterback Earl Morrall, who completed five of eight passes for 126 yards in the first half, threw a 16-yard touchdown strike to Marlin Briscoe in the third quarter to make it 38-0 and Shula played substitutes the rest of the way.

Skins Topple Giants

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stung by a New York Giants' field goal that tied the game at 13-13 late in the fourth quarter, Washington roared back Sunday to win the National Football League game, 27-13.

Larry Brown, the league-leading runner, produced both of the Redskins' late touchdowns with runs of five and four yards.

The victory was Washington's eighth in nine games, and preserved the Redskins' National Conference Eastern Division lead over the Dallas Cowboys. The Giants now are 5-4.

Both of Brown's scoring plunges came in the last two minutes, the final one with only 20 seconds remaining.

Brown rambled for 106 yards on 30 carries, the sixth time this season he has run for 100 or more yards. After eight games, the former Kansas State blocking back has rushed for 995 yards.

New York opened the scoring when Ron Johnson blasted over from the one to cap a 52-yard drive.

Washington matched the six-pointer when quarterback Billy Kilmer connected with tight end Jerry Smith on a 18-yard pass play. But Curt Knight's point after attempt was blocked and the Giants led 7-6 at intermission.

On the second-half kickoff, New York's Rocky Thompson handed off to Eldridge Small who streaked 77 yards to the Washington 13. However, the Giants could move the ball no closer than the two and they had to settle for a 12-yard Pete Gogolak field goal.

Again Washington came back, marching 78 yards in 15 plays with Charley Harraway knifing into the end zone from the one.

Broncos Upset Rams

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Veteran Jim Turner booted three field goals in the fourth period Sunday, boosting the underdog Denver Broncos to a 16-10 victory over the Los Angeles Rams in a National Football League game.

Turner's boots went 38, 12 and 36 yards and cut the Rams' lead in the National Conference West to one-half game over Atlanta, which defeated New Orleans 36-20.

Denver, which had won only two of eight previous games, grabbed a 7-0 halftime lead over a seemingly lethargic Los Angeles club which was booed by many in the crowd of 65,398 at the Memorial Coliseum.

Los Angeles snapped out of its doldrums at the start of the third period. After Bob Thomas returned the kickoff 43 yards, Los Angeles drove on to score on a four-yard pass from quarterback Roman Gabriel to Jack Snow.

The Rams added a 12-yard filed goal by David Ray seven minutes later four plays after Marlin McKeever intercepted a Johnson pass at the Denver 20 and returned to the 12.

Vikings Over Lions 16-14

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) - Minnesota's Fred Cox kicked two fourth-period field goals and the Vikings held on for a 16-14 National Football League victory over Detroit Sunday by blocking a field goal attempt by the Lions on the last play of the game.

Minnesota defenders stormed in to block Errol Mann's 32-yard field goal attempt with five seconds to play, to give the Vikings their 10th straight victory over Detroit.

Cox, who earlier kicked a 41-yard field goal, connected from 18 yards out with 7:58 left to play and from the 24 with 4:03 left in the game.

The deciding kick was set up after Roy Winston picked up a Detroit fumble by Charlie Sanders and ran 19 yards to the Detroit 17.

Greg Landry passed the Lions into a 14-10 lead in the third quarter with touchdown plays of 48 and 20 yards to Larry Walton.

The Vikings, overcoming three lost fumbles, moved to a 10-0 lead early in the third quarter on Oscar Reed's 20-yard touchdown run.

The Lions were unable to penetrate Viking territory until midway in the third period before Landry got the Lions untracked.

Chiefs Upset

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Linebacker Jack Ham pounced on two fumbles that set up a 10-point burst in the final six minutes and gave the Pittsburgh Steelers a 16-7 comeback victory over the Kansas City Chiefs Sunday in a National Football League game.

Ham's first recovery came on an Ed Podolak fumble that gave Pittsburgh, trailing 7-6, possession at the Kansas City 39 with less than seven minutes left.

Four plays later Gerela booted his third field goal of the game-a line-drive 48-yarder-to put the Steelers ahead at 9-7 with just 5:10 remaining.

The lone Kansas City touchdown came midway through the second period when safety Jim Kearney picked off the second of three Terry Bradshaw interceptions and raced 65 yards for a touchdown.

Dempsey 6 FG's

Tom Dempsey kicked six out of seven field goals, including a 52-yarder, Sunday and led the Philadelphia Eagles to an 18-17 National Football League victory over the rallying Houston Oilers.

Dempsey, who just missed the NFL record of seven field goals in one game, converted three-pointers of 33, 52, 22, and 12 on Philadelphia's first four possessions of the first half.

He added his fifth with nine seconds left in the half after Eagle safety Bill Bradley made his eighth pass interception of the season. Houston's Skip Butler kicked a 38-yarder in the second quarter as the Eagles took a 15-3 halftime lead.

The Eagles had not scored a touchdown in 14 quarters, but Dempsey's sixth field goal of the game, a 20-yarder with 14:53 left to play, provided Philadelphia with its winning margin.

Dempsey's final kick nullified two second-half touchdowns by the Oilers, who dropped to a 1-8 record, worst in the NFL.

Jets Crush Bills

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Jets took advantage of a wave of Buffalo mistakes that paved the way to four touchdowns, two by Emerson Boozer, and rolled over the Bills 41-3 Sunday in National Football League play.

The Jets, powered more by Buffalo fumbles, penalties and errant passes than by their own offense, built a 24-3 halftime lead en route to raising their record to 6-3 and keeping alive their hopes for an American Football Conference "wild card" playoff berth. The Bills are 2-7.

New York, unable to move very far with the opening kickoff, punted and got the ball right back on the Bills' 12-yard line when O.J. Simpson fumbled and linebacker Larry Grantham recovered. John Riggins swept to the one-foot line on the first play, then slammed over for a 7-0 lead.

The Bills marched from their 20 to the New York one before being stopped and settling for John Leypoldt's field goal. It was as close as they got all day.

Packers Roll 23-17

(AP) — Green Bay scored two quick touchdowns in the first quarter-one of them stemming from an 89-yard kickoff return by Ike Thomas-and Chet Marcel booted three field goals as the Packers defeated the Chicago Bears 23-17 Sunday in a National Football League game.

The Packers did not throw a pass in the first half and gained only 59 yards but led 17-7 in route to boosting their front-running Central Division record in the National Conference to 6-3. The Bears, who could put only two sustained drives together, dropped deeper into last place with a 3-5-1.

In the opening minutes of the first quarter, Bobby Joe Green, Bears' punter, had a bad snap back go through his legs and recovered the ball on his own 25 where Green Bay took over. John Brockington hammered 13 yards and then swung wide to plow the final 12 for a touchdown.

Frosh Edged By UConn 29-28

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The Minutemen frosh took on the Pups from UConn Friday afternoon and the game turned out to be quite a dilly as the Huskies squeaked by the Minutemen "by the hair of their chinny chin chins" 29-28 at Alumni Stadium. (The quote is the trite gasp recited by infamous Pats announcer Gino Cappeletti.)

The Minutemen were moving the ball, and after a completion from Minutemen QB Larry Harriman to split-end Mark Finnerty, the Frosh were set up at the UConn ten yard line. Mark Kneeland came in off the bench to attempt a 27 yard field goal, with a bad angle from left to right. The kick fell off to the left and the Huskies had a victory, ala the New England Patriots.

The Minutemen took their toll on the Huskies through the air as Minutemen QB Larry Harriman showed great poise in finding the afternoon long and firing four touchdown passes.

The Huskies on the other hand used the run as their main weapon of attack as they rambled up and down the field for over 300 yards on the ground. Leading the rush for the Huskies were flashy running backs Keith Simmons (three TD's) and Martin Bird who raked up yardage on long gainers. At their sides were scrambling QB Ramon Sanchez, who ran the option well and Henry Reed, who looked like a bulldozer going through the Minuteman line.

Keith Simmons was the man for the Huskies on this football perfect afternoon. As if three touchdowns from his running back position wasn't enough, he came back to haunt the Minutemen on defense where he intercepted two Harriman aerials playing in the defensive secondary, which cut down key Minutemen drives and served to turn the tide of the game in the direction of the Storrsmen.

The Huskies got on the board first, as they drove from their own 25 to the UM 24, where from, they tallied on a beautiful option pass. Henry Reed took the handoff from Sanchez and started a sweep to the right-bringing the defensive flow with him. All of a sudden he turned and hit Martin Bird who was all alone on the left. Bird could have walked into the end zone and after the conversion by Mike Pucko it was 7-0 UConn.

On the next sequence, speedy Billy Gel Somino took the kickoff back 62 yards to the UC 34 and after one unsuccessful running play, Harriman found Bob Levine at the 10 and Levine outraced the UConn secondary for the score. After Kneeland muffed the PAT the Minutemen were down 7-6.

In the second quarter Harriman came right back and hit Gary Pabis for a 51 yard scoring pass and his second touchdown pass of the day. Pabis caught the ball at the 30, and put a good move on one of the Huskie cornerbacks and beat another cornerback to go in for the score. Jerry Mondalto hurdled a Huskie lineman to go in for the two-point conversion and put the Minutemen back ahead 14-7.

Before the half ended, Keith Simmons went in from the five for the Huskies for his first touchdown. After the conversion it was a brand new ball game at 14-14.

Harriman limbered his arm up again in the third quarter as he hit Carey Paster for a 12 yard scoring pass with about ten minutes left in the quarter. The key play in the scoring drive was a 50 yard bomb from Harriman to Pabis. After Kneeland hit the conversion the Minutemen were on top again 21-14.

The Huskies just don't like being behind. No, they don't. On the next sequence of plays they went 70 yards in two plays. After Martin Bird sprinted down the sideline for 52 yards, Keith Simmons went in around left end from the 18 yard line. After Pucko missed the conversion the Minutemen were still up by one 21-20.

Harriman's third touchdown pass came right before the end of the third period, as after a 27 yard punt return by who else but Billy Gel Somino, Harriman found Mark Finnerty on a 42 yard scoring play. Kneeland hit the PAT and the Minutemen were up by eight 28-20.

Who else but Keith Simmons would pull the Huskies back with in a field goal. Simmons went off-tackle for thirty eight yards and after Sanchez was unsuccessful on the bootleg attempt for the 2 point conversion the tally was 28-26 UM.

The Minutemen couldn't move the ball as the Huskies defense showed good pursuit and the UConn got the ball, after a Jerry Mondalto punt, at their own [illegible] yard line. Martin Bird went 37 yards around right end to set up a field goal attempt from the 11 yard line. Pucko hit the three-pointer and the Huskies had the lead, and as it turned out, they had the victory.

The Minutemen are now 3-1 on the year, after suffering their first defeat. The Huskies have also lost but one game, that coming at the hands of UNH, whom the Minutemen kick-off against next Friday afternoon at Durham.

It'll be a chance for the Pups to get back on the winning trail after losing this cliff-hanger.

Baker Wins In Texas

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. (AP) — Buddy Baker won the race and Richard Petty captured an unprecedented fourth stock car driving title in a thrilling showdown 500-mile race Sunday at Texas World Speedway.

Baker, a 6-foot-4 giant from Charlotte, N.C., shoved the nose of his Dodge in front of old pro A.J. Foyt at the finish line to win his fifth major race of an in-and-out career. Petty trailed the two front runners across by about four car lengths.

Bobby Allison, the leading money winner from Hueytown, Ala., the only driver with a chance of denying Petty the season's championships, encountered handling problems with his Chevrolet early in the race but managed to finish fourth, two miles back.

Minutemen Stumble Again Holy Cross Romps 28-16

By EARLE BARROLL

WORCESTER--UMass-Delaware in a bowl? Forget it.

For as of Saturday's 28-16 thumping at the hands of Holy Cross here on Saturday, the UMass football team (6-2) will have all it can handle to not only retain some degree of respectability in the East, but perhaps also in New England.

The reasons behind this one are simple, two words--Holy Cross, period.

After spotting the Minutemen a 10-0 lead in the first ten minutes, the Crusaders shut off the UMass offense the rest of the way while tallying four straight td's before the Minutemen could answer in the waning moments of this game.

Head coach Dick MacPherson depicted it perfectly when he said after the game "Their offense put some points up on our defense, but that defense of theirs was superb."

Indeed it was, as the Cross defenders (a) cut off the air routes from Peil Pennington to Steve Schubert (b) contained the rushing game after being burned by Paul Metallo for 48 yards and a score on the third play of the game and (3) stopped UMass cold inside their 20 three times in the third quarter (three missed field goals) including THE play of the game when Pennington was sacked for a 16 yard loss when UMass was first and goal on the Cross seven after running super star Joe Wilson has fumbled.

Holy Cross built up a 21-10 lead at the half. A Peter Vaas to Jack Van Ohlen pass set up the first of two Wilson td's--a two-yard burst. Joe Heary, who went uncovered, went 51 yards with a partially deflected pass by Vass for the second score and power back Steve Buchanon foiled the stack defense UMass had for him and Wilson when he broke through the first line of defense and went 45 yards for the score.

UMass took the opening kickoff and on the third play Metallo (93 yards rushing on the day) burst over right tackle and outran the Holy Cross secondary to the goal line.

On their very next series the Minutemen marched to the Cross 14 where the drive was stalled and Palau split the uptights for the 10-0 lead. An 18 yard keeper by Pennington and a 12 yard completion from Pennington to Scubert on third down situations set up the score.

Midway into the third quarter Andy Dutkanicz punted to the Holy Cross four. On the ensuing first down Wilson fumbled and Pat Brady recovered. But two plays later Pennington rolled right on play action, his receiver fell down, and on turning back to the pocket the 6'5 signal caller found the middle clogged from pursuit and was sacked back to the 23 and for all intense and purposes this was it.

Wilson redeemed himself early in the fourth quarter when he took a Vaas toss (following a Pennington interception--his only one) on a screen play and rumbled untouched into the end zone behind a wall of purple from ten yards out.

Mark Tripucka, for the second straight week relieved Pennington on the next series and marched the Minutemen down the field, 66 yards on 16 plays capping the drive with a two-yard bullet to Walt Parker--his second td reception of the year.

Booters Tie UNH 0-0

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMass varsity soccer team played UNH to a 0-0 tie on the cold and rain-swept Boyden Fields Saturday afternoon. The Minutemen finished their season with a 5-3-2 record, including a 2-2-2 conference mark, while the Wildcats, also in their final contest, ended with a 6-2-3 record and a 3-1-2 league standing.

The game was the final appearance for several UMass players: Co-Captains Dave Ouellette and Ed Doherty, Todd Buck, Joe Cerniawski, Matt Rowe, Jeff Hague, and Vini Grandonico.

UNH completely dominated the first half of play. They shot 19 times at the UMass goal, and net- minder Carl Vercollone was forced to save 10 of them from going into the nets.

The Redmond-men seemed to remain constantly on the defensive, as the Wildcats intercepted many passes at midfield to thwart any UMass scoring attempt.

Mueller had no easy second half. The Minutemen completely reversed their first half performance, outshooting UNH 19-4.

Co-Captain Dave Ouellette, playing in his final game, was the outstanding defensive player of the afternoon. He halted many UNH threats with diving head shots and booming kicks out of goal area.

"We played very badly in the first half," commented Coach Gerry Redmond, "possibly because the team was trying too hard in their final game. The seven seniors on the squad each wanted to make his last game at UMass an outstanding one. But we did much better in the second half when we created several chances and should have scored.

"But I really think this New Hampshire club was probably the best we've seen play all season. Certainly their goalie (Mueller) was the best, and their number four, Chartier, played a brilliant game."

Harriers Run in I.C.A.O.

By WALT POWERS

The UMass Cross-Country team enters the Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association of America (I.C.4A.) championship meet this afternoon, hoping to make a strong showing, and win a berth in the national championship meet. Can they do it? "If everyone on the team has an outstanding race", said Coach O'Brien, "we should finish around eighth place.' A top ten showing would almost automatically qualify us for the nationals championships."

The meet, which will be held in New York City's Van Cortlandt Park, is a big one. Over fifty schools will be entered, including the best teams in the East. Villanova is the defending champion. They've won it six years in a row.

That string could end this afternoon, though Penn State, led by Charlie Maguire, has been strong all season, and recently won the U.S.T.F.F. Eastern title. Manhattan should make it a three team dogfight for the title. And then there are teams like Harvard, Penn, Duke, Navy, and Northeastern. Penn was second in the I.C.4A.'s last year, and Duke was third. These teams should dominate the top eight.

UMass, on an off-day, finished 23rd last year. In 1970, they were tenth. In both '69 and '70, they finished ahead of teams that had beaten them in the New Englands. Ken O'Brien sees this as a result of Psychological preparation. "You have to be serious if you hope to do well here," he said. "A lot of New England runners take this race as simply a vacation trip, a reward for a good season. The runners who are prepared to work for it, usually do well."

The harriers are ready. They're healthy, and they've benefitted from the competitive Experience of the New England meet.

The race will be a grueling one. It will be run on a hilly slippery horse trail. The course is narrow and dangerous. With more than 300 runners competing, there'll be a great deal of elbowing and shoving in the battle for position. Only the leaders will be able to avoid this.

The meet will be highlighted by the battle for individual honors. A number of Olympians are in the field, including John Hartnett of Villanova, and Mike Keough of Manhattan. Bob Wheeler of Duke, the U.S. Olympian and defending I.C.4A.O. champion, is entered, but may not compete.

How well does Ken O'Brien expect his team to finish? He thought it over very carefully, but declined to make a specific prediction. "If we have a poor race, we could finish as low as fifteenth. An average race will put us around eleventh place. But if we run well, we could finish as high as seventh. What I figure on is this: Gillin and Thomas are capable of finishing around 30th. Tommy Maguire is only a freshman, but he's shown remarkable poise and determination throughout the season. He could finish as high as 40th. If Pete Crisci and Doug O'Connell can take 60th and 70th, it adds up to 230 points, usually good enough for seventh. Even with as many as 300 points, we should still make the top ten, which would give us a berth in the National championships."

MILLION-DOLLAR STAR FLATTENED--Derek Sanderson, $2.6 million star of the Philadelphia Blazers, World Hockey Association team, smokes in his Philadelphia Hospital bed Thursday where he has been confined a week with separation of muscles in his lower back. Sanderson, whose team is in last place with a 2-11 record, faces at least another week or two in the hospital before rejoining the Blazers.

Friday Hearing Set For Further Action On Loyalty Oath

By MARK VOGLER

Judge Samuel Tisdale granted a temporary restraining order and bill of complaint in Hampshire Superior Court Monday to a group of UMass faculty and staff members who opposes the Massachusetts loyalty oath.

A hearing is scheduled for Friday at 10:00 A.M. in Superior Court at which time further action will be taken, court officials said.

James Matlack, an English professor and a spokesman for the group consisting of 18, said last night that the court order protects the group from any punitive action which could be taken against those who have not signed the oath. The order has the effect of delaying Wednesday's deadline set by state authorities.

The petitioners who all but one are members of the UMass faculty, have filed a bill of complaint against UMass officials including Dr. Robert Wood, UMass President; Joseph Healey, Chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees; and Dr. Randolph Bromery, Chancellor.

The Bill of Complaint was filed yesterday by attorney William A. Norris of Cummington, legal council for the petitoners.

Attorney Norris in his brief stated that the petitoners had until Wednesday to sign a loyalty oath or lose their jobs.

"The only penalty for noncompliance of the state law is punishment of a fine not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"Even if the general law, Chapter 264 did not contain a provision for removal, which it does not, that removal could not take the summary form threatened the petitioners as it is violative of the constitutional guarantees of due process (14th amendment)," Attorney Norris said.

Three of the petitioners are subjects of other nations and would be in jeopardy of impairing that citizenship should they be required to sign the requested oath, the attorney said.

The petitioners are not being ordered to sign the proper oath. The oath which was designed especially for the teachers is contained in General Law, Chapter 71, Section 30A and provides as follows:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of (insert the name of position) according to the best of my ability."

The oath procedure inhibits the pursuit of Truth and full exchange of ideas that ideally characterizes educational institutions of higher learning and which the First Amendment of the United States Constitution and Article XVI, Part 1 of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts were designed to protect and foster. A free society depends upon free universities, Atty. Norris continued.

Norris cited unequal protection in his Bill of Complaints, declaring that the petitioners are members of a group which is not being accorded equal treatment under the laws as prescribed by Amendment 14 of the United States Constitution.

"Although the oath is required of all employees of the Commonwealth and all political subdivisors thereof, city employees in Hampshire and other counties are not now and have not been required to take it," Norris said.

Norris is representing a group of 31 Faculty and staff members at Berkshire Community College, Pittsfield, who have a lawsuit pending in the courts, pertaining to the loyalty oath.

James Matlack, English professor at the University and a spokesman for the UMass 18 who were granted a restraining order from Hampshire Superior Court yesterday, said last night that the group is protected from punitive action which could be taken against those who have not signed the loyalty oath. Modular Credit Explained At School Of Ed Workshop

By MARY GOODYEAR

The director of the UMass Modular Systems Development Program explained the concept of modular credits to 15 students during a workshop yesterday at the University's School of Education.

Dr. Philip Christensen, recently appointed faculty member, conducted the workshop, "An Overview of the Flexible Curriculum", as a part of the School of Education's Fall Marathon.

Christensen said the reason for the modular credit system is to allow students a greater flexibility in their choice of subjects and the amount of time the individual wants to spend with each topic.

The number of modular credits an individual receives depends on how much time is spent attending a particular class within the system, Christensen said. The courses are flexible and are held for a few days or an entire semester depending on the topic, the instructor, and how much the students want to know about the subject.

Ideally, according to Christensen, the courses have "multiple exit and enter points", meaning a student may join a class or stop attending at several points in the course. Students participating in the system must have 100 modular credits to be accepted by the University as one full credit.

Christensen said that perhaps a system better than giving credit for attendance is one based on performance. Maybe a certain number of modular credits should be given when the student can perform the task being taught, whether it is at the first class or the last, he suggested.

The modular credit system is only a small, minor change, but is important to the students as it is a transistional step in the change of the education system, at least within the School of Education, said Christensen.

He also stated what he believes to be wrong with the system. First, he said, it is too much of a hassle for the students involved to get the credits they deserve. Also, there is the danger of the students becoming too satisifed with the present system of modular credit, thus refusing to experiment with other systems which may allow for an even greater academic flexibility.

VITA Offers SBA Credit

There will be a meeting on Wednesday, November 15th at 8:00 in the Connomwealth Room of the Student Union for any students interested in joining VITA, the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program.

This program is sponsored by the Center for Outreach Programs in conjunction with the Accounting department. It will train students to fill out both state and federal income tax forms for low-income people in Springfield.

In an MDC interview, Bill Burke, one of the Outreach coordinators traced the development of this program.

The idea originated at the University of Michigan. When contacted by Outreach they told UMass to go to the Internal Revenue Service. The IRS offered to do the training of the students and supply manuals for the course.

Outreach then went to Warner Henson of the Urban League of Springfield, Teddi Sylvester of the North End Community Center, and Ray Ellerbrook of the South End Community Center and asked if they would be interested in the service. The hours were set up as 3-5 in the afternoon, 7-9 at night, and Saturday mornings.

When approached, the School of Business Administration said they would grant 1, 2 or 3 credits depending on the amount of time volunteered by each student.

Outreach then went to the Massachusetts Department of Taxation. Mr. Foley of the Springfield branch offered to assist the students in learning both state and federal forms. UMass efforts will be co-ordinated with efforts by the American International College, Springfield Technical Community College, and Western New England College.

Mr. Burke said that a minimum of 60 students is needed but he expects to see about 200 enroll. If commitments in Springfield are filled the service may be offered to students and people in nursing homes.

The course is incorrectly listed in the Spring Semester Schedule of Courses as SBA-385-Volunteer Income Tax Assistance. Instead students should preregister for Accounting 385-Special Problems-Outreach. The six- digit preregistration number remains the same, 541222.

Transportation will be handled by car pools or a bus system.

All students must attend a training session on January 22nd through the 25th. After the training period students receiving one credit will work two hours a week for an eleven week period and will keep a short journal of their experience. Students receiving two credits will work three hours and keep a journal and students receiving three credits will work four hours a week and write a report of case studies.

Mr. Burke sees VITA as "a way for students to help people, learn something they can use for the rest of their lives, and pick up some credit."

Outreach, the sponsor, is a special program out of the Provost Office whose purpose is threefold. They attempt to get a listing of all the programs in the area serving the community, find agencies that are looking for volunteers and advertise the need to the students, and develop one semester courses around these programs.

The Outreach office is located at 318 Arnold House. The telephone number is 5-2021.

Boys Club Future Discussed

By THOMAS BARNES

Members of the Amherst Redevelopment Authority met with representatives of the Amherst Boys Club last night to discuss the future of the Boys Club in the Boltwood Walk Plan.

The ARA agreed to consider a plan, to be submitted by the Boys Club, which would detail the necessary requirements for a new club building, allowing for possible construction of such a building to replace the present one which the ARA plans to tear down in accordance with the Boltwood Walk Plan.

The ARA currently plans to clear away the Boys Club building, along with a few private business establishments, and incorporate the land into the site of a proposed multi-purpose complex which is primarily a center for the elderly.

The planned site, near the corner of Pleasant and Main Sts. in Amherst Center, will include three multi-story conduminiums with a total of 150 living units, primarily for the elderly, a new Nursing Home, several commercial facilities (shops, ice cream parlors, etc.), a community Health Center, a Senior Center, and a recreational facility with a double gymnasium.

The ARA invited representatives of the Boys Club to meet to discuss objections to the Boltwood Plan in hopes of reaching a satisfactory agreement as to how the Boys Club could become a part of the Boltwood Plan and still continue to function as a community organization.

The main objection of the Boys Club representatives has been that their independence and existence as a community charity organization would be ruined if the ARA were to take over their land and try to make them a part of the proposed Boltwood recreational facility.

Steve Hamilton, who has been with the Boys' Club since 1922, said that the organization couldn't function unless it remained an independent entity. The club has survived undependently on endowments and contributions since its inception in 1922, and, Mr. Hamilton said, "Unless the Boys Club retains its independence, contributors will stop contributing."

He also said that a coordinated program for use of the proposed recreational facility would be out of the question because the Boys Club has to be run on a full time program. "The facilities have to be available to the boys anytime. It's like a home to them," he said.

After discussing several compromises, mostly calling for joint use of a facility by hhe Boys Club and other groups, the ARA agreed to consider minimum requirements that the Boys Club representatives would draw up which would be consistent with the designs and theme of the Boltwood Plan.

No decision has been reached as to whether construction of such a building is feasible, however the plan will be considered in relation to the overall project.

Mr. Hamilton said that he doesn't want to ask for anything more than what they already have in the old building, except perhaps a regulation size gymnasium, since the one they are using is undersized. He said, "We now have a stabalized, workable program with a manageable budget which can be supported by contributions in the same way it always has been. Expansion would just create a bigger budget."

War Objectors Threatened For Striking

BOSTON–Five conscientious objectors who are members of a striking labor union here face possible prosecution if they do not return to work.

The State Selective Service Board had assigned the men to Massachusetts Rehabilitation Hospital, where they are fulfilling the 24 months of alternative service required of conscientious objector draft status.

In a form letter dated Nov. 2, State Selective Service Director Victor C. Bynoe told the men that they must return to work or be "reported to the United States Attorney for possible prosecution.

The strike, which began Oct. 31 after the failure of several bargaining sessions, was authorized by the 266 members of the National Union of Hospital and Nursing Home Employes working at the hospital.

The area director for Local 1199, Elliot Small, calls the action against the five men "using the draft for punitive means in an attempt at busting a legal strike." Negotiations are continuing under a Federal mediator.

Possibly First Such Case

James Gabriel, the United States Attorney, said his office had not received notice to take legal action. Although conscientious objectors have been prosecuted for failing to fulfill the alternative-service obligation, Mr. Gabriel said, "I doubt we've had any case with these circumstances."

The state alternative-service officer, Maj. William J. Griffiths, said he had met with two of the men and told them that "they are not doing what we call satisfactory service." Major Griffiths added that he had suggested they go back to work or find another employer who would meet the requirements or alternative service.

"I wouldn't expect them to risk injury trying to cross a picket line," said Major Griffiths. "In a case like this, however, I would recommend that (they) seek other service, thus allowing them to fulfill their obligation and respect the union strike."

WMPIRG Files For Injunction

The Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) and CONSUM IRATE, a committee of businessmen, labor leaders and public officials, filed a motion for a preliminary injunction today in Federal District Court in Boston. The motion is the latest action in the WMPIRG suit against the Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO) and the Mass. Department of Public Utilities.

The preliminary injunction motion asks the court to declare unconstitutional the statute under which the D.P.U. establishes utility rates. WMPIRG maintains that consumers were not represented at D.P.U. hearings on WMECO's request for a $5.7 million rate increase.

The motion also asks the court to stop the rate increase from going into effect until fair hearings are held. If the D.P.U. does not make a decision on the WMECO request before December 1, the rate increase will automatically go into effect.

Attorneys representing WMPIRG and CONSUM IRATE are Nathan S. Paven, of the Boston law firm of Flamm, Mason and Paven; Ronald E. Bogard, Director of WMPIRG; Dermot Shea, Consumer Advisor to Speaker David Bartley and chairman of CONSUM IRATE: AND University of Massachusetts Professors of Legal Studies Ethan Katsh and Peter d'Errico.

Move On To Prevent Honeywell Bidding

Conrad A. Wogrin, Director of the Computer Center, met yesterday afternoon with concerned faculty protesting the use of Honeywell computers in the Graduate Research Center. (MDC Photo by Bob Callahan)

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

A group of University of Massachusetts faculty members yesterday petitioned the University to exclude the Honeywell Corporation from the bidding process for a new computer system.

The petition, signed by some 200 members and originated by Clergy and Laity Concerned, (CALC), was presented to Dr. Conrad A. Wogrin, director of computer services, and Dr. Paul Cade, a chemistry professor and chairman of the computer advisory committee.

The members representing 20 per cent of the faculty, charged that Honeywell should be removed from any future consideration on "moral grounds" since it is the largest producer in the world of the anti-personnel weapons which are presently being used in Indochina.

The representatives of CALC indicated that they have accepted an invitation to make a presentation to the advisory committee of their views on the issues. The committee is studying the long-range computer service needs of the University, and the possible addition of new equipment.

UMass Professor Edward J. Rising of the Dept. of Industrial Engineering and CALC said his organization is looking for the input of moral values in addition to the technical and financial standards that presently go into the decision-making process for University services.

He said the ultimate function of the petition was not to prevent Honeywell from participating in the bidding process, but to prompt a wide-range of discussion in the University, and also to change the present policies of the Minneapolis-based company.

The national committee of CALC, which has 40 chapters in the country, said its goal is to force Honeywell to publicly announce by their 1973 stockholders' meeting that it will cease to manufacture the anti-personnel weapons used in Southeast Asia.

The organization said Honeywell received $75 million in payments from the Pentagon in 1971 for its anti-personnel fragmentation bombs and mines.

Wogrin, who directs the University's multi-million dollar computer operation, said the range of bids could be as high as a million dollars a year.

He said the moral issue should be considered "if the community feels and believes there are issues outside of the cost effectiveness."

Wogin said he will make his final decision on the matter after receiving advisements from the computer advisory committee and a proposed computer services committee.

The petition stated: "While we recognize that few corporations are completely free of producing products that are immoral, we are especially outraged at Honeywell for the production of anti-personnel weapons, one of its specialities."

The addition of "moral criteria" as a basis for decision-making, it continued, is in keeping with a "tradition of a great University."

Grad Students Prepare For Salary Cuts Next Year

By ROBERTA MARTONE

Preparations for a possible budget cut in the salaries of graduate student teaching assistants for next year were begun at last night's meeting of the Graduate Student Senate.

Other highlights of the meeting included a motion to grant money to those graduate students attending the SWAP Conference and a possible change in the Graduate grading system.

The problem of a low Teacher's Aid Budget for next year is in the anticipatory stage right now. Vida Ross, president of the Senate said, "It is necessary to gather strength on a departmental level before the budget comes back, in an attempt to keep it from being cut. If the graduate students don't start thinking about it, the budget's going to be cut where it was before."

It was further specified that the financial aid for graduate students is gradually decreasing. Ms. Ross said the current fellowships given number 52. There are only ten new fellowships expected next year.

The question of how to solve this budget decrease arose. Lobbying or the formation of a union was offered as a possible solution.

Ms. Ross said, "Part of the problem of the Graduate School is that it is being absorbed into the Undergraduate School." Nothing specific was resolved but, there was a general agreement to exert pressure in order that the budget not be cut.

The motion dealing with SWAP arose as to whether or not the Senate should grant $260.00 to fund graduate students accepted into this workshop program.

SWAP is a weekend program consisting of 80 workshops, several being concerned with the problems of community service; a graduate financial service, and a workshop that deals with the problem of student-faculty relationship.

The motion was defeated after brief debate with the prevailing rationale being that the conference was a "waste of money".

'Pass-Fail' Study Revealed

By ARNOLD NEWBERGER

Students taking a course Pass-Fail receive a grade of "D" at 2-1/2 times the rate of non Pass-Fail registrants. There are also fewer suspensions now than in previous years. These facts are revealed in a recent study of the pass-fail grading here at UMass by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate.

The Academic Matters Committee asked Dr. Robert Wagner of the Institutional Studies Office in Whitmore to supply the information contained within the report. Dr. Wagner's findings also revealed that about 1/4 of all undergraduates drop a course after the first month.

Wagner stated in an interview, "Ever since a New York Times article entitled: 'Flunking out of College is now Much Harder' was printed, I've received about twenty five phone calls from students and faculty asking if the new grading system at UMass was what the article was talking about."

The new grading system allows undergraduates to take one Pass-fail course per semester and Freshman cannot be suspended after the first semester. Dr. Wagner estimated that 300 students are here now who would have been dropped under the old system.

Another feature of the new system is academic warnings. Some 3000 of these were issued last year, the report said. No attempt was made in the report to explain the whys of these figures Dr. Wagner said, "I just fed the statistics I received from the Registrar's Office into the computer and no attempt at evaluation was made."

The committee on Academic Matters was supposed to poll a sample of faculty members to get their opinion as to whether absences from classes interfere with student performance, but the committee failed to do this because most faculty members do not take attendance in their classes.

Correction

The lead in yesterday's story on the Security Department's investigation into dining commons theft was set incorrectly by the printer. The lead should have said, "a preliminary investigations shows a lack of evidence to substantiate accusations". As originally printed the words "a lack of" were missing.

McGovern Attributes Loss To Stand On Issues

BALTIMORE (AP) - George S. McGovern attributes his crushing defeat to his own unpopular stands on key issues and the successful courting by President Nixon of supporters of Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, the Baltimore Sun reported in its early Tuesday edition.

"The handwriting was probably on the wall the day Wallace was shot," the South Dakota Democrat said in an interview Sunday in the Virgin Islands, where he is vacationing after his loss Nov. 7.

In one of his first postelection interviews, McGovern said Wallace's absence from the presidential race put his supporters up for grabs and, more than any other factor, probably explained Nixon's carrying 49 states and polling 61 per cent of the vote.

"President Nixon," he said, "capitalized on that opportunity with a candidacy that was really tailor-made to attract Wallace voters..."

"I never felt he Nixon had any vision of the greatness of this country, that his instinct is for drawing out the lesser side of the American character rather than the greater side of it," the defeated candidate said.

McGovern, stressing his own political plans go no farther than re-election to the Senate in 1974, said he felt that had Wallace not been shot last May while campaigning in Democratic primaries, the Alabamian would have run for president as an independent.

"He would have gotten a whale of a lot of votes if he had," McGovern said. "Then I probably would have won the presidency. On that basis, we could have won."

He said that Nixon may have sensed the public mood better on such issues as the Vietnam war, defense spending and busing of school children to foster racial balance.

"It may be that he's right, that I held views that the country was not ready to accept right now," the senator said. "But I am convinced that they'll come to those views very quickly."

McGovern said he began the general election campaign hoping to upset Nixon, but he said his candidacy was hurt by the removal of Sen. Thomas Eagleton of Missouri as his running mate after Eagleton's mental history became known.

SW Sculptures Stolen

Two sculptures which were part placed in the vicinity of the Quad and the Southwest Tunnel were apparently stolen sometime during the day yesterday.

The sculptor of the statues told the MDC that each statue is part of one total piece which was to be displayed this weekend. They also were serving as part of a visualization experiment being conducted yesterday.

The sculptor has requested that those individuals who removed the statue located in Southwest place it somewhere in Haigis Mall and the Quad statue on the grass in front of Hasbrouck so that the experiment may continue.

Supreme Court Okays Ellsberg Trial

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court ruled 7 to 2 Monday that the Pentagon Papers trial of Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo could be resumed without the government disclosing its wiretap logs to the defendants.

The ruling, which drew dissents from Justices William O. Douglas and William J. Brennan Jr., was in the form of a routine order that turned aside Ellsberg's and Russo's petition for a hearing. The order contained no comment on the questions they had raised.

Douglas had ordered the trial suspended in July to allow Ellsberg and Russo to file an appeal that contended the defendants and their lawyers had a right to examine the wiretapping records to determine whether the bugging produced illegal evidence or leads for the prosecution.

The justice said the court should have granted the defendants a hearing "to resolve what immunity tne executive branch has in setting up schemes of pervasive surveillance of foreign nationals that is unrelated to espionage."

Trial Judge Matt Byrne of Los Angeles and the U.S. Circuit Court in San Francisco had ruled that the wiretapping was irrelevant to the prosecution.

Ellsberg, reached by The Associated Press at his home in Cambridge, Mass., said he thinks the ruling reflects the court's view that trials should not be interrupted, rather than its position on wiretapping.

The once-hawkish analyst for the Rand Corp. said that once the trial was resumed his lawyers would ask Byrne to dismiss the jury. An aide to the judge told the AP, meanwhile, that he would call the lawyers in the case to meet with him by the end of the week and would decide the next step then.

In a second ruling, the court denied a hearing to William T. Farr, a Los Angeles newsman who was cited for contempt for a story he wrote during the Manson trial.

Farr, 37, had obtained from lawyers a copy of a statement from a prospective witness that Elizabeth Taylor, actress, Frank Sinatra, the singer, and other celebrities were to have been murdered.

Farr's story was published in The Los Angeles Herald-Examiner Oct. 9, 1970. A judicial order then in effect prohibited lawyers and others directly involved in the trial from out-of-court discussions about the proceedings.

The presiding judge, Charles H. Older, subsequently summoned Farr and questioned him about the source of his story. The newsman refused to identify the lawyers and invoked a California law that shields the press from contempt judgments.

In the appeal, Farr argued that the First Amendment protects newsmen from being compelled to divulge their sources, "absent a clear showing of compelling and overriding national interest."

The appeal was denied without reference to the issues. Douglas dissented.

In Los Angeles, Farr told The AP he expects to be called before Judge Older again and "despite the consequences I am still going to have to refuse to answer the questions ... The reason is that I gave someone both my personal and professional promise to keep the source secret. I intend to keep that promise."

In other actions, the court: —Denied a hearing to Olga Scarpetta, the natural mother of a child Florida courts had permitted to remain with their adoptive parents, Nick and Jean De Martino. Miss Scarpetta, 32, of Columbia, had won a ruling in New York courts that she could have the out-of-wedlock child, Lenore, back. But the New York lawyer and his wife immediately moved to Miami, taking Lenore with them.

—Rejected appeals by school boards in Fort Worth, Tex., Richmond County, Ga., and Washington Parish, La., contesting desegregation orders.

—Agreed to review next year appeals by 34 railroads and the Interstate Commerce Commision from a ruling that suspended a $13.50-a-car charge to customers for the in-transit inspection of grain shipments.

—Agreed to consider a challenge by the government to Mississippi's tax on liquor brought into the state by clubs on military bases.

'Fragging' Trial Goes To Jury

FT. ORD, CALIF. (AP) - A military judge told a jury trying Pvt. Billy D. Smith on Monday that they must find him innocent of killing two officers with a grenade in Vietnam if they believe his testimony that he was smoking marijuana elsewhere when they died.

Col. Rawls H. Frazier delivered final instructions to a court-martial panel of seven officers after more than two months of testimony in the first "fragging" trial held in the United States.

After his final instructions, the jury was to begin deliberating its verdict. Frazier has said they will convene only during normal working hours.

Smith, 24, a former bus driver and machinist from the Watts district of Los Angeles, pleaded innocent to charges he used a fragmentation grenade to kill 1st Lt. Thomas Dellwo of Cheteau, Mont., and 2nd Lt. Richard Harlan of Dallas, Tex., on March 16, 1971 at Bien Hoa Army Base near Saigon. A third officer, Peter B. Higgins, 25, of Harrison, N.J., survived.

Frazier told the jurors that if they accepted the Army's version of what happened, they must convict Smith of premeditated murder even though they believed he did not mean to kill the men who died.

He also instructed the jury that they should not dismiss the charges simply because there was no eyewitness testimony about the killings and all the evidence and the testimony of 42 witnesses was circumstantial.

"An inference drawn from circumstantial evidence may be more convincing than an eyewitness account," Frazier said.

The prosecution contended that Smith did not mean to kill the two lieutenants, but that instead his targets were his commanding officer Capt. Randall L. Rigby of Ft. Sill, Okla., and 1st Sgt. Billie Willis of Big Stony Gap, Va. The Army said Smith mistakenly thought they were sleeping in the quarters and charged him with attempting to murder them.

During the trial, Smith took that stand to testify that he was smoking marijuana with two buddies in another section of the base when the grenade exploded. One of the friends, Henry S. McClay, confirmed Smith's story, but McClay's Company Commander testified he could not be believed.

"An alibi is a complete defense to all those charges," Frazier told the jurors. "Obviously if the accused was not present at the time of the offense, he could not have committed it. If you find he was not there, you must acquit him."

While the judge addressed the military jury, Smith sat quietly, showing no visible emotion. At the trial's outset Sept. 6, Frazier ruled that Smith could be sentenced to life imprisonment but not given the death sentence if found guilty.

Guru Investigated By Indian Govt.

NEW DELHI (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government is investigating a religious movement headed by a guru claiming to be 14 years old who is India's latest spiritual expert to the West, authoritative sources said Monday.

These informants said Mrs. Gandi herself has taken a personal interest-in her capacity as head of all intelligence agencies-in the controversy swirling around Guru Maharaj Ji, known to his devotees as "lord of the universe," "prince of peace" and "the perfect master."

One senior member of the government said Indian diplomatic missions in countries where the guru's Divine Light Mission operates-including the United States and Britain-have been asked to investigate financial aspects of the moement.

The government, he added, wants to determine whether the mission is violating Indian law, particularly regarding restrictions on Indian nationals having bank accounts and capital assets abroad.

The controversy began when the guru returned to India last Tuesday in a jumbo jet filled with 350 American disciples-and a suitcase containing $65,000, watches and jewels, including diamond rings and a pearl necklace.

Customs impounded the suitcase.

Arthur Brigham, a devotee from Denver, Colo., director of the movement's large public relations division, said the money was to be used for meeting the local travel and food expenses of about 3,000 Western devotees, mostly from the United States, who came to Inda in seven chartered Boeing 747s to meditate in the Himalayas for a month.

The watches and jewelry, he added, were gifts for the guru, his mother and brothers and for about 2,000 mahatmas, the priests of the Divine Light Mission.

"This was supposed to be like a birthday party," said Brigham, explaing that the devotees had come here mainly to celebrate the birth anniversary of the guru's late father, who founded the Divine Light Mission in India in 1960.

In an interview, the guru denied any personal connection with the impounded suitcase. When he went through customs at New Delhi airport he told inspectors he had nothing to declare.

"It was nothing to do with me," he said of the controversy. "It's an attempt to harm the Divine Light Mission. When someone grows, others get jealous of him-and the Divine Light Mission has just blasted like an atomic bomb all over the world."

PASSENGERS RETURN--Passengers from the hijacked Southern Airways jet that came back to Miami from Cuba ride down escalator to U.S. customs office at Miami International airport. (AP)

FBI Attempt To Halt Plane 'Provoked' Hijackers

(AP) The hijackers who forced 31 persons aboard a Southern Airways jetliner on a violent journey over 3,800 miles were pictured by their captives Monday as squabbling, vicious men who passed out ransom money while threatening the lives of everyone on the plane.

There was criticism, meanwhile, of an attempt by FBI marksmen to halt the return of the DC9 to Cuba by shooting out four of its six tires as it prepared to leave Orlando, Fla. The plane's wounded copilot said the shooting "really provoked" the hijackers, who told him he would be killed as an example.

"It drove them into a frenzy," passenger Alex Halberstad said. "They were raving maniacs. Before that, they were docile maniacs."

The 28-hour nightmare ended early Sunday when the aircraft's bone-weary pilot brought the twin- engine jet, its bare wheels kicking up sparks, down on a foam-covered runway in Havana. The passengers and crew, four of them injured, were flown out of Cuba Sunday by a second Southern DC9.

The three air pirates were taken into custody by Cuban officials who also confiscated the ransom money, passengers said. The amount of the money paid the hijackers--they had demanded a record $10 million--has not been disclosed, but one passenger said: "The whole back seat was full of money."

The FBI said air piracy charges were expected to be filed against the trio--identified as a prison escapee and two men wanted in Detroit on rape charges--in Birmingham, Ala. Whether Cuba would return the money was not immediately known.

Orlando was the last of eight cities where the airliner was forced to land after it was commandeered Friday evening over Alabama. It was there that some 20 FBI sharpshooters blew out the plane's tires after it had picked up more fuel. The FBI and Southern have declined to comment on the decision to fire at the plane.

"I still doubt the decision to shoot at the tires while the plane was fully loaded with fuel and the fuel truck was so close by," Orlando Police Chief Robert Chewning said.

Michael Goff, the mechanic who refueled the waiting jet, said the fusillade of shots jeopardized the lives of "all those on the airplane."

"They shot while I was still near the airplane," he said. "If they had hit the fuel truck, that would have been it--the airplane and everyone else."

After the tires were shot out, Goff said, the hijackers ordered pilot Bill Haas to take off and "he hit full power...Agents kept shooting, trying to disable the engines. There was rubber in those engines and they overheated tremendously. They could have crashed."

Copilot Billy Johnson, hospitalized in a Memphis hospital, said the hijackers responded to the shooting by using him as a shield to keep the pilot from being shot, then blasted him to show their other captives "they meant business."

More Peace Talks Needed

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House said Monday there may be a need for additional consultations with the North Vietnamese beyond the "one more" negotiating session outlined last month by presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler told newsmen he could not confirm nor deny that Kissinger and chief North Vietnamese negotiator Le Duc Tho would meet this week in Paris.

But if and when such a session takes place, Ziegler said, "there will be further consultations required" with South Vietnam and perhaps Hanoi.

The press spokesman denied this was a shift from the statement Kissinger made last month in which he predicted that "what remains to be done can be settled in one more negotiating session with the North Vietnamese negotiators, lasting. I would think no more than three or four days."

Ziegler told reporters also that Gen. Alexander Haig, Kissinger's deputy, brought a letter to President Nixon from South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu when he returned from Saigon Monday. Ziegler confirmed also that Haig went to Saigon last week carrying a Nixon letter addressed to Thieu.

The spokesman would not disclose the contents of either message, but American officials in Saigon indicated Haig's four days in the South Vietnamese capital apparently cleared the way for a resumption of the Kissinger-Tho meetings.

Haig landed Monday afternoon at nearby Andrews Air Force Base where he was met by Kissinger. The two flew immediately by helicopter to report to Nixon at Camp David, his mountain retreat in Maryland.

While U.S. sources in Saigon spoke in optimistic terms, American officials in Washington clammed up after Ziegler spoke Monday. Earlier, they had predicted Kissinger would fly to Paris this week, and some spoke of a cease-fire agreement being signed this month.

In addition to the reports that the way has been cleared for new talks by Kissinger and Le Duc Tho The New York Times reported from Saigon that Thieu has modified a major objection to the nine-point draft agreement disclosed last month.

According to the U.S. and Vietnamese officials quoted in the Times, the Saigon leader told Haig he would accept a pledge in principle by Hanoi to pull their troops out of South Vietnam.

There was no official confirmation of this in Saigon or Washington and South Vietnemese Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam said in a speech Monday night his government still demands the removal of all North Vietnamese troops.

Hanoi's public attitude is to accept another meeting with Kissinger, but only to sign, not to renegotiate the nine points.

U.S. Jets Bomb North

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. Navy jets flew through a barrage of surface to air missiles and struck an air field a little more than 80 miles from Hanoi, military spokesman reported Monday.

The target was Bai Thuong air field, seven miles from the restricting line of the 20th Parallel. The parallel is about 240 miles north of the demilitarized zone and 75 miles south of Hanoi. A Washington directive prohibits bombings north of the parallel because of delicate negotiations for a cease-fire.

U.S. military sources said the objective of the attacks on Bai Thuong was to reduce the threat of Soviet-built MIGs from there intercepting American warplanes bombings in the southern panhandle of North Vietnam.

Military sources said more than 200 tactical fighter-bomber strikes had been planned against targets below the 20th Parallel Sunday, but overcast skies forced cancellation of many of them and reduced the number to about 150.

U.S. B52 bombers, several times more powerful than the tactical attack planes and flying above the overcast skies, carried out more than 100 strikes against enemy supply points in all four countries of Indochina, sources said. The Stratofortresses, bombing by radar, dropped up to 3,000 tons of bombs in North and South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

North Vietnam and the Viet Cong accused the United States of "extermination bombing" and demanded that President Nixon immediately halt the raids and sign a draft peace agreement worked out in Paris last month.

The Viet Cong declared in a radio broadcast they would intensify their attacks to force Nixon to sign the agreement.

The Saigon command reported 62 enemy-initiated incidents throughout South Vietnam in the 24-hour period ending at dawn Monday, including 39 by rockets and mortars. A spokesman said this was the lowest number recorded since Sept. 30.

In other developments, the United States continued its two-week military equipment buildup of Saigon's armed forces. More than 30 amphibious vehicles for the South Vietnamese marines arrived by sea from Okinawa. Several more U.S. transport planes landed at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base with military equipment.

The U.S. Command said American military strength in Vietnam dropped last week to 31,100 troops, a decrease of 1,100. Under the current withdrawal program American forces will be cut to 27,000 by Dec. 1, but if a cease-fire is signed it will mean the withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Vietnam within 60 days.

Dem Chairman Urged To Resign

WASHINGTON (AP)--Saying the Democratic party needs a new sense of direction following President Nixon's landslide re-election last week, the leaders of the Democratic Governors Caucus Monday urged party Chairman Jean Westwood to resign.

"I would hate to say Mrs. Westwood is what's wrong with the Democratic party," said Arkansas Gov. Dale Bumpers following a meeting of the executive committee of the Democratic governors' organization.

But, Bumpers said, the Democratic National Committee is expanding under new party rules and "we feel the leadership of this party should be considered anew" when the 303 committee members meet Dec. 9.

"When you don't win a national election it's time to reappraise the leadership of the party," Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel said.

Bumpers said the recommendation of his executive committee will be forwarded to the meeting of all 31 Democratic governors and governors-elect when they meet in St. Louis Dec. 3.

A formal resolution asking her to stop down could be passed at that time, he said, unless she resigns before then, which, he said, "would be the gracious thing for her to do."

The 48-year-old Mrs. Westwood was vacationing in Miami Monday but an aide to the first woman chairman of either major party said she is standing by her statement last Thursday that she will resist efforts to oust her.

"Jean Westwood is alive and well and intends to remain on the job," she said at that time. She said she has been lining up support among DNC members and thinks she can defeat any effort to vote her out.

Mrs. Westwood's opponents, who are known to include some leaders of the AFL-CIO, several Democratic members of Congress and many of the Democratic governors, say she is too closely associated with Sen. George McGovern and party reforms inspired by McGovern to be effective as party chief.

Many of the anti-Westwood Democrats prefer former party treasurer Robert Strauss of Texas for the post. But several other names have been frequently mentioned, including former Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien, New York State Democratic Chairman Joseph Crangle, and McGovern's Southern California campaign chairman Charles Manat.

Bumpers said the five governers meeting Monday did not discuss possible replacements.

Vermont Suing NY, International Paper

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) - Five witnesses were called by the state of Vermont Monday in the first day of hearings in an environmental suit against New York state and the International Paper Co. IPC.

Vermont Atty. Gen. James Jeffords called the witnesses to establish the impact of a 300-acre sludge deposit left by IPC on the Lake Champlain shore area of Vermont.

Representing New York was Assistant Atty. Gen. Joel Sachs. and IPC was represented by Taggart Whipple, of a New York City law firm.

One of the witnesses, Justin Brande of Cornwall, Ct., a former director of the Vermont Natural Resources Council, testified that there was a "distinct difference" between the air and water quality below the Crown Point, N.Y., bridge and that north of the bridge.

More testimony on odor and water pollution in the area came from a surveyor, Davis Robinson of Sherham, Vt., and George T. Murdock, a Middlebury realtor.

Murdock told the court, "the lake frontage below the bridge, even in places where you could not see or possibly smell International Paper Company's plant, would sell at less than above the bridge."

Raymond Willis, executive director of the Addison County Regional Planning Commission and president of the Vermont Federation of Sportsmen's Clubs, testified that fishing in the area had deteriorated to the point that "there is no commercial fishing anymore." He said fishing was good in the 1940s.

Cross-examination by Sachs and Whipple tried to establish that conditions in Lake Champlain in the narrow area south of Crown Point had always been bad, and other forms of pollution had affected the lake in the area near Ticonderoga.

Under questioning by Sachs, Vermont witnesses said some improvement had taken place in the area since an older paper mill was closed.

The case is being heard by R. Ammi Cutter, a retired Massachusetts Supreme Court Justice, who is acting as a special master to take evidence for the U.S. Supreme Court. Cutter said the federal Environmental Protection Agency had decided to intervene in the case, but had not indicated what its position would be.

FDA Cites Faulty Safety Valves In Recall of Oxygen Tanks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration announced Monday the recall of 200,000 emergency oxygen units described as a "potential health hazard," because of leaking safety valves.

Many of the portable tanks may be in homes, emergency vehicles and hospitals where the oxygen loss is not detected until it is needed, said Philip Sheeler, an FDA consumer safety officer.

The recall affects all models 400 and 410 "Lif-O-Gen" units manufactured between January, 1971, and September 8, 1972, by Lif-O-Gen Inc., which recently moved from Lumberton, N.J., to Cambridge, Md.

"These units are primarily for use at home where a quick shot of oxygen is needed," Sheeler said. "They could be a potential health hazard, depending on how badly the person needs oxygen."

Sheeler said Lif-O-Gen identified the defect as solder used in the safety valve, causing minute pinholes when stored at high temperature, and has redesigned the valve.

But he said the FDA "has been getting several stories and we're looking into it ourselves."

Tax Amendment Defeat Leaves Sargent In Quandary

BOSTON (AP) - Defeat of the graduated tax amendment in last Tuesday's election has left the Sargent administration in something of a quandary.

Recent tax planning in the governor's office had been geared to anticipated approval by the electorate of the proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the state to implement a graduated income tax.

The amendment, for the third time in less than a decade, was defeated overwhelmingly.

Remaining are a few revenue raising alternatives which are regarded generally as less desirable, less equitable and highly political.

Gov. Sargent has said he will ask for no new taxes for state programs next year. But he said this was conditional on a continued upswing in the state's economy, restraint in state aided school construction, passage of his state government reorganization program and moderation in new spending programs enacted by the legislature.

The door was left open, however, for a program of increased state taxes to provide local property tax relief.

Since the sales tax, the flat rate income tax and the local property tax all are regarded as regressive, shifting part of the property tax burden to the other available vehicles by varying degrees is felt by administration officials to be less meaningful than a shift to a graduated income tax.

There also is the problem of ensuring that additional money raised by the state and passed along to the communities is applied toward property tax relief and doesn't simply provide for increased local spending.

A case in point is the sales tax, which when first enacted was supposed to ease the property tax burden but didn't. The state's Master Tax Plan Commission schedule expects to complete its final report around January 1st.

Its superstructure already is out, in the form of an interim report which was filed in Oct. 1970, and the principal recommendations include a shift of much of the property tax burden to be sales and income tax, since the property tax is felt to be most regressive of all the alternatives.

Also included in the report is proposed reform to the property tax and it is now administered, thereby making that tax in itself more equitable.

New State Prison Superintendents Named

BOSTON (AP) - Correction Commissioner John U. Boone Monday named new superintendents to the state prisons at Walpole and Concord.

Named superintendent at Walpole, the state's maximum security prison, was Raymond E. Porelle, 43, of North Arlington, Va.

Boone said the new superintendent at the Concord Reformatory will be Douglas H. Vinzant, 34, of Jackson, Miss.

Vinzant, whose appointment is effective Dec. 1, is an ordained Methodist minister who, Boone said, was instrumental in desegregating the Mississippi training schools.

Porelle, Boone said, was chief of security at the Lorton adult correctional facilities near Washington. His appointment is effective immediately.

Joseph Higgins, who has been serving as acting superintendent at Walpole, will resume his duties as deputy commissioner for institutional services, Boone said.

Boone also announced that Leon Corsini, 45, of North Easton, has been named deputy superintendent at Walpole.

The current deputy superintendent, Fred Butterworth, will assume the position of the department's chief security officer.

Porelle, the commissioner said, worked with Boone at Lorton and was "responsible for the success of our community based corrections and furlough programs" in Washington.

The new Walpole superintendent began his career as a correctional officer, Boone said.

Researchers Clash On Heroin Project

BOSTON (AP) — Community groups and Boston City Hospital heroin researchers clashed Monday over a research project to test experimental drugs which block the effects of heroin.

Percy C. Wilson, spokesman for the groups opposing the project, charged that the researchers do not consider adequately the long-term welfare of the research subjects, that the project is shrouded in secrecy and that researchers have refused to meet with community representatives to discuss the study.

The study's principal investigator, Dr. Roger E. Meyer, associate professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School, denied the charges. Meyer said he and the senior investigator, Dr. Jack H. Mendelsohn, chief of psychiatry at BCH, have tried to cooperate with community groups and see nothing wrong with the project.

The federally-funded, $440,000 experiment was approved by BCH trustees last summer and is part of a federal effort to find alternatives to controversial methadone maintenance programs.

Because of mounting opposition to the project by community groups, the BCH trustees met last week and voted to suspend the study unless a compromise could be worked out between the researchers and the community groups.

Wilson, president of the Boston University-Commonwealth of Massachusetts Community Mental Health Center Area Board, said his board, which represents the people in the BCH area, has unsuccessfully tried for months to meet with the researchers.

Other groups opposing the project also said the researchers had refused to meet with them. The opponents include the Fort Hill Mental Health Chapter of Roxbury and the Committee of the Boston Black United Front.

Meyer said some of the opponents are "playing politics" with the controversial project. He said he and Mendelsohn had repeatedly tried to set up private meetings with community representatives, but have resisted appearing before "emotional public meetings."

He said the Area Board insists upon a public meeting in which to talk about the project, and Meyers said this would lead to more "confrontation than dialogue."

"As far as I'm concerned," Meyer said, "the project at BCH has been suspended permanently because of the demand to appear before a public meeting of the Area Board.

However, Meyer did not rule out the prospects of moving the experiment to another institution in another area of the city. Opponents say they have heard such a move is being considered and want to alert other communities.

In a statement, Wilson and other project opponents condemned "the blatant insensitivity and arrogance of the investigators to the community's legitimate request for discussion and dialogue around the methods and goals of the study."

The opponents said their chief criticism of the program was that there was no commitment to rehabilitiation of the test subjects after the study was completed.

"After the addict is detoxified, he is put on pure heroin and the other drugs tested on him," Wilson said.

"Then what happenes to him?" he continued. "There is no follow-up after he goes back to the community."

Wilson said the addicts should have options for rehabilitation which the project should pay for, including job training and further education, as well as long-term guarantee of free medical care because of possible side effects of the research.

Meyer says long-term follow-up is impossible because the research team probably would not be together after July, the end of funding

Faculty And Fees

At the urging of the Student Senate the Faculty is at this time investigating a plan under which they would pay such fees as the Campus Center Fee, the Health Services Fee, the Athletic Fee, and something of a Student Activities fee, covering faculty use of such facilities as this newspaper and WMUA. There is also the possibility of faculty participation in the Fine Arts Fee. As these fees each represent something a little different from the other, we feel that question cannot be answered by a blanket "yes" or "no" answer. Each must be considered separately.

Faculty use the Campus Center and its facilities almost as much as students do, and assuming that they are in many cases here longer than a student, they use it more. Since they get the same privileges from the building as students, (with the possible exception of office and meeting space, which they do get elsewhere), we feel that they should be obliged to pay a Campus Center Fee equivalent to that which students pay. It's only fair.

The Health Services fee should be entirely up to the individual faculty member, and the option should be open to faculty members. Since the Infirmary is expanding anyway and faculty are a part of the community they should be able to get in on this if they so desire.

As far as the Athletic fee goes, we realize that students do get some benefits out of their fee payment, such as the right to get into football and basketball games free (although they couldn't if they all wanted to get in at once). But students are also paying in that fee part of the deficit incurred by the athletic department. Since Athletics is part of the community and faculty are too, they should have to pay their share of the deficit too. If the athletic program were making money everyone would benefit, there's no reason why the whole community shouldn't have to share in the sorrow.

A fee covering the use of the Collegian and WMUA should be carried by everyone, or the faculty should make a real point of not taking newspapers off the racks in the morning. Students are the only people presently giving any money to the operation of campus newspaper and radio facilities. Until that changes they should be the only ones entitled to their use.

The Fine Arts Fee is something that students pay whether they like it or not. There is no reason why this should be. Even though students do get a discount on Fine Arts events, many of them don't use it, and they should not be made to pay for it. For that matter neither should faculty, but if it is going to be forced down student's throats, there is no reason why everyone shouldn't have to pay and get their discounts too.. It's ridiculous to pick out one part of the community to get shafted by an unjust fee. Either take it away from everyone or give it to everyone, we're all in this together.

Separate, Integrate, Or Both?

The relationship between organized religion and the various levels of government has been and continues to be a cause of controversy. The tax exempt position of Churches, the financial status of Church schools and the role of Churches in politics have aggravated local tax rates and non-Church members.

As a solution to these problems some people have proposed a complete separation of the Churches and the government. But what exactly do people mean by a complete separation of Church and State? Do they mean the marriages performed by members of the clergy would no longer be recognized by the state, or does it mean that schools run by Churches would no longer be accredited, does it mean that hospitals run by religious organizations would not be inspected by the government to assure a high degree of quality? Certainly very few people would favor carrying the separation of Religion and government that far. The opposite extreme is just as unacceptable. The fusion of religious organizations and the government would be ridiculous in a multi-religious society like the United States.

The tax exempt status of Church property is not satisfactory. Tax revenues in many cities have been curtailed by the tax status of Churches. A reasonable approach must be taken toward the taxation of Churches. Revenue producing property owned by Churches such as hotels, apartment buildings and halls used for social functions should be taxed at its full value. It is the same as any privately run establishment. Universities and schools run by Churches should not be taxed unless all private schools are taxed. Taxing all the private institutions of higher learning would drive many of them out of business. The costs of operating schools like Northeastern, B.U., and Columbia might be taxed out of existence. The same applies to hospitals run by religious organizations. They should not be taxed unless all hospitals run by private groups are taxed.

Church buildings, rectories and convents should be taxed. Rectories and convents should be taxed as residences because that is what they are. Church buildings would be harder to tax. Property is taxed on its valued price, that is the price it could be sold at. There are not many buyers for old churches in today's market. Church buildings use the services of the local government; police, sewerage, and, fire protection. They should be taxed but not on the basis of the cost to build them because this is not their market value.

Financial aid to schools and hospitals operated by religious groups should continue. Hospitals serve an obvious purpose. Hospitals run by religious organizations should receive government assistance as all hospitals should to ensure quality care. Aid to Church owned schools should be continued because they provide society a service at a relatively cheap price. Church schools educate children without cost to the majority of taxpayers. In a state like Massachusetts parochial schools save taxpayers millions of dollars. In Springfield there are about 30,000 students in the public schools; it costs about $857 per year to educate each student. About 8,400 Springfield residents attend parochial schools. One might reason that parochial schools save the City of Springfield around $7,198,400 a year. That's a pretty large savings. If parochial schools folded there would be a fifteen percent increase in the number of students attending school in Holyoke last year 2,861 went to parochial schools. That's almost one quarter of the school population. Church schools deserve to be tax exempt and receive government aid because of the service they provide to the community.

The role of religious organizations in politics should be curtailed. The power and prestige that religions have is formidable. They should be aware of it. In Massachusetts the Roman Catholic Church has tremendous influence over the laws of the Commonwealth. The Catholic Church has opposed attempts to reform this state's birth control and abortion laws, which may be one of the reasons these laws have not been changed. No religious organization should try to force its values on nonmembers. Churches should have as little as possible to do with the government. They should not lobby for increased aid to parochial schools but should only present their position to the government and explain their reasons. No church should organize a write your representative campaign or remind legislators that their district is composed of members of one faith.

Churches provide health facilities, charitable services, and educational facilities to the general public at very little cost. They should be aided in these areas. They also use the services of government. They require police and fire protection. Churches use sewerage facilities. They should have to pay for the public services they use.

What's Going On?

What the hell are they doing to that horseshoe in Southwest? It's not bad enough that it's rough to find a blade of grass in Southwest, but now they're trying to take away whatever grass is left. Will wonders never cease?

If it is truly necessary (which I doubt) to have a combination ice rink-basketball court in Southwest, then why couldn't it be built over some of the cement that's already there? Why must this university persist in building until it has destroyed any semblance of nature? In the very same area that bears the name of Henry David Thoreau on one of its dormitories, it would be complete hypocrisy to continue this wasteful destruction of those very elements Thoreau stood for.

Everyone thinks that a project such as this one which is proposed would be good for Southwest because it would provide a recreational activity for the residents of that area. However, one can be sure that trying to make use of this facility will be like trying to get to use the pool table in a dorm. If Southwest truly wants a recreational facility that all its residents could use, then why doesn't it undertake a full-scale project, using one of the empty fields across University Drive, instead of this half-assed waste of the only truly serene spot left in the area.

If Southwest wants to be a city in itself, then let's make it a city worth living in. Let's retain some peace and quiet amidst the harsh, loud sounds. Let's set aside a place of order in the center of confusion and chaos, and let's not destroy what little natural beauty we have lef Any city has problems and Southwest, being the city of UMass, is no exception. Are we to add to these problems by introducing new ones?

It was quite ingenious of the University and the Southwest Area to introduce this proposal now that winter is coming around. But what happens when spring arrives and people realize that half of that grass is gone, and what is left is unbearable to relax on due to the constant pounding of basketballs on the court? Certainly, the cries of outrage will then be heard, and the answer will be, "It's now. You should have thought of that in the first place."

Now there is no excuse. Those who are content to lean back and relax and let their views go unheeded may do so, but they cannot complain when there will be no place for them to lean back and relax later on.

"A single gentle rain makes the grass many shades greener. So our prospects brighten on the influx of better thoughts. We should be blessed if we lived in the present always and took advantage of every accident that befell us, like the grass which confesses the influence of slightest dew that falls on it; and did not spend our time in atoning for the neglect of past opportunities, which we call doing our duty."

The Collegian Gets Theirs (Twice)

To The Editor:

Student Government here at UMass can be a very frustrating thing. Opposition seems to come from all sides, and the enthusiasm to continue at times is lacking.

This happens when there is little that can be done that can be quickly seen. For example, very few people remember the times when curfews were in existence, when open house visiting rights were a few hours a week, or when co-ed dorms were only discussed. This all changed in the past 5 years. Enthusiasm for promoting change in social activities is great; it is social ideas that affect the average student most.

But most of the social changes in that context have now been introduced. The student government now must look at issues that affect the other part of the students' life–academics and finances. The Collegian editorial position on Friday, Nov. 10 was titled GET TO WORK. It briefly stated that the Senate was not doing work of any value. It stated, that with the exception of 2 early actions, the Senate has been too involved with petty affairs. This causes me to now wonder about the editorials. For a paper policy to come out and say that the only thing that is being done has been 2 internal re-organizations is very narrow-minded. It seems that the MDC has decided to look for sensationalism in its stories rather than truth. It seems ironic that MDC does not read its own pages. For if it did, it would notice that the Senate puts a weekly calendar of what its committees are doing. And those committees are doing what the MDC editorial has mentioned, long before the editor chose to reform the Senate. The editor would notice that one group of people is looking (in great detail) at all of the fees that the student body must pay. If that editor were to look a little, he would also notice that this same committee is becoming a real voice to the administration in the matter of student fees. Another committee is doing much more than making a "game try" at the rhetoric requirement. Again if that editor were to do some preparation, he might find some different results. The other committees are likewise doing positive actions. To deal with non-social change is a difficult thing–but, for once, the student senate committees appear to be beginning to work.

Collegian, the Senate, as you say, has never been too popular anyway. The purpose of the Senate is not to be popular, but to be effective. Collegian, if you want a sensational news story every week, I'm afraid that you won't be obliged. Results are the goal, not headlines every day.

Job Well Done

To The Editor:

Several months ago a number of staff members from Student Affairs and Administrative Services foresaw the probable effect of the 18-year-old voting âge in respect to the number of students who might want to use absentee balloting. In anticipation of a large demand from the student body for the services of Notaries Public, approximately 15 people, predominantly from the Student Activities Office, applied for and received commissions as Notaries. As a result of some excellent planning by Bud Demers of Student Activities and Dan Fitzpatrick of Student Affairs, a very efficient and effective program for notarizing ballots was set up in the Student Ujion during the weeks of October 23 and 31. During this time approximately 4500 student ballots were processed.

So many persons took the time to provide this important and much needed service that I am taking this opportunity to commend and thank all of those who were involved.

To The Editor:

The Daily Collegian is the undergraduates' newspaper. Yet, because of its large size and wide daily circulation, it has the appearance of representing the University as a whole. For this reason, although I am a graduate student, I thoroughly resent the incredible depths of arrogance and bias at which this newspaper operates. In particular, I resent the following: the appearance of political "comment" on the sports page; the passing off of leftist propaganda as "news" stories under the "LNS" dateline; the almost total one-sidedness of the editorial section, right down to the cartoons, in a newspaper that all undergraduates are required to fund; and other manifestations of bias, such as some of the headlines placed over wire service stories and letters to the editor, and in the choice of photographs to go with some news stories. I feel that the undergraduate students of this university should resent these things too, and should take action to reform their newspaper.

Granted, the overall political attitude of a school paper is determined by the opinions of those students who are willing and able to take a responsible role in putting it out. Still, there's got to be a limit to how far you can go in shoving your opinion down other people's throats, especially when you consider that the Collegian is a monopoly.

A Hard Reign

To The Editor:

The psychological effects of Campaign '72 upon the members of my generation (indeed upon all Americans) who vigorously opposed the re-election of President Nixon will take a long time to make themselves known. We are living in a time when government "for the people" has never been less responsive to the people, a time when feelings of outrage and impotence will be turned either outward in destructive actions or inward in self-destructive actions. I would foresee a serious rise in drug usage, alcohol intake, suicide, depression, crime, and mental disturbance.

We are faced with the spectre of four more years of sabotage, deceit, graft; we will see, I expect, a steady erosion of civil liberties, a hampering of the freedom of the press, a steady and irrevocable movement toward an authoritarian state. To quote from the NY Times editorial of 11/8 entitled "Mr. Nixon's Victory": "The election returns suggest that many of the issues which Senator McGovern attempted to raise did not sufficiently trouble the great majority of Americans to lead them to risk any break with the comfortable familiarity of the status quo. They involved such questions as the threat to civil liberties and to the Bill of Rights, the concentration of executive power at the expense of Congress and the people, the obvious inequities of the tax system, the power of the military-industrial complex, the widespread racial and class divisions, the massive bombing of military and civilians alike in defense of one dictatorship against another in Vietnam."

The majority of Americans either cannot see this or refuse to consider it is cause for serious alarm. In Queens, N.Y., on election day when I was out working for McGovern, I talked to several people who did not consider Watergate a "political issue."

I, for one, love this country, but I can no longer say that I love its people; and that is evidence of a schizophrenia and paranoia that, in the not so immortal words of CSN & Y, will be a long time coming before it will be a long time gone.

Editorial Points

Yes, it's true, as shown in one of yesterday's Letters to the Editor, we do print the word F–K in the Collegian.

Which is why we didn't print it above. We don't want to give you too much of a good thing.

The Student Senate claimed last Wednesday when the Collegian attacked the Faculty Senate that we were doing our homework. But when we attacked them Friday, the cries of "irresponsible" and "misinformed" almost shook the Campus Center's foundations. Which goes to show how far you can trust a campus politician, faculty or student.

All we have to do is come down on the Graduate Senate now. We might as well make it three for three. Meanwhile, on the sidelines, the Administration cheers.

Overheard in the Collegian office: "A little while ago Coach MacPherson said 'it's one step from the penthouse to the outhouse.' Looks like the football team took a running dive into the swill last Saturday."

Republican Conspiracy

To The Editor:

At 7 a.m. on Nov. 7 the polls in Northbergen, New Jersey (pop. 42,000) were opened to the voters. At 7:10 people started calling in to the McGovern Headquarters reporting broken voting machines all over the city's 31 districts. It seems that after the Democratic lever was pulled once it immediately jammed so that no one else could vote on the Democratic ticket until the machine was restored. The Republican lever remained in operation. Anyone could vote for Nixon but nobody could vote for George McGovern and have his/her ballot counted. Legally, no one was to be allowed to use a defective machine but sometimes the defect in the Box wasn't noticed at once. The calls continued throughout the day and by 11 a.m. 65% of the machines were reported to have broken down. Some took as long as 2-1/2 hours to be repaired. Although the Polls were kept open until 11 P.M., many voters were discouraged in the morning and did not return to vote. This incident is a deliberate act of political sabotage by persons alien to the Democratic cause, namely the Republican Party. What is the use of spending millions of dollars and thousands of hours of human effort in a campaign if the party in power has control of the tallying devices? If our attempts to work within the system for change are thwarted we should channel our energies into areas of greater expedience. We must survive as a Party, And as a People.

Contrast In Letters

To The Editor:

Monday's letters to the Editor contained several (unintended) contrasts which cannot pass without some comment. First, it is ironic that Clark Irwin's letter in support of the Rhetoric course was apparently supported more by an accompanying letter on the same page than by anything Mr. Irwin could muster himself. I refer to the misguided rantings of Richie Rashed, who relieved himself (and burdened us in turn) of his pent-up frustrations over a recent threat by Representative Louis Morini concerning the local student vote. I have no particular love for Mr. Morini's stand on the issue myself, but Richie's adolescent yelpings do little more than offer support to those persons who perceive a crying need for more - not less - courses like Rhetoric 101.

The other contrast yesterday concerns the issues hatched of late between the local neanderthals of the far-left and far-right. What a treat to see these two sides incapably displayed in the letters of Bob Estelle (far-right) and Mark Cerasoulo (far-left). If Bob sees a Pinko behind every bush, the bush he has in mind must surely be the one harboring Mr. Cerasuolo, who glibly contends that it is the capitalistic system itself which spawns wars rather than the politicians within that system. Well perhaps: but to what are we, in America, supposed to turn in our search for a "pacifistic" system? Socialist Lybia? Communist Albanina? Mainland China? Hardly a capitalist in the lot; hardly the source of world peace either. Ah yes -- those of us who are "familiar with the basic writings of Marx, Lenin, and Trotsky" know that peace will never come until universal communism overthrows the last vestage of capitalism. But those of us who have had Philosophy 101 know that argument is tautological. What's more, it's politically naive. We in the political middle know that wars are pushed by all competitive social systems in conflict over scarce goods – and that these societies are composed of the likes of Richie, Bob, Mark and myself; and that while they remain so, peace will only be a momentary pleasure; and even Rhetoric 101 cannot stamp out that pessimistic conclusion.

Loyalty Oath

To The Editor:

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Loyalty Oath, formed on Nov. 10, is made up of faculty and staff (including employed students) members at U-Mass who oppose the state loyalty oath and plan to work for its repeal. While the basis of opposition varies, we are united in seeking an end to the imposition of the oath. We shall be active in educating the public about the oath and in lobbying for legislative repeal of the oath statute. Some members of our informal group have not yet signed the oath and will refuse to do so, at least until every possible avenue of legal challenge and defense of our rights has been exhausted. To that end, 18 persons filed a lawsuit on Monday in District Court in Northampton seeking protection against loss of their jobs for refusing to sign and attacking the legitimacy of the oath as currently administered. The judge issued a temporary restraining order which bars punitive action against the 18 and opens the way for a hearing on the merits of our contention that the oath should be struck down. Two points should be stressed:

1. Other persons who have not yet signed the oath may still join the lawsuit. If you wish to do so, please call me on Tuesday (X.5-0308 from 4-5 P.M.; 253-5390 after 5:30) or attorney William Norris in Cummington.

2. We need financial contributions to meet the cost of legal and lobbying activities. Checks payable to Ad Hoc Committee on the Loyalty Oath are acceptable. Contributions should be given/sent to any member of our steering committee (See Monday's Collegian, p. 1).

on behalf of the committee

Vt. Yankee Atomic Polluting

The Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant at Vernon Vermont, has experienced "somewhat higher (radioactive) releases than we expected," according to its Vice-President Donald E. Vandenburgh.

This disclosure was learned Thursday, at the Atomic Energy Commission (A.E.C.) hearings in Washington, by the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, an educational group representing the public interest on nuclear energy questions.

Vermont Yankee's unexpectedly high releases to the air, caused by faulty, leaking fuel rods, have been at least five to seven times higher than in comparable plants in Minnesota, New Jersey and Connecticut.

"We have often been assured by Vermont Yankee at its operating license hearings that this kind of thing would never happen at Vermont Yankee," said New England Coalition President Nathaniel Smith and Vice-President Diana Sidebotham; "This once again calls into question all Vermont Yankee's past assurances about safety and quality control."

Because of these radiation releases, according to Vandenburgh, Vermont Yankee will speed up construction of a charcoal filtration system. The new target date is next summer (Vermont Yankee had previously stated the system could not be ready that early).

Vermont Yankee is considering asking the manufacturer to replace the faulty fuel rods, and is currently measuring radiation dose rates to the surrounding population, but can supply no information yet, it was learned.

Vandenburgh also said that his plant may be forced to reduce power output if necessary to cut down radioactive releases.

"The New England Coalition has maintained that current power levels in nuclear reactors are too high, given that emergency cooling systems are untested and widely considered inadequate," stated Smith and Mrs. Sidebotham from the Coalition's Brattleboro headquarters.

The Vermont Yankee plant is completely shut down for at least three weeks after a fire there last Wednesday in an auxiliary transformer main unit. Full details must be furnished in an accident report to the A.E.C.

"The public may well be wondering what will happen next in this supposedly safe and reliable nuclear plant," the Coalition said.

Spanish Tutorial Planned For Holyoke Puerto Ricans

Any student who has completed Spanish 140 is eligible to sign up for Spanish 385--Holyoke Tutorial (3 credits). It is not necessary to be a Spanish major; there are over ten non-majors participating in the program this semester. Students will go to Holyoke twice a week to tutor Puerto-Rican children in the Holyoke public schools. Tutoring sessions are conducted on a one-to-one basis, with the content of the tutoring sessions being determined by the specific needs of the tutee involved. In the spring the bus to Holyoke will leave the campus at 8:45 and return about 11:45 a.m., so that students who wish to participate in the program must have these mornings completely free of classes. Tutors generally meet on Friday mornings to discuss any problems that arise or to hear occasional speakers. Students in the tutorial are asked to keep a running journal of their experiences, which then serves as the basis for a final paper.

Any students who are interested in the Tutorial should contact Professor Nina Scott in the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literatures, 421 Herter Hall (5-0613).

There will be an evening meeting of the Tutorial tomorrow at 7:30 P.M. in the third floor lounge in Herter. Father Edward Bonneville of the Spanish Apostolate in Holyoke will be showing his slides of Puerto-Rico and speaking on his work in the community. All are welcome to attend, and can use this opportunity to speak to Professor Scott and the tutors about the program.

U.S., France To Search Atlantic Depths

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) - The silent, crushing depths of the mid-Atlantic Ocean will be plumbed by man for the first time in the summer of 1974, by submersibles from the United States and France.

The three-year program was announced Tuesday by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration NOAA and the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution.

The focus of the exploration will be the Mid-Atlantic Ridge in an area some 200 miles south of the Azores. Woods Hole spokesmen said.

The Mid-Atlantic Ridge is a spiny mountain range stretching from the Arctic Ocean the entire length of the Atlantic, around the tip of Africa and into the Indian Ocean. Its peaks soar from a maximum depth of 12,000 feet.

The exploration will center on the mid-ocean rift system, a network of cracks in the seafloor up to 10 miles wide and two miles deep. Oceanographers say they will be looking for evidence of volcanic-like activity apparently causing seafloor spreading and the gradual drifting of North America and Europe away from each other.

The exploration fleet will consist of the French bathyscaphe Archimede and French submersible SP-3000, the American submersible Alvin and four surface ships.

Alvin is the craft which recovered a hydrogen bomb from the sea off Palomares, Spain, after a B52 bomber crash in 1966. Now it can go down about 6,000 feet, but a new titanium personnel sphere will virtually double that range, Woods Hole officials said.

Alvin and the SP-3000 are highly maneuverable and will be used to survey the rift valley. Archimede, designed for great depths and heavy payloads, will explore the fracture zones of the seafloor.

In addition to detailed mapping of the floor, the craft will collect special bottom samples and place instruments on the seafloor.

Co-leading the U.S. participation in the venture are Dr. George Keller of NOAA's Atlantic Oceanographic and Meteorological Laboratories in Miami, and Dr. James Heirtzler of Woods Hole.

Heirtzler said ships and personnel from France, Great Britain, Canada and several institutions in the U.S. will take part in the venture.

Minority Grants

The Ford Foundation and the National Fellowships Fund have announced graduate fellowship programs for American Indians, Black Americans, Mexican Americans and Puerto Ricans for the 1973-74 school year.

Dance Group Performing Throughout The State

Through the UMass Continuing Education Division, a University of Massachusetts dance group is now giving a series of special performances at schools and junior colleges throughout the state.

The University Dancers, a faculty, graduate student and undergraduate group, performs in a production that features original choreography to music by contemporary composers. The four dance areas of jazz, ballet, modern and song-dance are represented.

Each part of the production illustrates some phase of technique and shows how movements are used in dance composition. In connection with the concerts, master classes are offered by UMass dance faculty in modern dance, choreography and song-dance technique.

During the Jan. 8 to 20 portion of the UMass winter vacation, the University Dancers will tour extensively throughout New England. Dates have been tentatively scheduled at the Northfield-Mount Hermon Schools and in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Before vacation, the group will appear at Ware High School Nov. 15, Mohawk Trail Regional Nov. 17, and Longmeadow High on Dec. 6.

Schools and other organizations interested in having the University Dancers perform may obtain full information on schedules and fees from Barton Drake, Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, UMass-Amherst 01002.

Life Concert

Imagine over a hundred people in a small gym who have agreed to not talk for three or four hours. What do you see happening?

If you want to discover if your fantasy is a good guess, attend the free Life Concert at the Mark Meadow Gym (behind the School of Education) tonight starting at 7 p.m. Here is the invitation being extended by Terry Mollner, author of How To Go Through The University of Massachusetts On Your Own Terms - A Guide For Students And Faculty and a doctoral candidate at the School of Education:

"I would like to invite you with the understanding that you are contracting with everyone else who comes to NOT TALK from the time you enter the gym until you choose to leave. I will not suggest anything for us to do. I am wondering what will happen."

Terry extended the same invitation during the Marathon last year and over a hundred people showed up, kept the contract, and had a most fascinating experience. He has held a number of different kinds of Life Concerts since.

Viet War Film

The Americal Division, a 22 minute film of the Winter Soldier Investigation in Detroit in 1971 by the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, will be shown Tuesday, Nov. 14, in 917 Campus Center, at 8 p.m.

The film is part of the Indochina War Film and Lecture Series brought by the United Christian Foundation.

'Fifth Horse' Journeys Again

The next production of the UMass. Theatre will be Ronald Ribman's "The Journey of the Fifth Horse", directed by Harry Mahnken of the Theatre faculty. Performances will be presented at Bartlett Auditorium on November 16-18 at 8:30 P.M.

"The Journey of the Fifth Horse" is adapted for the stage from Turgenev's "Diary of a Superfluous Man." The play was first presented in 1966 at the American Place Theatre in New York. Dustin Hoffman won an Obie Award for his portrayal of Zoditch, the central character.

A reader in a publishing house (Zoditch) is given a diary to take home and read overnight and this ordeal sets three worlds spinning: the reader's dream world, the real world of the moment, and the world of the diarist, all interlocked and interacting. In his dream world the reader imagines he is to marry the daughter of the owner, and also that his landlady is eager to wed and bed him. In the real world he actually proposes to the landlady and is promptly laughed to scorn. The diarist in his world loved a girl who fell victim to a dashing cossack and was left pregnant when his regiment moved on. The diarist is scorned for having provoked a duel, and the girl will not even have him as a foster father for the child.

The scene designer for the U.T. production is Jeff Fiala; costumes are designed by June Gaeke; the technical director is Nick Scott and lighting designer is Jim Dooley.

Tickets for "The Journey of the Fifth Horse" are available at the Bartlett box office and by calling 545-2579. The box office is open Monday through Friday 10:00-4:00 and the evenings of performances. Tickets are $1.50 for U.Mass students and $2.50 for the general public.

Opportunities For Women's Studies Numerous

If you are interested in Women's Studies then you should know that even though there is not a program at UMass as yet, there are a number of things that are available to you.

There are Women's Studies courses, colloquia, sponsors for independent study related to women and finally two mechanisms for majoring or specializing in Women's Studies: BDIC (Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration) and UWW (University Without Walls).

There are a number of Women's Studies Courses given in the Five-Colleges. The Five-College Women's Studies Committee has prepared a list of Women's Studies courses in the Five Colleges which is called "Women's Studies 1972-1973" and which is usually available in the Campus Center by the information desk; if it is not there you can get one by writing to Five-College Women's Studies Coordinator, Box 740, Amherst. This list is not complete, so you have to check through departmental listings just prior to registration. Beside these courses, there are the ones given in Orchard Hill and in Southwest. If you live in Southwest you can take courses in Orchard Hill, (and vice versa) although residents of the complex have priority. You can have a list of Orchard Hill courses sent to you by campus mail by calling the Master's Office (5-2882) located in 101 Field House. Information about Southwest courses is available from the Southwest Academic Affairs Office (5-2803).

Also there are now the Project Self courses which are open to Southwest students for a fee of six dollars. To find out information about these courses, call Every Women's Center (5-0883) located in Munson Hall. A better idea is to drop in and meet and talk with some of the women there.

Other than courses there are a number of colloquia offered each semester both in Southwest and in Orchard Hill which are relevant to Women's Studies. To find out about these, you go through the same offices in Southwest and Orchard Hill as you do for courses. In Southwest, colloquia are given either one or two credits. Two credit colloquia are generally for sixteen hours, spread over eight weeks with two hours meeting time per week; one credit colloquia are usually about eight hours. One important thing to remember is that colloquia can be both student-initiated and student-run; all you need is a sponsor, which is not usually hard to find. Also the time scheduling of colloquia is highly flexible. It is certainly possible for example to have a two credit colloquia by a marathon-type weekend-workshop with eight hours of meetings both Saturday and Sunday.

Another way of becoming involved in the trial from out-of-court as an independent study with a faculty member sponsoring you. It would be possible to do something like an independent reading course on Feminism for example. It would also be possible to do an action project, for instance being involved in one of the action groups organized through the Valley Women's Center in Northampton, of a project connected with the SW Women's Center or the Every Women's Center. There are a number of faculty members who would be supportive of such projects; you have to talk to people and ask around a bit.

There are also the mechanisms of UWW and BDIC, which make possible majoring or specializing in Women's Studies. For more information about what's available to women interested in Women's Studies through UWW, call Gail Kaufman at UWW (5-1378) either Tuesday or Thursday mornings.

You can call the BDIC office (5-0736) to get sent an information sheet on BDIC. BDIC was set up to allow students to create an interdisciplinary major (actually a concentration for the last two years) which would not be possible in any other way through the University. Any student interested in BDIC has to come up with a proposal that includes personal and professional goals, a course program for the first two semesters, and a sponsor who is willing to be helpful in guiding you through this program.

Anyone interested in talking about a Women's Studies specialization through BDIC or about any other question concerning Women's Studies possibilities, can see me (Judy Shortsleeves) in the Southwest Women's Center on Tuesday afternoons from 1-4, where I am available for academic counseling concerning Women's Studies.

I am also interested in coordinating a group made up of any women interested in Women's Studies through BDIC, so that you can meet each other and give each other support and also share ideas and information. So if you are interested in Women's Studies or are interested in finding out more about it, come to the Center any Tuesday afternoon.

Civic Center Games Gamble For Future

(Ed. note: This is the second of a two-part series by Frank Antosiewicz on the problems of scheduling on the college level.)

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

A new hockey-basketball facility has been derailed far down the track. Matter of fact, on the list of building priorities it is non-existent.

The lack of a proper facility, especially in hockey, has hampered the scheduling of home games against the bigger, better teams. This has also had an effect on the total program of both sports. Both coaches are out to make their program the best in New England, but are unable to convince the better teams to play in their meager facility. The top teams are looking for opponents with money making potential. If a team plays in a facility which holds 15,000-20,000, they are very reluctant to play in Curry Hicks Cage, which holds in excess of 4,000. It just is not profitable.

Now that the new facility seems like a madman's scheme, a temporary solution may be at hand-- the Civic Center.

A few years ago, the possibility of playing in the new complex presented itself when the builders had set an opening date. As hopes for a new facility dimmed and the present facilities became crowded, the suggestion of playing in a hockey rink holding 8,000 persons and 9,000 for basketball became quite attractive.

Since UMass needed to pay a fee to use the facility, the matter had to be brought to the Athletic Council. Bob O'Connell, the Assistant Director of Athletics, made the presentation and it was understood that buses would be provided to transport the students. An admission fee of $1 was also decided.

The games picked to be played in the Springfield Civic Center were two of the top home games which would draw the biggest crowds. In basketball, the two games chosen were against perrenial rivals, Holy Cross on January 30 and Boston College on February 7. In hockey, the top Division II opponent, Vermont on January 19 and a Division 1 foe, Yale on January 28, were chosen.

The first thing considered by the coaches was the loss of the home advantage, but they consented to partake in the experiment. O'Connell said the decision was based on a number of items, including the type of competition, prestige, the gate attraction and the geographical accessibility. Route 91 and the Mass Pike are convenient to the opponents which usually have a large following.

He stressed that this was an experiment and the only way that it could be of any value, would be to play the best teams. O'Connell said, "It is a situation which might provide input as to what a good facility could do for us." He went on to explain that if there was good attendance, then the information could be used as background when talking to a school like Villanova for a two year home and home arrangement. Also it might spark interest in such a facility in Amherst.

Both coaches involved were reluctant to call the experiment more than that. Basketball Coach Jack Leaman said he viewed the games with mixed emotions. He hated to give up the home court advantage, but it might help the overall program.

He said, "It is a personal sacrifice, I and the team are making to play the Penns and West Virginias on our home ground, rather than playing down there." I'd much rather play them in the Cage, but it is a gamble to put our program over the hump. If the students are not for it, then next year probably we will play all the games at the Cage."

Hockey Coach Jack Canniff also was not overly excited with playing the top teams in the Civic Center. He noted the oversaturation with hockey in Springfield and their lack of drawing power so far. Canniff did not see this as a solution to his lack of a home rink. He said, "College athletics belong on campus. For a real following it must be on your doorstep."

Both coaches were not pleased with losing two home games, but they see it as possibly helping their overall program. It is a gamble.

Despite Bruises, OJ Will Stay

NEW YORK (AP) - O.J. Simpson doesn't complain about Buffalo's crumbling offensive line. He's bruised and disappointed, but has no thoughts of walking out on the lowly Bills.

"I've cried with these guys," Simpson said after Sunday's 41-3 crushing by the New York Jets, "I want to drink champagne with them."

Buffalo, 2-7, is still a long way from the Super Bowl.

While O.J. won't gripe about his blockers, Bills Coach Lou Saban admits, "We don't have an offensive line. We haven't had one since the beginning of the season."

Buffalo's line wasn't the greatest to begin with, but injuries and personnel problems have caused so many changes that Simpson never knows who'll be letting tacklers through next.

In a recent huddle, Simpson looked around and asked:

"Does everyone here know everyone else?"

Simpson - who has gained 812 yards-has operated behind eight different right guards, four centers, two left guards and three left tackles.

Only 6-foot-8, 275-pound Donnie Green at right tackle has been able and willing for all nine regular season games with the American Football Conference Eastern Division team.

With all his problems in three pro seasons, the former Southern California sensation still eagerly signed a long-term contract prior to this season.

"I could've made a lot of hullabaloo about getting out of Buffalo," he said. "But a lot of other guys are stuck here, too, if that's the word, and they can't get out."

A major factor in O.J.'s decision to sign the new deal was the appointment of Saban as coach. Simpson hadn't gotten along too well with the former coach, Johnny Rauch.

"We weren't enemies, but we didn't get along. His system was geared to passing. He drafted me No. 1 to run the ball, not to block, not to be a receiver."

Simpson realized that Floyd Little was a 1,000-yard rusher under Saban at Denver and was promised he would get more chances under the new Bills administration.

Dutch Kicker Does It His Own Way

By BOB VOGES
Associated Press Writer

EAST LANSING, Michigan (AP) - Michigan State's new Dutch kicker, who never saw a football game until September, can write his own rules so far as Coach Duffy Daugherty is concerned.

Dirk Krijt (rhymes with grit) kicked four field goals and an extra point in a 19-12 upset of Ohio State Saturday.

"He wandered in smoking a cigarette and said he was going out to have some fun with the girls and drink a little beer," said Daughtery. "But we have new rules for anyone who kicks four field goals in one game.

"I told him he might have to tackle somebody and he asked if he could use karate," Daugherty added.

Krijt, who saw his first football game on television in September, decided to go out for junior varsity.

His uncanny accuracy impressed coaches.

"The coach hired me the first time he saw me," said Krijt proudly. "All I did was kick the ball.

"There is more pressure on the holder than there is on me. All I got to do is put it between those things the goal posts."

"He has great control of the ball," said Daugherty. "He just lifts it up like a wedge shot out of a sand trap."

A few things surprise Krijt - like the crowd of 76,264.

"In soccer they yell at you," he said, "Here they yell for you."

Krijt, 24, a junior in marketing, is from Bergen, The Netherlands. He is 6-feet-3 and weighs 170 pounds. Admittedly superstitious, he wears the soccer socks he used for years in Holland.

He was asked if his parents would understand if he told them he was a football star.

"I tried to explain in a letter," he said, "but I don't think they would understand very much. They would say: "Fine on you."'

Four Teams Vie For Tourney Berth

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — Harvard, Brown and Universities of Connecticut and Rhode Island were chosen Monday to compete for the chance to represent New England in the NCAA University Division soccer tournament.

Harvard, with a 7-0-1 won-lost tied record so far, will play Rhode Island 5-4-1 next Monday at 2 p.m.

UConn 8-5-1 will face Brown 8-4-1 in Providence on Tuesday, Nov. 21.

The winners of the two games will meet during the week of Nov. 26 to determine the top team in the division's District 1, which covers New England.

The District 1 winner will play the District 2 champion in New York State to determine which team will go to Miami to play in the NCAA semifinals in the Orange Bowl on Dec. 29.

The announcement was made by Dartmouth Coach Whitey Burnham through the University of Connecticut.

Brown Loses Another One This Time Jardine

PROVIDENCE (AP) - Brown University is in the market for a new head football coach to write the next chapter of a history that has been consistently short on successes.

Coach Len Jardine, in his sixth season at the helm, submitted his letter of resignation Sunday, effective after the season finale at Columbia Nov. 24.

During his stay at Brown, the 35-year-old former Purdue star compiled a 9-42-1 record, including a 4-35-1 mark in the Ivy League. He said he was resigning "in the best interests of Brown University and my own personal future." The team has won onl one of seven games this year and is 1-4 in Ivy League play.

Athletic Director Andy Geiger said Monday Jardine offered his resignation without being asked to do so. He indicated no demand for Jardine's resignation was made, but "there's always pressure when the team is going badly."

Geiger added that creation of an advisory council to conduct a "comprehensive search" for a new coach would be discussed later this week. He emphasized the search would be wide-ranging.

Pats Change Coaches Again

John Mazur Out....

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — John Mazur stepped down as coach of the hapless New England Patriots Monday, becoming the third coach to leave the National Football League franchise in less than four years.

Mazur resigned after the Patriots suffered their worst setback in their 13-year history - a 52-0 drubbing by Miami Sunday. It was their sixth straight loss.

"I have always placed uppermost in my mind the best interests of any organization with which I have been associated," Mazur said. "In accordance with this long-time personal policy I am resigning my position with the Patriots."

For the Patriots, who had won 13 and lost 42 games between 1967 and 1970, things had begun to look better under Mazur's direction.

The team compiled a 6-8 record in 1971, the year quarterback Joe Kapp began by storming out of camp in a contract dispute. As a result, Mazur decided to put his team's fortunes in the hands of rookie Jim Plunkett and a host of other young players, including receivers Randy Vataha and Ron Sellers, linebacker Steve Kiner and running back Carl Garrett.

At times that year the Patriots looked brilliant, with Oakland, the New York Jets, Miami and Baltimore among their six victims.

And that trend continued into the early part of 1972, when the Patriots scored successive upset victories over Atlanta and Washington after an opening loss to Cincinnati.

Then it all fell apart for the team who had just solved the long-standing problem of where to play by ending a 12-season odyssey in four stadiums with the opening of their own 61,000-seat home.

After the Washington victory - the only defeat inflicted upon the Redksins this year - the Patriots stumbled badly, and increasingly got worse.

They were embarrassed by Buffalo, 38-14, and then were stung by the Jets, 41-13.

Those losses were followed by defeats by Pittsburgh, 33-3; the Jets, 34-10; Baltimore, 24-17, and then last Sunday's debacle in Miami.

Through the losing string the Patriots defense came unglued as the offense in general and Plunkett in particular became less and less effective, scoring only three touchdowns in the past four weeks.

Mazur, 42, became interim head coach of the Patriots midway through the 1970 season when Clive Rush resigned.

When Mazur was named head coach at the beginning of the 1971 season, he was one of three head coaches on the team's payroll

Bengston In

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - Phil Bengston, who helped build the Green Bay Packers into a National Football League dynasty in the 1960s, was named interim head coach of the New England Patriots Monday night.

Bengston, who was head coach of the Packers for three years after Vince Lombardi left to take over the Washington Redskins in 1968, was named by the Patriots' Board of Directors a few hours after John Mazur resigned as head coach.

An outstanding tackle at the University of Minnesota until his graduation in 1935, Bengston joined Lombardi with the Packers in 1959 and was credited with developing Green Bay's mighty defense.

Bengston left Green Bay after the 1970 season, and Dan Devine became head coach. Bengston joined the San Diego Chargers as defensive coordinator last year, and became the club's director of pro scouting this season.

Mazur became the third coach in less than four years to leave the Patriots.

After his graduation from Minnesota, Bengston became an assistant coach at Missouri, serving until 1940 when he took a similar job under Clark Shaugnessy at Stanford.

Bengston served as a Naval officer in the Pacific in World War II, and in 1946 returned to Stanford. He left the college ranks in 1951, becoming an assistant coach for the San Francisco 49ers. He gave up that position to join Lombardi at Green Bay.

In his three years as head coach, the Packers had a 20-21-1 record under Bengston. While he was Lombardi's chief lieutenant, Green Bay won the NFL championship in 1961, '62, '65, '66 and '67. The Packers also won the firy two Super Bowl games, in 1967 and '68.

New England President Billy Sullivan said Patriots General Manager Upton Bell had recommended Bengston and he was the only person considered as Mazur's replacement.

Clearance to approach Bengston was obtained from San Diego Coach Harland Svare.

Sullivan and Bell said they were "extremely pleased to get a man of Phil Bengston's background and capabilities."

GEORGE HOEY let Paul Warfield catch this pass in Saturday's Miami-New England game and that's one of the reasons John Mazur doesn't coach the Patriots any more. (AP Wirephoto)

Clark Still A Holdout

BALTIMORE (AP) - A federal judge issued an injunction Monday preventing Archie Clark, the Baltimore Bullets' holdout guard, from negotiating with any other professional basketball team.

U.S. District Court Judge Edward S. Northrop set Dec. 12 for arguments on the validity of the reserve clause of Clark's contract.

Following the injunction, Clark said he would decide in the next three or four days whether he would play this season.

Clark, 31, has been fined $350 a day by the Bullets for the last 50 days for not reporting to the National Basketball Association club.

The Bullets have been seeking to force Clark to play out the option year in his contract. Clark was paid an estimated $135,000 last season and reportedly asked a $240,000 increase for this season.

Clark was the leading Bullets scorer last season and a member of the NBA All-Star team.

A Lonely Day For Johnny Jones

FUROR FROM FITTON, WORCESTER, MASS., NOV. 11th, 1972 — Johnny Jones sat alone beneath Fitton's thunder as both teams retired from the field. He said next to nothing and he didn't have to...the expression on his face told the story. For the first time in the young man's life he knew that he was really alone with his own thought...For the first time in his life the game that had given him so much, seemingly took away everything that he ever wanted to own...Yes, for the New Britain Junior the world at the point in time in the cold impersonal placidness of Fitton Field, Johnny Jones was very much alone.

For the 16,000 that showed their New England loyalties that bastardly raw day in Worcester, Number 79 was simply looked upon as a viewing spectacle...To the Holy Cross Crusaders that man was a target of aggression and mounted attack...You see, he stood like a rock in front of the total objective that no one will deny that the Crusaders didn't achieve...and they did it stylishly and rather convincingly.

To the UMass contingent John stood as a foundation of hope. He represented that irrepressible rock that was to stand tall against all evil and degrade with strong arm the likes of a Buchanan and a Wilson. To the media Johnny was just another guinea pig to whom they could talk about and muckrake without often times trying to understand the internal struggle of college football.

And now you see John just another one of the cast and caravan at Fitton Field there to entertain. And how many of those 16,000 ass-frozen fans really understand what it's like to be out there-whether win, lose, or draw. How many actually bothered to put themselves into the mind of Johnny Jones as he sat very much alone on the bench at the half while the bands stole the show and the cheerleaders played in the end zones and Charlie Bradshaw (Manager for a decade) bitched at them for diverting the crowd's attention from the band which worked hard all week for the moment.

And then you have John nearly motionless taking it all in. And even if he wanted to talk it would have been painful. You see, both lips were severely swollen from the result of an errant elbow at the bottom of a pile that the cathartic fans in the stands will say is all part of the game.

But John had reason for concern. Yes, his team was on their way to a second straight defeat. Yes, his wife had called him on Thursday from New Britain Hospital. And yes, John Jones would no longer play college football for the University of Massachusetts this season. Like out of a cannon torn ligaments in his knee at Fitton Field were to tell him that an important chunk of his life had just been taken away from him.

Is that the savagery of college football? I doubt it. It sounds like a tear jerk but it really isn't. You see John and every other Minuteman knows damn well that at any time the right hit, and it's all over.

Now after talking with John, I underwent a strange metamorphis, one that scares me. I told the smoke-filled press corps that John Jones will be lost for the remainder of the season due to torn ligaments in his knee.

Now back to the explanation of the groups that John encountered or vice-versa that Saturday...To the sportswriter, that simply goes down as a good damn lousy statistic...So what...You see it in the Collegian, Don Gorski told you over the air, and still you go on to the next paragraph or the next play of the game.

No, I don't want you to give John Jones a prearranged wake. He wouldn't ask for that. But what I do want you to do is to think about what that hour of the day meant to Johnny Jones and just maybe you can understand what the internal workings of sport mean.

And as Earle and I braved nature in that rickety old press box and listened as their Sports Information Director obnoxiously cheerled his Crusaders to victory, I came out with the oldest adage in the book..."Earle, they better get that game ball for John...They better win it for him." Now they didn't and of course you know there were reasons far more exterior and extrinsic than Johnny Jones why they didn't win it.

And if Johnny could ask the Minutemen for just one more favor, he'd more than likely beg the Men to rally round that Conference Championship that they will get this Saturday before 11,172 and me at the stadium against New Hampshire, and get ready to tell Boston College that character can produce winning football.

So UMass don't die on John Jones, or the student body, or Mac, or for that matter me, pick up your proud heads please.

You've proved that you can win and win big. You've had to struggle at times with inexperienced talent and sometimes the plain lack of talent and still managed to win. And a few things like your own integrity caught up with you at Lewisburg. And at Fitton as Mac said so pensively in the locker room following, "Even though we lost we showed more football." Take it as a grain of salt.

But you'll meet the Wildcat and the Eagle minus one experienced personality. And although you'll sit and gloat over Mac's first clearcut Yankee Conference championship, and the smiles will hide the fear of the Eagle, just remember you Minutemen, that Conference Championship game ball, it belongs to Johnny Jones.

Feminism Explored At 'Women's Day'

By ANNE COLLINGTON
and
KERRY MELKO

The Women's Day program, held yesterday at the School of Education's Marathon, combined various lectures, discussions, and exercises in an effort to promote awareness of sexism among undergraduates on campus. Organized by the Women's Caucus of the University of Massachusetts community, the session was designed to "share politics, feminism, and life in general with all women."

The initial segments of the day and evening program, conducted by Ms.'s Marcia Forrest, Allison Rossette and Kathy Salisbury, were aimed at providing women with the opportunity to view the consciousness of feminism as "collective rather than individual." Emphasizing "issues regarding sexism in the classroom," Ms. Salisbury introduced the session by saying that "sexism is an issue worthy of attention....Women are united by feminism-problems, issues and concerns (that are seen as) collective rather than individual."

The idea of collective consciousness-raising was explained by Ms. Salisbury. "Women are not of one mind. The purpose of the Women's Caucus is to have women contribute views and perspective...to reform laws and attitudes," she said.

Ms. Forrest expressed the hope of allowing "each woman here to leave as a woman...rather than a 'lady' or a 'girl'." She explained that the last two terms have social and/maturity connotations as a result of "sexist language" and that in order to "translate our anger (on this issue)' we must listen to our own language."

Following the general introduction of sexism issues, various exercises were conducted, focusing on the changing roles of women. Readings from feminist Robin Morgan's Sisterhood Is Powerful stressed the social conditioning of women from birth until womanhood, and the moderators noted "the sense of being a group, conditioned by 'society'." In explaining the Women's Liberation movement, they said, "It is the media that has referred to the movement as 'Women's Lib'...Liberation is a serious word."

Hypothetical cases illustrated the social condemnation of "the acts of an unnatural woman" in educational situations, using such examples as the seventh grade girl who wanted to work out in the boys' gym and was then regarded as "unnatural." This, Ms. Rossette said, emphasized the need for "satisfaction with womanage", which is "a hard thing to accomplish." She said that there is "sexist bias" in UMass's own School of Education because of the low percentage of women professors who are hired.

The program's midpoint was experienced as a potluck supper. Various discussions concerning relevant issues were discussed by small groups of the participants.

In the evening the program revolved around a group of workshops and a movie entitled, "The Women's Film", which examined some personal discriminations the average woman has felt in society.

The workshops, lasting from 7:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. covered four areas of feminism in education and culminated in a session involving body movement.

A discussion of sexism in the elementary school curriculum, led by Mary Alice Wilson and Kathy Salisbry, demonstrated that even very young children have definite ideas about their roles as male or female.

Ms. Wilson and Ms. Salisbry brought out the fact that current textbooks add to this problem, since the children constantly see Dick or Jane performing tasks or playing games that specifically fit the role society has assigned them. They also stated that the teacher must convince the child that he will like something that doesn't fit into this stereotype.

A group examining the problem of women in the high school, was led by Ms. Allison Rossette, and featured a small group of secon-

Nell Speaks on Jung Psychology

By CINDY GONET

"A 21 year old woman dreams of all cute little masculine figures. They range in age from 4 to 6, and their activities include recreation at the playground and elementary school. What does this dream tell us?" Renee Nell posed this question at the CC last night before an audience of 50 persons in a Room To Move sponsored lecture.

In the lecture, entitled Integration: Dream Interpretation and Sexuality, Dr. Nells initially examined the differences between Freudian and Jung psychology and explained the two archetype symbols of animus and anima.

Ms. Nell spoke in length about the basic blueprint of Jung dream interpretation and the differentiation of sexual identity.

Dr. Nell interprets Freudian psychology as being psychology without psyche, "It is psychology without body; all spiritually oriented." Jung gives psychology structure.

The two archetype symbols, which are the "things of a basic configuration", such as the Sun, Moon, the home, said Dr. Nell are the animus and the anima. The anima is the feminine principle. "It is made evident in the psychological function, not in the biological", stated Dr. Nell. The anima represents the male feeling. The symbol of the thinking function is the animus. "Wisdom" embodies the function of the anima, and "intellect" the function of the animus.

Referring to the 21 year old woman who dreams about men-children, Ms. Nell contends that the intellect animus function is a child though she is mature. The woman views objective outer reality like a 4 year old. "She most likely believes the promises of a garage mechanic and the promises of an occasional date," said Dr. Nell.

Dr. Nell believes that all dreams can be read like a blueprint, "All dreams are coherent, with a definite beginning, middle and end." Using the Freudian psychological methods, individual words are analyzed along with their concepts. Free association of words is sometimes practiced. Following the Jung approach, sentences are tied together. A sense of theme and the ensuing content and conclusions are analyzed. After discussing a dream, advice is issued pertaining to the analysis.

"Dreams aren't seen as dealing with forbidden impulses, they are usually corrective agents for the events of the previous day", stated Dr. Nell. The psyche is a self-regulating system which functions to produce normalcy and to establish a homeostatic balance.

As an example of the corrective power of dreams, Dr. Nell cited the case where a young man in theology school dreamed that he couldn't get robes on over his head. They weren't just ordinary priest's robes, but those of a Bishop. This is a nice homeostatic message from society. The advice given was that the young dreamer shouldn't be overly ambitious or he'll have trouble getting into the "robes".

Dr. Nell explained that dreams don't usually confirm positive qualities, unless the positive qualities are known only unconsciously. "We are plagued when we don't acknowledge negative qualities", said Dr. Nell.

Jung psychology does not deal with the heterosexual or the homosexual, but with the animus and the anima. For example, a man appears to be gentle and artistic; he possesses a lot of anima. Sexually, he may seek another male as a partner. He may also be attracted to a domineering female with too much animus.

A balance of animus, anima must exist if a relationship is to exist. Dr. Nell contends that "in marriage there is the he and she. There is also the more important balance of his anima and her animus. Though he and she may quarrel, underneath there is the complementary balance of animi.

The lecture closed with an audience volunteer revealing a dream to Dr. Nell. She proceeded to ask questions and offer adviceto the subject.

Ms. Nell, Ed.D. studied under C. G. Jung in Zurich, Switzerland and is now the Director of the Country Place, in Litchfield, Connecticut. CountryPlace is a residential treatment center for emotionally disturbed young adults, alcoholics, and drug dependent youth. She is also group trainer for the State Methadone Program in Connecticut. Last month she was chairperson for the American Academy of Psychotherapists annual conference.

Constellation Skipper Defends Removal of Sailors

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — The skipper of the aircraft carrier Constellation, defending his removal of 130 complaining sailors, said Tuesday he acted to put a stop to apparent sabotage and to avert violence.

"I could either overpower them or take other action," Capt. J.D. Ward told a news conference, making public for the first time his side of the incident. "The need to overpower them wasn't justified at the time.

"We did have problems that could have been construed as sabotage," he added. "Some ordnance equipment had been tampered with and some expensive equipment had disappeared over the side. There is certainly some indication that a saboteur had been at work."

The 80,000-ton super carrier abruptly broke off a training exercise last week, and the dissidents were assigned as a "landing party".

The sailors, all but a handful of them blacks, complained of racial discrimination and said Ward refused to hear their problems.

After seven of the men returned to the ship voluntarily, the others refused Ward's order to do the same and since have been given punishment ranging from fines to reduction in rank for being absent without leave.

Vice Adm. Thomas J. Walker, commander of the Naval Air Force Pacific, has ordered an investigation into the affair, to be headed by Rear Adm. John Tierney, commander of aviation units at Whidbey Island, Wash.

After meeting earlier with representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Ward said he felt he had been fair in his treatment of blacks and white sailors aboard his ship.

No spokesman for the 123 sailors who were reassigned to shore duty was immediately available for comment.

Ward's actions were supported in a petition being circulated among Constellation crewmen and signed by an estimated 1,000 persons.

The petition, which said it had been learned that Ward was going to be relieved of his command, stated that his action was justified in order to avoid "a dangerous threat to his ship and crew."

Robbers Attempt Hijack

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Two armed bank robbers, who held five hostages for more than four hours and sought unsuccessfully to get an escape airplane Tuesday night, were captured in a wooded area after their car was rammed by pursuing police.

The two gunmen bolted from their getaway station wagon after it was rammed off the road by an unmarked police car on Interstate 85, but officials grabbed them.

Police said four persons were injured during the lengthy incident, but none of the injuries was believed serious. One of the injured was identified as an FBI agent. It was not known if any hostages were hurt.

The robbers and their hostages had led law enforcement officers on a twisting chase through middle North Carolina after they were surrounded inside a Greensboro bank during a robbery attempt.

Police said at one point the robbers took the station wagon and the bank employee hostages to Greensboro's Friendship Airport and demanded an airplane and pilot.

Police said they were unable to make arrangements to meet the demand.

After parking in the middle of a runway at Greensboro for a short time, the robbers and their hostages raced to Winston-Salem. After getting there, the station wagon headed back to Greensboro.

Authorities were close behind in pursuit.

The hostages had been forced into the station wagon at the Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. branch office at Greensboro after fruitless negotiations with Greensboro Police Capt. W. H. Jackson.

Police learned of the robbery when the branch's burglar alarm system went off around 5:10 p.m., but when the first policemen arrived, branch manager Preston E. Davenport appealed to them to leave so that the hostages would not be harmed.

As the robbers and hostages came out of the rear door of the bank, one of them held what appeared to be a pistol to the throat of one woman.

Davenport emerged from the bank's rear door and walked along the bank parking lot to the station wagon. Policemen crouching behind hedges called to him, asking how many robbers there were.

Davenport replied that there were two.

Davenport pulled the car alongside the bank and went inside, where the robbers remained. They could be seen with the hostages at the rear door.

dary school students. The students felt that the existing dating process where the male is the aggressor and the female must play the waiting game, is unfair. Ms. Rossette stressed that women must escape this role and be consistent in pursuing unorthodox practices in their social behavior, stating that, "women should often make the first move in a romantic relationship."

She also stated that several areas of high-school curriculum, especially physical education, are sexually biased, and cited the example of women being barred from a school wrestling team as an example of this.

Marcia Forest, in a workshop on consciousness raising, related her personal experience with feminism and in a discussion on women counseling, Claire Smith and Sarah Wolfe, emphasized that women must move out of traditional female roles and join with other women in the feminist movement.

The body movement session, directed by Irene Ringuawa, was designed to relax and was open to all who took part in workshops. In a combination of sound and physical movement the participants were allowed to express their personal thoughts and emotions.

Only two men participated in the workshop. One, a high school student, agreed with the feminist ideas of dating but said unfortunately most of his male friends were still entrapped by society's constraints.

Morini Asks Investigation of Collegian

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

State Rep. Louis J. Morini, R-Northampton, said Tuesday he will ask Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn to investigate the operations of the Collegian for its use of "immoral" language.

Morini, 64, added that he will also ask the UMass Board of Trustees to change the editorial policy of the newspaper to insure that such language does not appear in the future.

The letter, containing a number of obscenities, appeared Monday in the Collegian, and condemned Morini for recent statements on the impact of the student vote in the wake of last week's election.

The Republican lawmaker said at the time that he would file legislation that would overrule a state attorney general ruling that allowed students to vote in their college community.

The students, he said, vote in a single block in such a way that their district does not get the type of representation that it deserves.

"Students should not have the right to vote in their college community since they don't pay taxes," he continued. "In fact, they don't do anything except go to school and learn."

James Gold, editor-in-chief of the Collegian, said the situation has been "blown out of proportion," and added that under the present obscenity laws, "it is legal and constitutional to publish four-letter words."

"I personally considered it in bad taste, but I did not feel that it was unpublishable," he said.

Gold said the only criteria for a letter being published is that it be signed by the author, and that it not be libelous.

Richie Rashed, the author of the letter, said he used obscene words because it was "more effective than saying shame on you."

He said he meant no personal offense to Morini, but wanted to use an approach that was "blunt, candid and more to the point."

UMass Trustee Allen Shaler of Easthampton said the matter is "no business of the trustees and should never reach the board."

He added that the Collegian should bear the consequences of its actions, but emphasized that he was not talking legally but journalistically.

Meanwhile, Michael Sullivan, vice-chairman of the Amherst Board of Selectmen, refuted Morini's charges saying that students do not vote as a single block, but vote Democratic and Republican and are very issue-oriented.

Amherst officials, he said, are not concerned about a possible student takeover, and have always fostered a smooth student-town relationship.

UMass student Atty. Richard M. Howland said the "justification for denying Massachusetts students the same privilege enjoyed elsewhere is a bold denial of the right to vote."

The reasoning, he added, is similar to denying someone the right to vote on the basis of race or religion.

Howland said Morini made a "libelous" statement when he recently charged that some students voted more than once.

Morini said he had no evidence that students did vote in their home communities and college community, but said that under the present laws a person would meet with minimum difficulty in voting twice.

Proposal Would Raise Student Tax

By CAROLYN CALDWELL

The Rent's and Fees Committee last night discussed a proposal to go before the Student Senate which will have a net result for next year, of increasing student taxes $2.

The motion, dealing with the transfer of the Student Activities staff account, will have the effect of lowering the Campus Center fee for students by $8 while raising the Student Activities Tax $10.

The bill the Committee was studying is under the sponsorship of Senator Nick Apostola.

The Bill would involve the transfer of salaried positions of the Student Activities staff to the SGA budget. The amount the bill is concerned with is $167,000.

The intent of the transfer is to have student programming services funded by the Student Activities Tax Fund and to aid the SGA in expanding its working area to include the Student Activities staff as resource and research personnel such as secretaries and programmers.

Apostola feels that with the present system, which has the Student Activities staff under the budget of the Campus Center, the staff is not being utilized to it's maximum extent. The transfer of the staff to the SATF accounts, Apostola believes, will make better use of the work potential of the staff.

The Committee in their discussion of the bill was concerned, according to Chairman Mike Gregory, only with the total amount of money involved and the effect of the transfer of on student fees.

Also during the meeting, a Food Service Subcommittee was set up to investigate possibilities of new meal service tickets that would allow the student to decide how to spend his food money for the entire semester including weekends. "The goals," Rick Savini, Chairman of the subcommittee said, "are to maintain at least the present level service, increase service or decrease the money."

Rent's and Fees also established a Housing Subcommittee to strive for better and more efficient use of housing monies.

Swallow Concert Loses $600

By MDC STAFF

The Concert Committee, in an attempt to raise funds for this year's spring concert lost $600 in sponsoring Sunday night's concert that featured Swallow, according to Acting Chairman Mitch Press.

The Student Senate appropriated $10,000 for the May concert, but according to Press, his committee planned a series of minor concerts that would boost the Senate's appropriation.

Press said Sunday's concert was the "first and probably the last." He added that the committee will stage a through evaluation before another project is attempted.

He said that lack of publicity, which was caused by a foul up in not getting an article printed in the Collegian, led to the small crowd that attended the concert.

The rights to the concessions for the free concert, he said, will ultimately be decided by the Student Senate.

Last spring, Students Offering Support (SOS) won the concession rights, and raised approximately $5,000 for the parents of Belchertown State School residents, who filed a suit in U.S. District Court charging that the state was negligent in the care of residents at the school.

Cable TV Meeting

The Amherst Cable Communications Committee will hold a public meeting Tuesday, November 21, at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Room at Town Hall. Local persons and organizations interested in making use of cable TV are invited to participate. Residents of the area who have suggestions or criticisms regarding cable TV are also urged to attend. The Cable Communications Committee has been conferring weekly since September and hopes to present its recommendations to the Board of Selectmen in the near future.

Holiday Food Drive

There are only three days left for the Thanksgiving Food Drive sponsored by the Newman Club.

The food collected will be distributed to the Apostalates at the Springfield and Holyoke, which in turn will be distributed to the poor people in their respective areas.

Collection boxes had been placed in all the dormitories. However, since several of these have already been stolen, students are encouraged to leave their contributions at the Campus Center or the Newman Center.

UMass Official Gets 'Income Supplement'

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - The vice president for administration at the University of Massachusetts, while receiving $588.15 per week for his regular duties, also is getting another $84.61 per week from the university's "03" or consultant subsidiary budget account as a "lecturer."

UMass has fiscal autonomy, and the "03" contract providing Franklyn W. Phillips the income supplement for teaching was not on file at the state comptroller's office.

Payroll records, however, listed both salaries for Phillips, and a UMass spokesman said the lesser sum is paid out of the "03" account.

Phillips, who was in Washington the first part of this week was not available for comment.

A spokesman in UMass President Robert Woods's office, out of which Phillips's operates, said Phillips teaches a course in the Graduate School of Business Administration on the Amherst campus.

The spokesman said she did not know how frequently the class met, but she said Phillips attends one day a week.

University sources said the average annual salary for a UMass vice president is around $30,000. Phillips' base salary, without the teaching supplement, comes to slightly more than that.

Mrs. Barbara Linnard, office manager for Wood, said Phillips teaches the course "in addition to his vice presidential duties." She said he spends additional time on the second job.

Mrs. Linnard also said she was not aware of anyone else in the upper echelon of UMass management who had an arrangement similar to Phillips'.

His primary responsibilities, according to Mrs. Linnard, involve the university's budget.

Phillips, formerly head of the now closed National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) center in Cambridge, currently is embroiled in the controversy with the state over UMass office space at 1 Washington Hall in Boston, where Wood is located.

The five year lease, at $143,000 annually, was not approved by the state, and the matter is scheduled for a hearing in Superior Court Wednesday.

According to spokesmen for both sides, lease arrangements fall under Phillips' responsibilities.

Kissinger, Tho To Hold 21st Meeting

Special envoy Gen. Alexander M. Haig, Jr., boards a helicopter at Andrews Air Force Base near Washington for a flight to President Nixon's retreat at Camp David, Md., to report on his talks with South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu. Haig arrived moments earlier from Southeast Asia. (AP)

(AP) — Le Duc Tho stopped off Tuesday in Peking enroute to Paris where the chief North Vietnamese peace negotiator will again hold secret talks with Henry A. Kissinger.

The date for the secret session remained up in the air because it was not known how long Tho will remain in Peking and he also is expected to stop in Moscow.

At the White House, indications were that the present, tentative timetable calls for an announcement soon that Kissinger would be heading for Paris in a few days for his 21st meeting with Tho.

This would be the first time the White House has announced a Kissinger trip before he actually was in the French capital.

Further indications were that the Kissinger-Tho session is tentatively planned to begin this weekend or early next week.

The Chinese news agency, Hsinhua, said Tho met with Premier Chou En-lai but gave no hint of what they talked about. Tho is a member of North Vietnam's ruling Politburo.

Radio Hanoi, in an English-language broadcast, noted Tho was enroute to Paris and demanded again that the United States sign the draft of a peace accord reached last month.

"If the U.S. side continues to seek ways to prolong the negotiations and delay the signing of the agreement and to carry on the war, the Vietnamese people are determined to persist in and step up the fight till genuine independence, freedom and peace are achieved," the broadcast said.

In Paris, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, head of the Viet Cong peace negotiating team, said she fears the forthcoming new round of secret talks may lead to deadlock because President Nixon "does not really want to end the war."

She told newsmen that the Nixon administration is seeking major changes in the draft peace agreement "so as to leave us at the mercy of our enemies."

She implied that Tho was prepared to discuss minor points in the draft but would reject any American attempt to change the "basic principles" of the agreement.

One of these principles, she said, was the American decision not to challenge the presence of the "liberation forces" at present in South Vietnam.

"Liberation forces" is a Communist expression usually meant to include the 125,000-150,000 North Vietnamese troops in the South. Their presence in South Vietnam is the main reason for South Vietnam's objections to the draft agreement.

Kissinger and Gen. Alexander M. Haig, Jr., his assistant who has just returned from South Vietnam, conferred with Nixon at Camp David Monday.

Both still were in Washington.

While U.S. officials in Saigon said Haig had narrowed differences between the United States and South Vietnam in talks with President Nguyen Van Thieu, Saigon still was voicing demands for changes in the draft of the peace accord.

Ronald L. Ziegler, White House press secretary, said only that the United States has asked North Vietnam for another secret meeting but refused to say whether it had been arranged. Ziegler said the White House is satisfied with the pace of discussions with South Vietnam and with the peace negotiations.

Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam said Saigon would agree to a partial pullout of North Vietnamese troops from South Vietnam with the remainder regrouping in zones under international supervision for gradual withdrawal.

Both Lam and a top presidential aide, Hoang Duc Nha, demanded that a North Vietnamese troop withdrawal provision be written into any final peace agreement.

A draft agreement worked out in Paris last month between Kissinger and Tho contains no such provision, although it calls for a withdrawal of all United States and other allied forces from Vietnam within 60 days of signing.

Lam's statement on the North Vietnamese appeared to be a compromise on Saigon's part on the mechanics of the pullout. Saigon earlier had been demanding an immediate withdrawal.

Lam talked to newsmen after an appearance before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Exiled Argentine President To Return On Peace Mission

ROME (AP)-Juan D. Peron arrived in Rome Tuesday and said he was returning home after 17 years in exile "to see if I can bring some peace to the Argentines." He called his people "traditionally rebellious."

In an interview with Italian television, the former dictator said: "I think this mission of pacification can be successful...I don't know what I'll do, but I'll do everything I can to quiet down the people, mainly those who are in line with my inclinations, the Peronists."

Peron said Argentina was going through "a difficult moment," adding: "There are many dangers. It is hard to find an agreement even on the political elections. The political parties and the armed forces have their own internal conflicts."

Shortly after arrival Peron met with Premier Giulio Andreotti.

Peron and about 120 aides and friends are scheduled to leave for Buenos Aires aboard a chartered airliner Thursday night.

Peron now 77, and his attractive third wife, Isabel Martinez, checked into a deluxe new hotel near the Roman Forum.

In discussing his planned return to Argentina, Peron said recently in Madrid that he was making the trip "for peace and understanding."

Peron, who ruled Argentia for nine years before being ousted by the military in 1955, arrived aboard a chartered executive jet. Top aides accompanied him.

Looking robust and healthy, the former president stepped off the jet smiling broadly. He was greeted by a handful of supporters and Giancarlo Valori, his close friend and head of the Italian radio and television system's public relations office.

The Argentine Embassy in Rome asked the Italian Foreign Ministry to investigate how the state-owned television system became involved in Peron's Rome stopover.

Peron met with Andreotti in the premier's private office and is reported to be seeking a meeting with President Giovanni Leone and an audience with Pope Paul VI.

After his ouster, Peron lived in exile in Paraguay, Panama and Venezuela, settling in Madrid in 1960. His previous effort to return home was stopped by Brazilian authorities while his plane made a stopover in Rio de Janeiro in 1964.

News Analysis

Thieu Need Not Fear Comm. Forces

SAIGON (AP) - The United States is trying to break a stalemate on the Indochina peace agreement by convincing President Nguyen Van Thieu that he has nothing to fear from Communist forces in South Vietnam after a ceasefire.

It was on the strength of this belief, informed political sources here say, that U.S. negotiators conceded to Hanoi the point that its troops could be withdrawn under a private, unwritten understanding.

But Thieu is balking at any arrangement that would leave the status of North Vietnamese forces in the South unclear. He demands that a provision for a total enemy troop pullout be written into any final accord.

From conversations with Western and South Vietnamese senior officials and political informants, plus other indicators, it is evident that this is the central issue facing the U.S. and North Vietnamese negotiators when they return to Paris for another round of private talks.

If the question of withdrawal can be resolved, some of these sources say, no other obstacle of equal importance stands in the way of a peace agreement.

The issue's significance for Saigon is underscored by recent official attacks on President Nixon and his chief negotiator, Henry A. Kissinger, for going over Saigon's head to forge a deal with Hanoi that includes no written provision for a Communist pullout.

Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam made it apparent in talking with newsman Tuesday that the narrowing of differences achieved in the most recent meetings here with Kissinger's deputy, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., concerned a clearer U.S. understanding of Saigon's objections rather than an agreement between the allies on withdrawal itself.

Lam said that while the Americans argue that North Vietnamese troops remaining in the South after a cease-fire would pose no security threat, Saigon believes they would. The South Vietnamese feel particularly that their presence would prohibit the organizing of the elections called for in the peace plan.

Pvt. Smith Innocent In 'Fragging' Case

FT. ORD, Calif. (AP) - A military jury Tuesday found Pvt. Billy Dean Smith, the first soldier brought to trial in the United States in a "fragging" incident, innocent of charges he killed two officers with a grenade in Vietnam.

Smith, a 24-year-old black from Los Angeles' Watts section, was acquitted of six counts of murder, attempted murder and assault but was found guilty of assaulting a military policeman who arrested him soon after the fragmentation grenade exploded.

The jury, all career officers, reduced Smith's enlisted man's rank from E2 to E1 and ordered that he receive a bad conduct discharge on the assault charge.

The panel deliberated the assault sentence after announcing its verdict on the charges. The conviction carried a maximum penalty of one year at hard labor, dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of all charges and reduction to lowest enlisted rank.

Smith, who has been in custody for 20 months, now will get a 30-day leave and be placed in the custody of his family, information officer J. D. Coleman said.

After Smith's acquittal on the murder charges, his mother, Hazel Smith, exclaimed, "I'm so happy God answered my prayers. My son is free."

Smith had pleaded innocent to all charges. If convicted of the murder charges, he faced a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment.

Smith showed no emotion when the verdict was read. He stood and saluted the president of the court, then embraced members of his family and his attorney, Luke McKissack.

The jury's decision automatically will be reviewed by Maj. Gen. Harold G. Moore, commanding general of Ft. Ord, and can be appealed to the U.S. Court of Military Appeals.

The private had been accused of detonating a grenade that killed Lts. Thomas A. Dellwo of Choteau, Mont., and Richard Harlan of Dallas, Tex., on March 16, 1971, at Bien Hoa air base near Saigon.

He also was accused of attempted murder of his commanding officer, Capt. Randall Rigby of Ft. Sill, Okla., and a sergeant, Billie E. Willis of Big Stony Gap, Va., who the prosecution contended were Smith's intended victims.

The jury began deliberations Monday. It returned its verdict after hearing again parts of the testimony given by W. O. Otis Hensley, an Army crime lab technician. Hensley had linked a grenade pin found on Smith with a grenade lever found near the scene of the explosion.

Hensley's opinion was disputed by three defense witnesses who testified that they made their comparisons by other means and that they had doubts whether the pin and lever matched.

The explosion in the officers' quarters also wounded Lt. Peter B. Higgins of Harrison, N.J., for which Smith was charged with assault.

He was found guilty of assaulting one of two MPs who took him into custody but was acquitted of assaulting the other.

McG Tells Dems To Bide Time

CHARLOTTE AMALIE, Virginia Islands (AP) - George McGovern counsels against hasty action to remove the Democratic party chairman.

He said Tuesday the Democratic party is an unnatural, unstable coalition, and the country would benefit if his defeat for the presidency leads to broad party realignment.

Indirectly, he seemed to be inviting at least some of the Democrats who supported President Nixon to shift to the Republican party.

In a news conference, McGovern advised the Democratic National Committee to go slowly in removing Jean Westwood from the DNC chairmanship in which he placed her after his nomination last summer.

He urged caution also in abolishing any of the party's new procedural reforms, of which he was a leading sponsor.

Meeting in Washington Monday, the Executive Committee of the Democratic Governors Caucus called on Mrs. Westwood to resign to help give the party a new sense of direction after its shattering defeat in the presidential election.

Mrs. Westwood has said she will not resign and will fight any effort to oust her at the DNC meeting in Washington on Dec. 9.

McGovern said any change in DNC leadership should wait until 1973.

He said he envisions the possibility of the reforms which he helped to shape being endangered by new DNC leadership.

"That's why I'd want to move with caution about any change right now," McGovern said.

"There was a certain group that never accepted the reforms-Meany and Barkan...and I suppose Connally would be included in it," McGovern said.

He referred to the AFL—CIO president, George Meany, his chief political lieutenant, Al Barkan, and to John Connally, former Texas governor who headed Democrats for Nixon.

"I don't want to see that element come to the fore in the Democratic party," McGovern said.

Speaking of political alignments, the South Dakota senator said:

"I've thought for a long time there was an unnatural coalition in the Democratic party. It was very difficult...to maintain. If some way can be found to secure a more natural alignment it would be a good thing."

He said he would not artificially promote shifts from Republicans to Democrats and vice versa "but if there is a natural realignment to parties that develops out of what happened this year, it would be good for the country."

McGovern said he is not inviting anyone to leave the Democratic party "but if they feel more at home with the kind of policies the Nixon administration is pursuing that doesn't mean the Democratic party ought to change its soul or philosophy to recapture them."

McGovern said he doubts that any Democrat could have won the presidency this year without the support of Alabama Gov. George Wallace-which the senator sought but failed to get-or without the support of Alabama Gov. George Wallace-which the senator sought but failed to get-or without Wallace being an independent candidate.

Eagleton Disaster Was Unnecessary

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. George McGovern's top aides learned that Thomas F. Eagleton had been hospitalized for exhaustion even before the Missouri senator was selected as the vice presidential nominee, interviews with The Associated Press disclosed Tuesday.

Within hours after Eagleton's nomination, two top McGovern aides, Gordon Weil and Frank Mankiewicz, received confirmation from Douglas Bennett, Eagleton's administrative assistant, but failed to pass the word to McGovern until a few hours later.

At that point, "it wasn't a serious problem," Mankiewicz said.

Mankiewicz and Bennett agree that Eagleton never mentioned that he had undergone electric shock treatments until nearly a week later, after an anonymous tipster gave that information to a Knight Newspapers executive and to two McGovern aides.

Bennett said, however, "there was never any effort to conceal the shock treatments." Eagleton, however, omitted mention of them on July 25 when he detailed his medical history for reporters, though subsequent questioning brought it out.

The interviews, conducted in the wake of McGovern's smashing election defeat, confirmed for the first time the extent to which the McGovern camp knew of Eagleton's medical history, both before and immediately after he was nominated as the No. 2 man on the Democratic ticket.

Those involved put blame for the incident, from which McGovern says his campaign never recovered, on Eagleton's eagerness for the nomination, the haste with which he was picked and the initial feeling, in both McGovern and Eagleton camps, that his medical history did not present a serious problem.

As early as the Wednesday night of the convention, before McGovern himself was even nominated, Mankiewicz and Kirby Jones, the senator's deputy press secretary, received word in the candidates' trailer of a report circulating on the convention floor that Eagleton had been in the hospital with a mental problem.

David Scheuhmacher, a television correspondent now with ABC, said the McGovern aides dismissed it as "one more of the nutty things you hear around the convention," but that Mankiewicz said it had better be checked.

Jones said he circulated around the hall and in the press galleries but never heard any more.

The next day, at McGovern's direction, some two dozen aides met to sift vice presidential names after Sen. Edward M. Kennedy had rejected the nomination. They narrowed the list to six - Eagleton, Wisconsin Gov. Patrick Lucey, Boston Mayor Kevin White, Democratic National Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien, labor leader Leonard Woodcock and Sargent Shriver, the latter eventually to be named after Eagleton was dropped.

Weil, who was unavailable for questioning this week, was detailed to check reports that Eagleton had a drinking problem, and according to Mankiewicz and legislative assistant John L. Helun reported back that the Missouri an had been hospitalized for exhaustion, not drinking.

"It was an answer to the alcoholism charge. That's what we were looking for," Holun recalled. "No one really thought of it on its own."

Castro Jails 3 Am. Hijackers

WASHINGTON (AP) - Cuba's Premier Fidel Castro reportedly has jailed the three Americans who hijacked a Southern Airways jet to Havana over the weekend.

The Federal Aviation Administration said Tuesday it had been informed that Castro told the pilot of the hijacked plane, after the hijackers had been taken into custody, that the men were desperadoes and would be confined.

Castro, who was at Havana airport for the DC9's second landing, was said also to have complimented the pilot for bringing the crippled plane down safely, an FAA spokesman reported.

The FAA obtained its information secondhand at the FBI's debriefing with the crew members at Miami, and has not yet confirmed the reports directly, he added.

"Even with a Cuban decision to jail the hijackers, we still want to get them back to prosecute them ourselves," he said.

He added that a published report that FAA Administrator John H. Shaffer had been told by Castro that the hijackers would be placed in a four-by-four-foot cell was false.

Shaffer did not talk to Castro nor did he attend the Miami debriefing, the spokesman said.

Shaffer did relate to Sen. Charles H. Percy, R—Ill., some of the information brought out at the Miami meeting, he said.

Apparently Percy misunderstood some of the remarks and received the erroneous impression that the FAA had obtained its information by monitoring a Cuban radio broadcast, he said.

The FAA has been referring to the airline all queries as to the nature of the pilot's chat with Castro.

Southern Airways officials at Birmingham and at the airline's headquarters in Atlanta have had nothing to say as to how the hijackers evaded passenger screening at Birmingham Friday, or as to the pilot's conversation with Castro.

N. Viets Continue War Despite Peace Hopes

SAIGON (AP)-Despite heightened hopes of peace, North Vietnam still is pushing fresh war material into the South and the U.S. Command announced Tuesday that American planes kept up a heavy pounding of the enemy's main supply routes.

"There is no sign that the Communists are withdrawing troops from South Vietnam prior to any possible peace agreement," said a Saigon command spokesman.

"On the contrary, they are sending in fresh supplies which have enabled them to step up artillery attacks against our troops."

Monday, for the second day since Oct. 22, when bombing was restricted to below the 20th Parallel because of peace talks, U.S. warplanes mounted more than 220 tactical strikes against targets in North Vietnam, the U.S. Command said. The parallel is 75 miles south of Hanoi and about 240 miles north of the demilitarized zone separating the Vietnams.

The strikes are designed to blunt the enemy buildup.

Another 171 missions were flown by Air Force, Navy and Marine fighter-bombers Monday just south of the demilitarized zone in Quang Tri Province.

Targets reported destroyed or damaged north and south of the DMZ included trucks, warehouses, river boats, railroad cars, a locomotive and rail and road bridges.

B52 Stratofortresses bombed enemy supply caches and troop concentrations in all four countries of Indochina. The bombers struck deeper into North Vietnam than at any time since last April, attacking stockpiles 58 miles below the 20th parallel.

The U.S. Command announced about 30 B52s hammered the southern and central regions of North Vietnam, dropping up to 1,000 tons of bombs on routes leading from the ports of Thanh Hoa, Vinh and Dong Hoi. There were similar B52 strikes in the same region Sunday.

In a protest against what it called "savage U.S. air attacks," Hanoi's Vietnam news agency claimed a number of civilians were killed and wounded and close to 100 homes destroyed as a result of "carpet bombing."

The U.S. 7th Fleet reported an A7 Corsair jet went down in the Gulf of Tonkin as a result of a hydraulic failure during a mission over North Vietnam on Saturday.

Young Ecologist-Trash Collector Saves For College

DOWNEY, Calif. (AP) - When Carl Zelambo Jr. started collecting trash two years ago, at the age of 10, ecology was his main concern.

But now, according to his father, Carl has made $8,000 with other people's discards. He's doing so well, he plans on putting himself through college - and taking his family to Italy.

Carl works an average three hours a day following a regular trash route that leads from neighbors' homes to downtown bars.

"All the people in the neighborhood know I want their bottles and cans, and they save them for me," said the blond, freckled sixth-grader.

He sells the trash to glass and can manufacturers, and he says he can make as much as 10 cents a bottle.

He says he gets 10 cents per pound for aluminum cans and 36 cents a case for beer bottles. He also collects newspapers and turns them over free to his church.

Carl said he doesn't think of himself as a laborer, but as an "independent businessman."

"I'm saving the money for college," he said. He's an accordionist and he plans to study music.

"But really I'm more interested in keeping the neighborhood clean," he added.

Carl plans to use some of the money this summer to take his mother and father, a foreman in a machinery plant, to visit his paternal grandparents in Rome.

For others who would like to take up trash as a business, the youth had some advice: "Start with a pair of gloves, because you get cut pretty easy."

Scientist Warns Against Do-It-Yourself Atom Bombs

WASHINGTON (AP)-A scientist warned Tuesday that nuclear power materials could be stolen and fashioned into do-it-yourself atomic bombs, threatening the social order.

The warning was issued by Mason Willrich, director of the Center for the Study of Science, Technology and Public Policy, of the University of Virginia, at a joint conference on atomic energy.

Willrich said most of the atomic nations show "a widespread lack of political commitment" to achieving safeguard systems against such misuse of atomic materials.

He urged that they give high priority to the development of safeguard technology.

Present nuclear power plants use the heavy, radioactive metals uranium and plutonium-the same materials used for the explosive core of an atomic bomb.

The planned development of "breeder reactors," coupled with the general growth of atomic power, would create large stockpiles of atomic fuel and spent fuel elements.

Willrich said very large amounts of these materials will be dispersed in many nations throughout the world.

"A very small amount of such material-for example, a few kilograms several pounds of plutonium-is enough for a nuclear explosive capsule of mass destruction, and the manufacture of such an explosive is within the capability of many groups," he said.

Another speaker, Delmar L. Crowson of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, said a protection system must be able to detect any "diversion" that may occur, and must include effective means for getting back the atomic materials and punishing the offenders.

Willrich and Crowson presented their views to a dual conference of the American Nuclear Society and the Atomic Industrial Forum.

Termpaper Firms Win Round; But Future Looks Dismal

BOSTON (AP)-The government has failed in one attempt to put four Boston area term paper companies out of business, but the future for the firms still does not look bright.

Judge Frank J. Murray denied a motion in U.S. District Court on Monday in which the government, representing the Postal Service, had requested a court order halting delivery of the firms' mail.

Murray said sale of term papers to college students "is indeed a shabby business," but he said a civil suit was the wrong way to stop it. Had the government attempted to take criminal action by charging the companies with devising schemes "to defraud," Murray said the case might have ended differently.

Frederic Kellogg, an assistant U.S. attorney, said Tuesday he planned to appeal Murray's ruling which denied his motion, and he said U.S. Attorney James N. Gabriel was considering filing a criminal complaint in the same case.

Of the case itself, Judge Murray said in his ruling:

"Student cheating and plagiarizing is nothing new, and perhaps it is simply a sign of the times that these once more or less clandestine activities are now being aided and abetted by competitive commercial enterprises openly operating in the marketplace.

"These are deplorable developments. Their eroding effect on our educational system is a matter of grave concern and should not be tolerated."

Defendants in the suit were Champion Term Papers, Term Papers Unlimited and Academic Research Group, all of Boston, and International Term Papers, Inc., of Waltham.

In a separate case, Judge Harry Kalus issued an injunction on Oct. 26 in Suffolk Superior Court enjoining nine Boston-area term paper companies from selling their products to students.

Kalus said the companies' business is "tantamount to aiding and abetting in the utterings of forged documents."

Psycho-Somatic Illness

By DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

During the last few weeks we have had several inquiries about psycho-somatic complaints. A student goes to the Health Services with headaches for which no organic cause was apparent. Another student, with recurring stomach trouble is surprised when his physician suggests he see someone at the Mental Health Service. Psychosomatic illness is not imagined illness. The term somatic implies an organic condition, although the "psycho" suggests psychological causality or at least interrelationship. The relationship can be direct and/or symbolic. The most direct factor in somatic symptoms is anxiety where physiological concomitants can affect both the nervous and glandular systems. Migraine headaches and ulcers represent a direct form of expressing anxiety.

The theory of psycho-somatic illness is also highly dependent on the concept of repression, i.e. that certain feelings, conflicts, thoughts and etc. are denied conscious expression and therefore express themselves in the more acceptable form of physical illness. It has even been suggested that virtually all physical illness is psychosomatic, namely that psychological states effect resistance to disease. It has been observed that individuals undergoing considerable stress often have more physical illness. Other research has demonstrated the extent to which certain personality dimensions and feeling states can correlate with psychosomatic symptoms. Certain consciously held attitudes have been shown to have causal influence in particular disorders. The following list illustrates this. Eczema (skin condition) sufferers see themselves as being interfered with and frustrated in their attempts to reach a goal. They are more preoccupied with obstacles rather than what they want to achieve. They might say "I want to make my mother understand but I can't." Persons with Raynaud's disease (cold, moist, hands) feel the need to undertake some activity but may not know what to do, i.e. "something has to be done about my life!"

Grimly determined individuals who carry on with a situation with no expectation of improvement get constipated, i.e. "It's a lousy job but its the best I can do."

Ulcer patients are preoccupied with taking revenge wishing to injure someone who they feel have wronged them

Nausea and vomitting are associated with worry about a past mistake or misdeed.

Feeling the need to be constantly prepared for threat and personal attack is expressed in hypertension.

Low back and other pains relate to a wish to walk or run away from some felt obligation.

Headaches seem to occur when an individual is making an intense effort to carry out a planned project and is trying to relax afterwards.

Symtomatic relief through medical treatment is usually temporary because psychosomatic sufferers need to shift and re-order the basic attitudes and assumptions they make about their lives.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will answer your questions or discuss any issue on your mind. Send or bring your questions to Mental Health, 303 Machmer Hall.

Zinn Returns From N. Viet

BOSTON (AP) - Boston University Prof. Howard Zinn returned from North Vietnam Monday night and said he had messages for the families of 11 American prisoners of war.

"I never expected them to be so friendly," Zinn said. "They're supposed to be highly trained Air Force boys. Even if Hanoi had exposed us to the most dovish prisoners they have, I'm astounded by the extent of their antiwar sentiment."

Zinn and six other Americans left for Hanoi on the first of the month at the invitation of the Committee for Solidarity in North Vietnam.

He said, "One of the pilots said the American people are 'making too much of us,' and that they should concentrate their concern and energy on ending the war."

No Suspects In Coed Slaying

BOSTON (AP) — Boston police continued the hunt Tuesday for clues to the slaying of an Emerson College coed whose body was found in an abandoned house.

"We have no suspects, no prime suspects," Det. Lt. Edward Sherry said.

The body of Ellen Ann Reich, 19, daughter of druggist from River Edge, N.J., was discovered Monday by two men searching through the house in the Roxbury section of the city for scrap. The fully-clothed body was in a closet that was nailed shut.

Lt. Sherry said the college sophomore had been strangled and stabbed several times. He said it was not known whether the girl had been sexually assaulted.

Miss Reich, who lived off campus in the Back Bay section of the city, was reported missing Sunday by her brother, Dr. Paul Reich of Wellesley, a physician on the staff of Beth Israel Hospital in Boston. She was last reported seen Thursday hitchhiking to class.

Miss Reich was the third Boston college coed slain in the past two months. Lt. Sherry said it was not known whether the killings were related.

"I can't say that there is a connection," the detective said, "but by the same point I can't eliminate the possibility that there is a connection. There are some similarities in these killings."

The body of Kathleen Ann Randall, 18, a student at Boston University, was found over the Massachusetts line in New Hampshire on Oct. 5. Two days later, the body of Debra Rae Stevens, 19, was found near her home in Lynn. The two cases are unsolved.

Lt. Sherry said he believed Miss Reich was killed by someone who picked her up as she hitched a ride to school.

"There are some similarities in these killings," he said. "They were all in the habit of hitchhiking."

The detective said the body of Miss Reich bore no bruises and there was no evidence of a struggle. He said the two men who found the body were not considered suspects.

Miss Reich shared an apartment with Miss Eileen Wacks, an Emerson student from Staten Island, N.Y.

Miss Wacks said she and her roommate had previously hitchhiked to classes at Emerson, about 10 blocks away. She said she last saw Miss Reich about 11 a.m. Thursday.

"I know I'll never hitch a ride again after what happened to Ellen," she said. "I feel so strongly about hitchhiking now that I'll even stop girls on the street and tell them not to hitch a ride."

Miss Wacks called police Sunday and was told that a relative had to file a missing persons report. She then contacted Dr. Reich in Wellesley.

The funeral for the dead girl will be Wednesday in Hackensack, N.J.

Miss Reich is survived by her parents and one other brother.

Blue Cross and M.C.C. To Appeal Court Decision

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts Blue Cross and the Massachusetts Consumers' Council said Tuesday they plan to appeal a state Supreme Court judge's decision allowing 11 Western Massachusetts hospitals to bill patients directly.

Justice Robert Braucher Monday upheld the hospitals' contention that since the Blue Cross-hospital contract expired Sept. 30, they are not required to accept directions from patients that bills be sent to Blue Cross.

And he said the state law in question in the controversy does not forbid payments by patients in excess of the rates in the expired Blue Cross contract.

Jon Klarfeld, Blue Cross public information officer, said Tuesday Braucher's decision "deprives Blue Cross members of the full range of protection they are entitled to."

And Paul Gitlin, Consumers' Council executive secretary, said the council "doesn't want to seek Blue Cross subscribers get stuck with hospital bills."

Fred Chapman, Blue Cross vice president for communications, said the judge's decision, which will be appealed to the full seven-member branch, "presents a number of problems."

He said it is possible that subscribers with full coverage could receive less than that and that "it is possible we may just have to raise our payments despite the fact that legally we are locked into the rates as of Sept. 30."

Hospitals involved in the dispute are Wesson Memorial, Mercy, and Springfield Hospital Medical Center in Springfield; Holyoke and Providence Hospitals in Holyoke; Cooley Dickinson in Northampton; Mary Lane in Ware; Franklin County in Greenfield; Ludlow Hospital; Wing Memorial in Palmer; and Farren Memorial in Turners Falls.

Quabbin Improvement

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) - Water quality in the Quabbin Reservoir, a major supplier of Boston's needs, could be kept at a high level if parts of rivers are diverted, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers said Tuesday.

In a 158-page statement, the Engineers said diverting water from either the Connecticut River or from the Millers River basin would "assure availability of projected water requirements for eastern Massachusetts."

Water quality in the reservoir would be kept high because the depletion rate would be slowed down, the report said.

The Connecticut River project calls for piping water from the new Northfield Mountain power facility into the reservoir.

"No adverse effects are predicted for the mainstream of the Connecticut River of its estuary," the report said, and "no significant changes are predicted for the Quabbin Reservoir."

Two of the three plans involving Millers River would improve reservoir water, the report said, but the Millers project could have "adverse environmental impacts."

The negative effects could be a possible temperature rise below the diversion point on Millers River as well as a "probable lessening of the sediment load and a partial loss of flushing action in the stream," the corps said.

Copies of the draft report are being sent to governmental and private agencies, the corps said. Responses received before Dec. 26 will be attached to the final report, it said.

Sit-In Ended At Indian Bureau

WASHINGTON (LNS) - Six days after they had begun to occupy the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington D.C., some 400 Native Americans, left the building Wednesday evening, November 8, taking with them many boxes full of what they called incriminating evidence. The government had promised to extended negotiations over a period of 6 to 7 months to deal with the grievances.

"We expect the worst and hope for the best," said George Mitchell a Chippewa from Minnesota, describing his feelings about the prospects of the government seriously dealing with their demands.

The basis for negotiations between the Indians and the government over the next few months will be the nine demands that the Indians presented once they had arrived in Washington on November 2. They include:

1. Executive and legislative action on a series of 20 proposals drawn up by the Native Americans at a workshop in St. Paul along the caravan's route.
2. John Crow, Deputy Commissioner of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and Harrison Loesch, assistant Secretary of the Interior, be relieved of duty.
3. Lewis Bruce be given back his authority as commissioner until action is taken on the 20 proposals.
4. Bob Robertson be relieved of his duties as director of the National Council of Indian Opportunity, and an Indian be appointed in his place.
5. All bones and artifacts of Indian ancestors be restored to the people for burial.
6. Urban and landless Indians be given the same services as treaty Indians.
7. Money appropriated for the education of Indian children by the Johnson O'Malley act be put directly in the hands of Indians and not channeled through state and local boards of education.

The American Indian Movement along with 40 or 50 other Indian organizations throughout the United States and Canada organized the week-long protest called the Trial of Broken Treaties, against the government's mistreatment of Native Americans. Over 1000 Native Americans from 250 of the nation's 300 tribes formed a caravan of buses, station wagons, and cars which started on the west coast and headed for the capital.

But when the Indians arrived they found that the Bureau of Indian Affairs which had previously offered assistance to them while they were in Washington, now refused to do so. The Army then denied them permission to hold religious ceremonies for Indians dead at Arlington National Cemetery because the ceremonies were "political" not religious.

After a day of fierce discussion with the government the Indians decided to occupy the building in order to force the government into serious negotiations.

Once news of the occupation had swept the nation, area offices of the Bureau of Indian Affairs - - some 21 of them -- were occupied in support of the action in Washington.

Viet 'Bloodbath' Myth Repudiated

BERKELEY (LNS) - For four years, Nixon has used the spectre of a "communist bloodbath" to justify prolonging the war in Vietnam. On October 26, presidential adviser Henry Kissinger once again alluded to "possible massacres" after a cease-fire as one of the reasons why the U.S. would not sign the peace agreement negotiated with North Vietnam.

The massacre predictions are almost always based on the bloodbath that allegedly took place in the No

The massacre predictions are almost always based on the bloodbath that allegedly took place in North Vietnam after the Viet Minh (Vietnam Independence League) came to power in 1954. Nixon has claimed, for example, that according to the Catholic Bishop of Danang, "half a million people died in slave labor camps in North Vietnam" between 1954 and 1956.

But recent evidence reveals that not only is the charge of a communist bloodbath untrue, but that the entire myth was invented by the CIA and other U.S. government agencies with the help of British Intelligence.

In October, Col. Nguyen Van Chau, a former high official of the Saigon government, told a reporter from Dispatch News Service International that the alleged communist bloodbath was "one-hundred percent fabricated" by intelligence services financed by the U.S. government.

Col. Chau was in a position to know. From 1954 to 1962 he was head of the Psychological Warfare Section of the Saigon Army, an agency that played an active role in spreading the bloodbath myth.

Chau stated that the Saigon government waged "total psychological warfare" from 1954 to 1956 in order to persuade Vietnamese and world opinion that there was a terrorist bloodbath going on in North Vietnam. The campaign included the distribution of fake leaflets (purporting to be the work of the communists) which threatened reprisals against Catholics, and the operation of a fake liberation radio whose broadcasts sought to give the impression that the Viet Minh were carrying out revenge killings.

Reaching Out

Outreach and the School of Business Administration's accounting department have put together a program for next semester which exemplifies what the University can do to get into the communities with a helping hand.

The Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program (VITA) has something good for both students and people from low income families. Students will learn how to fill out state and federal income tax forms, help members from low income families to fill them out, and will be able to pick up from one to three credits for their effort.

The Internal Revenue Service is supplying the training and supply manuals for the project, which is also being coordinated with American International College, Western New England College and Springfield Technical Community College.

Those who want to take part in such an effort, which carries rewards beyond academic credit, may go tonight to the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union at 8 P.M. Students can join the program at that time.

In the words of Bill Burke, one of the Outreach Coordinators, VITA is a "way for students to help people, learn something they can use for the rest of their lives, and pick up some credit."

Programs such as VITA also show how the University can get involved with the surrounding communities with specific, helpful projects.

Balancing The Campus Center

Student Trustee Larry Ladd and Governor Francis Sargent have arrived at an impasse of the current education budget and education reform. While Ladd feels that educational reform and budget cutting are good, he also fears the centralization of power which Sargent's reform plans entail. Sargent sees no way out, for he must balance the budget and centralization would cut much of the cost of the current bureaucracy.

What we suggest to Larry Ladd and Gov. Sargent is that the impass is due to the location of power in the current system. What we suggest is that Secretary of Educational Affairs Joseph Cronin and his entire staff move out of Boston and set up their offices at the Campus Center in Amherst.

Gov. Sargent in point 4 of his, "A Great and Thorough Change" speech, advocates a life-long educational process. Thus Secretary Cronin and his staff could set the example for this reform by enrolling as students at the University. Not only would they be leaders in reform, but they would save thousands of dollars.

The Campus Center is currently offering a room to students at $9.75 per night. This includes maid service and a color T.V., and is a 30% discount off of the usual $13.93 per night rate. Secretary Cronin and his staff are now located in Boston and are paying far more than $9.75 per night. The cost of janitorial service alone in Boston costs more than this, and at the Campus Center it is free.

There are also other savings which are not so apparent at first. There are many state funded organizations which hold conferences at the University. Room and travel and eating expenses all have to be borne by the state and the taxpayers. Consider what savings would be had if these groups held their meetings in Boston.

First off gas fare would be negligible as most of the people would come from the Boston area. Also most of the people would probably take the M.B.T.A. to town. And, of course, there would be no rooms or evening meal fees as their homes would be close enough for them to get home within one hour.

As for the $1.50 M.B.T.A. fare, this would be a boon and not a loss. The M.B.T.A. is always requesting more funds. This added bit of income would add to their coffers and reduce the amount the state has to pay them at the end of the fiscal year to keep them out of the red.

The groups could either meet in the unused portion of the State House vacated by Secretary Cronin, or on weekends they could make use of Gov. Sargent's office. This would work out much the same as at UMass, where groups make use of students rooms over vacations.

Here is a rough estimate of savings by having the groups meet in Boston. (We have, again, conservatively estimated the number of groups to be 20 during the year with each group equalling one hundred people and fifty cars.)

Gas Cost: 50 autos x $4.00/car–$200.00
Room Cost: 100 people x $1393/day–$1393
Food Cost: 100 people x $10/day x 2 days–$2000.00
TOTAL COST: $3,593.00 x 20 groups–$71,860.00
Thus it would be a total savings of $71,860.00

Instead of breaking even as they now do, the Campus Center would be running in the black from all the continuous use it would be getting. They would no longer have to spend money on ads to attract students and faculty to rent a room and, "bring a friend". Thus, with savings money from no advertising and making money on increased use of the facilities we're sure the Campus Center could easily add $750,000 towards the education budget.

With this plan we have already achieved both Larry Ladd's and Gov. Sargent's objectives. We have brought the decision making body closer to the students; we have eliminated a costly and burdensome bureaucracy of red tape and communications between Boston and Amherst; and we have saved money without creating creeping centralism.

We have included here only a few of the savings and benefits, and already they add up to over one million dollars. If you add on the reduced communications cost between Boston and Amherst, and between the students and the government, you could probably save up to two million dollars.

Let's do some rough figuring:
52 weeks x 5 days/week x $9.75–$2535.00/year
52 weeks x 5 days/week x $70.00–$18,200.00/year
$2,535/year x 30 rooms–$76,000.00
$18,200/year x 30 rooms–$546,000.00

A total savings of $546,000.00 minus $76,000.00, or $469,950.00 per year. Add the increased utilities fees and we can round this off to an even $500,000.00 savings per year.

Secretary Cronin and associates would have a lower cost of living in the Amherst area. Food costs at Louis' Market are much lower than in Boston, where the foods must be trucked in. They could also take advantage of Brittany Manor's reduced summer rates, and signing a year's lease would be no loss to them as they would be here year round.

Perhaps, then, Mr. Cronin and his workers could be convinced to take a cut in salary. After all they would still have the same quality to their lives without the gross quantity of city consumerism. And in the interest of educational reform we're sure they'd take a cut in salary. Conservatively, let us estimate this would be another $250,000.00 savings for the Commonwealth.

*There is no reason why other groups which pay the regular $13.95 fee could not use these rooms on the weekends, just as they do with dormitories. Thus we have excluded Saturday and Sunday from our figures.

*When you consider that they get as a student use of of the Campus Card for $1.00 (and 25¢ a beer), and a comprehensive health care plan for $30.00 a year, we believe this estimate to be quite conservative.

We urge all citizens of the Commonwealth to press Gov. Sargent and student Trustee Larry Ladd to accept this proposal. And we urge all students to send Secretary Cronin a letter expressing your willingness and desire to accept him as a member of the student body.

The President's Coattails

WASHINGTON–Everyone is asking why President Nixon, with his tremendous victory, was unable to bring in any of the other Republican candidates on his coattails.

I can now clear up the mystery: The President did not have any coattails for anyone to hitch on to.

What happened was that a few months before the election Pat Nixon decided the President needed a new suit for election night. She called his tailor and made an appointment for the President. The tailor came to the White House and measured Mr. Nixon for his suit.

Two weeks later the tailor came back to give Mr. Nixon his first fitting. The President, aware that candidates all over the country were depending on him, asked the tailor, "What about the coattails?"

"The coattails come last," the tailor replied. "First I have to get the collar and the lapels right."

"Wouldn't a double vent give me a longer coattail for the other candidates to hitch on to?"

"You want a double vent in the jacket," the tailor said, "I'll give you a double vent."

"I guess the politically popular thing would be for me to have a single vent. But sometimes a President must do the unpopular thing even if he loses votes."

"A double vent is just as good as a single vent," the tailor said.

"I have to think not only of my party, but of all America. My choice of a vent should not be decided because of one special interest group or another. It's true some people in this country, honest people with the best of intentions, believe in the single-vent jacket. They have a right to their opinion and I respect them for it, but I hope they also respect my right to have a double vent in my jacket if I believe it's best for the country."

"Will you stop moving your hands, Mr. President, or I'll never get the shoulders straight."

"I believe the great thing about this country is that we can honestly disagree about vents in our jackets and, after Election Day, get behind the President whether he has one or two vents in his suit."

"You make me proud to be an American tailor," the suitmaker said.

The tailor went away and worked on the suit. He tried to get an appointment for another fitting, but every time he got someone on the White House phone they told him the President was too busy to see him. The tailor was desperate and said he had to give the President another fitting as he hadn't measured Mr. Nixon for his coattails.

Apparently the person he talked to didn't realize the significance of the fitting and gave the tailor the brushoff.

On election morning at San Clemente, the President asked where his new suit was. The White House staff panicked and an aide called the tailor in Washington, "Bring the President's suit right away."

"But," protested the tailor, "the coat has no back to it."

"Never mind the back," Bob Haldeman said. better have it at Andrews Air Force Base when we get there."

The tailor met the President's plane with the unfinished suit and it was delivered just before Mr. Nixon was scheduled to vote. He put the suit on and asked his friends, Secret Service men and family, "How do you like it?"

As in the case of the emperor [illegible] had no clothes on, no one dared tell the President his suit had no back.

And that is why every [illegible] candidate who tried to grab the President [illegible] coattails on Election Day found himself with [illegible] muslin instead.

'WHAT RACIAL PROBLEM?'

Letters To The Editor

Rhetoric 'Injustice'?

To The Editor:

It seems that an author of a Letter To The Editor found it necessary to comment upon Letters which were printed in Monday's Collegian.

In what the Collegian titled "Contrast In Letters", Mr. Richard B. Perkins has interpreted what he terms as 'misguided rantings' and 'adolescent yelpings' to satisfy his own disillusioned ego.

If it is true, as you say, Mr. Perkins, that pent-up frustrations, in the form of a letter, burdened you personally, you are not only doing likewise, but passing the buck, as it were, as well.

A suggestion, Mr. Perkins: make an appointment with an optometrist.

Optometrist, because 'misguided', as such, means either that you didn't see the obvious–that it was Morini to whom the letter was directed–or that you personally, oppose the letter.

In the first instance, you are blind; in the latter, a hypocrit.

A hypocrit because you say–and excuse this liberty, if you will, of assuming that you do not find it personally imposing or threatening or unjust to quote you, Mr. Perkins–"I (Richard B. Perkins) have no particular love for Mr. Morini's stand on the issue myself...", which means, if you will permit an interpretation, even if it is considered by yourself to satisfy a disillusioned, personal ego, that you are in opposition to Morini filing legislation to repeal that which graciusly and generously permits students, according to the Democratic Constitution by which U.S. citizens are subjected, to exercise their right, privilege, perogative, and duty to vote in a college town.

You, Mr. Perkins, if you will permit another quote from your letter, believe that, "adolescent yelpings do little more than offer support to those persons who perceive a crying need for more–not less–courses like Rhetoric 101."

This is nebulous, to say the least.

Opposing Morini, and being in favor of courses similar to a rhetoric requirement, is similar to saying that members of Black September commit suicide because, figuratively, you understand, Golda Meir refuses them an invitation to her daughter's wedding, even if they consent to wear skull caps and eye patches.

If you, Mr. Perkins, seek sympathy, or if you cry because you are subjected to a rhetoric requirement, tsk, tsk, tsk.

Try Pampers.

There are injustices at UMass and in this world, for that matter, which are slightly more paramount than a rhetoric requirement.

If by 'adolescent yelpings' you mean that you are opposed to the words 'FUCK YOU', Mr. Perkins, then an Act of Contrition, a Novena, and Penance should be done in your behalf.

Finally, you consider yourself in the 'political middle'.

You are not unlike that vast 'silent majority' who voted for the re-election of the president.

It is ludicrous, despicable, unjust, outrageous, and just plain not nice to be considered in the same, not similar, mind you, political class, Mr. Perkins, as yourself. (Nothing personal or no disrespect intended, you understand.)

Richie Rashed

P.S. It should be made known that in the letter It's A Bitch, there, likewise, was nothing personal nor was there any disrespect intended. Some of my best friends are Italian, and I like Italian food.

Athletic Imbalance

To The Editor:

In Mr. Antosiewicz's article on UMass and the Yankee Conference, I was interested to learn that UMass deserves better than the lowly status of the Yankee Conference due primarily to a good basketball team under Julius Erving and a fine football team so far in '72. In comparing other Yankee Conference teams to UMass, to show the imbalance of it all, he points to Maine and Vermont not beating UMass more than once in ten years. The Yankee Conference is an athletic conference and not a football conference. He fails to mention UNH at all but does concede a good hockey program at Vermont. UMass has not beaten UNH in hockey once in ten years. This year's UMass football team is clearly superior to other conference teams, but Mr. Antosiewicz does not mention that Holy Cross is a new member of the Yankee Conference and we'll see how outclassed Holy Cross is this Saturday. He also eludes to the fact that baseball is another sport where UMass is without peer. I somehow remember UConn beating UMass for a playoff birth last spring and Maine beat UMass twice last year.

CEQ Corrected

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to a letter written by Elaine Massery of Coalition for Environmental Quality on November 10, 1972 in which she stated she wished "to clear up some items which were stated inaccurately" in an article abour recycling which appeared in the Collegian on November 9, 1972.

I wish to do the same.

Elaine stated and I quote, "the bins placed in various locations in the Student Union and the Campus Center are emptied each day by a student."

The two boxes overflowing with papers in the Collegian Office refute that statement. I guess we'll have to throw the papers away. Too bad they can't be recycled.

'Gutter' Rhetoric

To The Editor:

This will be a short note (hopefully sweet to some ears) to express my opinion on Rhetoric.

My case is based on the November 13th issue of your paper. In the lower left hand corner is a letter to the editor entitled, "It's A Bitch" written by one Richie Rashed. On the same page is another letter entitled "What Rhetoric!" by Clark Irwin.

Mr. Irwin quotes Mr. Ellsworth Barnard as saying the average UMass student is "the most literate" he had taught. Question–Is Mr. Rashed one of "The most literate?" I hope not! And, if Mr. Rashed is–then I pray to any and all dieties there are that Mr. Rashed is NOT re-enrolled in UMass until he has learned to express himself as befitting a somewhat intelligent college student. I realize that politics can elevate emotions far above boiling point (I do not intend to become embroiled in a political discussion) so that a safety valve has to blow. However, I feel Mr. Rashed would do better to direct his completely vulgar letter–Not to the students of UMass–but to a more public news source where all the voters will have a chance to read his views (if the letter ever got published).

Be that as it may I hope Mr. Rashed will take a course in Rhetoric so that he can learn to express himself without relying on language that has come from the gutter. I also hope Mr. Rashed takes the course at a private institution so that state taxpayers do not have to "foot the bill" for his endeavors.

I also think the status of UMass would increase if this type of "letter" did Not appear in a semi-public newspaper; albeit "A free and independent press."

My opinions are well established and I do Not intend to argue or reply to any and all letters published subsequently.

Roger Myren

Rhetoric 'Worthwhile'

To The Editor:

Surely the Collegian editorial staff can come up with a better reply to Louis Morini's proposed legislation than that published on Monday.

While I tend to agree with the point of Mr. Rashed's comments, his presentation is offensive to the eyes and ears, and the sensibilities of any student who thinks himself rational and capable of arriving at considered opinions.

It makes me wonder if the abolition of the Rhetoric requirement is, afterall, a worthwhile endeavor.

Thomas D. McDermott

McGovern Elitism

To The Editor:

The elections are over. The capitalists won again. There is a great difference between 1968 and today however, for the independent political movements which were on the streets demanding social change when Nixon's first term began are now weak and disorganized.

McGovern's campaign co-opted those movements. It brought peace activists into the party of Lyndon Johnson and Blacks into George Wallace's party. It brought women, Chicanos, gays and American Indians into the Democratic party which, like the Republican party, has long ignored their demands in order to fulfill the needs of the capitalist system.

McGovern gained the support of peace activists by declaring his long opposition to the war in Vietnam (a position which contradicts his voting record throughout the 60's). Could it be that McGovern's opposition to the war was based not upon the ideal of self-determination for the Vietnamese people, but upon his understanding that the war is causing ruling class repercussions at home as well as the risk of massive social upheaval? Peace activists campaigned for McGovern justified U.S. military support of Israel relying on the same rhetoric that has been used by imperialists throughout the years to explain U.S. military involvement in Southeast Asia, Cuba, Santo Domingo, Korea, Greece, Spain and the rest of the world. Peace activists campaigned for McGovern who proposed a military budget of over fifty billion dollars. Fifty billion dollars that could be used to build schools and hospitals and to clean the environment, that would instead be used to protect the interests of the ruling class.

Women campaigned for McGovern who's program for them consisted basically of a promise to appoint more women to high government offices. Women do deserve more representation in all aspects of society, but to leave it at that is clearly a token jesture aimed at soliciting vote from women without really offering them anything in return. At the beginning of his campaign McGovern led women to believe that he was opposed to anti-abortion laws, but as he neared nomination he decided that as president he would not concern himself with this basic question of a woman's right to control her own body. On June 9, 1972 in the New York Times McGovern said "I'm not going around preaching abortion as a major part of the McGovern campaign because I think it's irrelevant. I mean it's sort of like asking me my theory of the virgin birth of Christ." Meanwhile, thousands of women die each year from quack abortions.

We have seen how McGovern failed to stand by meaningful programs for Blacks, Chicanos, American Indians and other oppressed groups. Let us learn from this campaign that we must never again abandon our independent struggles to support a capitalist politician, for it is the capitalist system which is responsible for inequality and oppression. Let us strive to rebuild powerful, independent political movements. The masses working outside of the ruling class parties is necessarily the force which will re-shape America to fit the needs of all Americans, not just the powerful few.

Stabbings Continue At Walpole State

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) — One inmate was stabbed to death and another wounded superficially Tuesday in a minimum security section of the state prison here.

The stabbings-the 26th and 27th since last January, 11 of them fatal-took place on the first day on the job of new Supt. Raymond E. Perelle.

Perelle identified the dead man as Raymond F. Rich, 46, of Somerville, who was serving 15-20 years for manslaughter, robbery and breaking and entering in the nighttime with intent to commit larceny.

Edward J. McCarthy, Jr., 29, of Quincy, was taken to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, where he was listed as being in satisfactory condition. He is serving 12-15 years for armed robbery.

Norfolk County Dist. Atty. George G. Burke said his staff is investigating the incident, but said, "The last time we had a murder down there, the inmates had washed everything clean."

Burke said he sent Correction Commissioner John O. Boone a letter Nov. 2 urging the reopening of the segregation unit at Bridgewater and naming 39 prisoners he thought should be confined there.

"One of the men I named," Burke said, "was the man who was murdered today...I think if this transfer had been put into effect, he would not have been murdered."

Perelle would give no details on the stabbings.

When reporters told him it had been routine to give information on where bodies are found or incidents occur, Perelle said, "That was the problem. It was part of the procedure before. I'm going to change that procedure."

Girl Blacksmith

ORONO, Maine (AP) — If the ring of sledge on anvil in a certain building on the University of Maine campus sends visions of Longfellow's village blacksmith through your head-look again.

Instead of a burly barrel of a man in a thick leather apron, UMO's smith is a girl.

Two girls, as a matter of fact, have graduated from the three-week farrier's course at the university, and a third is enrolled now. Both graduates-from Massachusetts-say they like horses.

Jack Goater, an Extension Service livestock specialist who originated and has taught the course for a number of years, is well pleased with the work the two girls did.

"They did an excellent job," he said. "One was especially good at making shoes. I don't know exactly what it is, but they seem to have a better eye in fashioning shoes than most men."

The horsehoe alumnae are Donna Clark of Natick and Barbara Howard of Framingham.

Indian Protest

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Secretary of the Interior Rogers C.B. Morton was "the principal person responsible for what happened in Washington" during the recent protest there by American Indians, according to Alvin M. Josephy, Jr., publisher of American Heritage magazine and an author on Indian affairs.

Josephy said Monday night that the extensive vandalism committed inside the occupied Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) building stemmed from the refusal of top Department of Interior officials to negotiate with the Indians and from Indian fears that a court order might bring on an attack by law enforcement personnel.

Josephy, a Greenwich resident, spoke at a meeting of the Stamford Greenwich chapter of the American Association of University Women.

Josephy credited Leonard Garment, President Nixon's adviser on minority groups, and White House aide Bradley Patterson with averting "another Attica" by their decision to take over negotiations and forestall the forcible ouster of the Indians.

Josephy said he was in the BIA building when the Indians held two meetings on Nov. 6 and later talked with Department of Interior officials in an attempt to dissuade them from any show of force.

Voice Prints Used In Court

BOSTON (AP) — Voiceprints-spectographic impressions of the recorded voice-will be taken for the first time in a Massachusetts court on Nov. 27.

Judge James C. Roy in Suffolk Superior Court made the ruling on Monday, requiring eight persons on trial on gambling charges to have their voices recorded to be used as voice prints.

The ruling came on a motion by Dist. Atty. Garrett H. Byrne who is seeking to compare the voice prints of the defendants with those of wiretaps made by his detectives.

In making the ruling, Judge Roy ruled against a defense contention that voiceprints are unconstitutional. He said Byrne's office would retain an expert to evaluate the voiceprints.

Hospital to Close

BOSTON (AP) — The gradual shutdown of the Grafton State Hospital for the mentally ill will be completed by December, 1973, Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt said Tuesday.

The phasing out of the deteriorating institution will accelerate next week with the shifting of 17 nursing jobs to the nearby Westboro State Hospital, Dr. Greenblatt told a State House news conference.

The program represents the first time in the 140 year history of Massachusetts' state mental hospitals that a large institution has been shut down, he said.

By the end of next year, he said, all of the hospital's patients will have moved to other institutions, to community-based mental health facilities or to their own homes. A few maintenance and administrative personnel will remain at Grafton until they can move to the Shrewsbury Center for the Retarded, now under construction, he said.

Of the 800 patients at Grafton when Gov. Francis W. Sargent announced the phaseout program in January, 300 have already been transferred, Greenblatt said. Of that group, 200 went to other state hospitals and 100 to their homes or community-based facilities, he said.

The gradual closing of the Grafton Hospital has paralleled by a general depopulation of the state's large mental hospitals, the commissioner said.

The patient population in the facilities, which hit a peak of 23,000 in 1952, had declined to 8,900 by September of this year, he said.

The total in-patient population in the state will be down to 5,000 "in the foreseeable future," Greenblatt said.

Teacher Wins Court Battle

NEW YORK (AP)-It was unconstitutional to fire a schoolteacher for refusing to join her class in the flag salute and pledge of allegiance, a federal appeals court ruled today, holding that the right of free speech also means the right to remain silent.

The three-judge panel reversed District Judge Harold Burke of Rochester and sent back to him the case of Mrs. Susan Russo, 24, a probationary art teacher at the James E. Sperry High School in Henrietta, N.Y.

Mrs. Russo, who was appointed Sept. 1, 1969, and dismissed on June 23, 1970, is seeking reinstatement and back pay.

The unanimous decision, believed to be the first involving a teacher and a salute to the flag, was written by Judge Irving R. Kaufman.

He noted, "it is our conclusion that the right to remain silent in the face of an illegitimate demand for speech is as much a part of the First Amendment protection as the right to speak out in the face of an illegitimate demand for silence."

The court said Mrs. Russo found that the phrase "liberty and justice for all" in the pledge "simply did not reflect the quality of life in America today."

New American Movement On Campus

The New American Movement is a student-oriented socialist organization. It is an organization of student radicals whose primary concern is the beginning of the task of building a mass popular based radical movement in the United States. UMass N.A.M. is one chapter in the 40 across the nation.

N.A.M. chapters are involved in a variety of projects. National anti-war work is primary among these. Several chapters are engaged in waging campaigns against A.T. & T. In Minneapolis the Honeywell Project, a four year old organizing project centered around the Honeywell Corporation, joined N.A.M. and is involved in a number of activities. They organized a Corporate War Crimes Tribunal, put out a plant paper, and are taking the initiative on a People's Referendum on the war and the economy. A N.A.M. spokesman has stated: "We are asking everyone who sees, as we do, the need to turn this country around and build a truly human and just society, to join with us in building the movement.

Today at 8:00 PM 9th Floor Lounge, Campus Center, Mike Lerner (Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Trinity College, one of the Seattle Eight, and an early NAM organizer) will speak on "How to Survive Under Nixon."

November 18-19 (All day Saturday and from 10:00 AM to 3:00 PM Sunday) 163 Complex, Campus Center. A Regional Conference on RADICAL STRATEGY AFTER THE ELECTIONS sponsored by UMass Chapter of the New American Movement.

The purpose of the conference is to bring together members of NAM and other independent organizing projects in the area for a weekend of collective sharing of information, experience, and analysis. There will be workshops and speakers on anti-war, community and women's organizing and panels on The New England Economy, Feminism and Socialism, and The Meaning of Nixon's Victory for Radical Strategy.

A major speaker at the weekend conference will be Harry Boyte, a Movement organizer and activist from Chapel Hill, N.C. He will talk about his organizing work and experience at the Saturday session and present a speech for the Sunday session on "The Nixon Years and the Political Openings on the Left." Harry will be available for interviews in the area.

Workers Lib League Helps Build Hospital

The World Federation of Democratic Youth, representing over 200 million youth around the world, has initiated a campaign for the construction of a modern pediatrics hospital in Hanoi. Worldwide, a goal of $500,000 has been set.

The hospital is named after Nguyen Van Troi, a Vietamese electrical worker, liberation fighter, and martyr who was shot down in the streets of Saigon in 1964.

The Campaign for the Building of the Nguyen Van Troi Children's Hospital in Hanoi is being sponsored initially in the United States by: Medical Committee for Human Rights; National Students Association; Peoples Coalition for Peace and Justice; Puerto Rican Socialist Party; Student Union for Peace and Justice; Vietnam Veterans Against the War; and the Young Workers Liberation League.

As Americans, they feel they "owe the Vietnamese and Indochinese people a great deal in material support for the untold murder and destruction that has been inflicted upon the Vietnamese."

"The fulfillment of such a project will be the result of the work of millions of youth all over the world," states Bob Davidson of the Local YWLL. "In the country and here locally the initiative can be achieved only by the efforts of all forces, of all political, philosophical and religious trends, of all those who want to contribute to peace and justice."

English Course Corrections

Because late changes were made in the spring schedule book after the course description books had gone to press, there are a number of discrepancies between the two books. If you wish to sign up for one of the specific sections of courses listed below, you should sign up for the section numbered one less than the section number in the description book. For example, if you want to enroll in section 3 of English 125, you should sign up for English 125, section 2 (schedule number 194554.) This discrepancy applies only to the following sections of courses: English 125, sections 3, 4, 5, 6; English 126, sections 7, 8, 9, 10; English 141, section 2; English 126, sections 7, 8, 9, 10; English 141, section 2; English 221, section 2; English 222, sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9; English 339, section 3; English 341, sections 6 and 9.

If you wish to sign up for one of the sections in the following list, you should sign up for the section numbered two less than the section number in the course description books; for example, if you want section 4 of English 141, you should sign up for English 141, section 2 (schedule number 195422.) This discrepancy applies only to the following sections of courses: English 141, sections 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9,; English 287, section 3. These discrepancies apply to both the course description books published by the Student Senate and description books published by the English department.

Please also note: English 253, section 3 is listed in the schedule book as meeting MWF 2:30-5:00. This is incorrect; the class will meet Monday evenings, 7:30-10:00, in Bartlett 202.

If you have any questions about registering for English courses, please call the Undergraduate Studies Office at 5-0388 between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. A detailed list of all late changes will also be posted outside Bartlett 252.

French 121 will meet on M, W, F at 1:10 instead of on M, W, F at 1:30. French 144-9 will meet on M, W, F at 8:00 instead of on M, W, F at 9:05.

'Found Space' Performance Of O'Neill

The UMass Theatre will present Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer Prize winning "Long Day's Journey Into Night" on November 17, 18 and 19. The play will be presented in a "found space" - a living room - rather than in a traditional theatre. The Friday and Saturday performances (Nov. 17 and 18) will be held in the Memorial Room of Alumni Hall (opposite Bartlett) at 7:00 P.M. The Sunday performance (Nov. 19) will take place in the Amherst Woman's Club (35 Triangle Street) beginning at 3:00 P.M.

"Long Day's Journey Into Night" was published posthumously and was not produced until 1956. The play explores the relationships within the Tyrone family as the four members confront the problem of Mary Tyrone's return to drug addiction. The Tyrones are O'Neill's own family. With deep pity and heartfelt forgiveness, O'Neill faces his past. "He asks forgiveness for his failure to know his family when the need for understanding was like a cry in the night, and attempts to reassure their ghosts that he knows everything awful they have done and still loves them." (Walter Kerr)

The play is under the direction of Marya Bednerik of the Theatre faculty. Bonnie Bishoff is completing her M.F.A. thesis in acting with her portrayal of Mary Tyrone.

Seating is very limited and the public is urged to arrange for tickets well in advance. All tickets are $2.50 (which includes refreshments) and are available at the Bartlett Auditorium box office (545-2579) or at the door prior to performances. Reservations will be accepted, but must be picked up by 4:00 P.M. on the day before the performance.

It's Curtains For Old Brewery Theater

HELENA, Mont. (AP) - The Old Brewery Theater, cradled in a gulch about as far Off Broadway as you can get, is to be crushed to rubble next month, a victim of urban renewal.

Out here, where culture wears cowboy boots, the small summer theater for 18 seasons offered something akin to Broadway action for both the stage-struck and theater-goers alike.

No Barbara Streisands ever performed in the leaky old seven-story structure with the legend "Capital Brewing and Malting Co." inscribed up the brick and stone walls. But many of the young actors and actresses, members of the Bandit Players and the Rocking Horse Players, went on to television and stage jobs.

Some 750 persons have acted in the theater since its establishment at the old brewery in 1954. The Bandit Players took their name from the area around the theatre - known as Bandits' Alley for the type of characters that descended on the south end of the gold-rich town as its image tarnished.

Me. Governor Unhappy With Paper Company

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis said Tuesday he's unhappy with a compromise that will allow Great Northern Paper Co. to harvest 110,000 cords of wood worth $600,000 in "forever wild" Baxter State Park.

But he said it was the best solution that could be reached.

The compromise will grant Great Northern permission to cut the 110,000 cords in two remote northern townships instead of 160,000 cords in the scenic, heavily used southern townships of the park.

The company's deadline for getting the wood out has been extended until April, 1975. Great Northern's cutting rights to the southern acreage would have lasted until Dec. 1, 1973.

The agreement between the three-member Baxter Park Authority and Great Northern is to be signed Wednesday at a special meeting in Millinocket.

"I asked for several reports from the Baxter Park Authority concerning the cutting at the southern end because that part is used so much," the governor said in an interview.

"I was told Great Northern had a perfect legal right to take the wood. When the late Gov. Percival Baxter bought the land, Great Northern retained the cutting rights, and he did expect it to be cut

"The authority tried to buy the cutting rights but wasn't successful, and the compromise they reached was the best one they could manage," Curtis said.

"It's too bad...I'm not happy at all with the solution," he added.

Gov. Baxter bought 16,000 acres in the southern zone from Great Northern in 1953 and 1962 but had to give up the timber rights in order to get the acreage which extends to the base of Mt. Katahdin.

The authority tried to buy the rights back this year but was unsuccessful. Great Northern also was unwilling to simply give up their plans for cutting because of financial reasons.

State forestry commissioner Austin Wilkins and paper company spokesmen say the agreement is a balance between the two interests.

However former park supervisor Harry Karney has questioned the agreement. He said the so-called compromise is just a move to open to cutting an area previously off-limits.

Kearney said the deal was unnecessary because Great Northern didn't intend to cut its wood anyway. So, he said, the company isn't giving up anything.

'Court Fix' Charge Rebuked

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP)--A woman who testified on Cape Cod last week that a case against her in Norfolk Superior Court was "fixed" has never been a defendant in that court, Norfolk County Dist. Atty. George G. Burke said today.

"We have reviewed all files in the Norfolk Superior Court for the last 50 years," Burke said. "She has never been a defendant in this court.

"I've sent an investigator to Barnstable to inform her that she must be mistaken.

Superior Court Chief Justice Walter J. McLaughlin last Friday ordered an investigation into allegations made by Toni Clements, 21, a witness in the Barnstable Superior Court trial of William "Whitey" Hurst of New York.

Hurst is charged with murder in the death of showgirl Barbara Lee Courtenay.

Mrs. Clements said in testimony that charges against her in the Norfolk court and the Chelsea District Court in 1970 had been fixed.

Counsel for Hurst asked her if she was in Norfolk Superior Court March 18, 1970, charged with stealing money and merchandise, "and you pleaded guilty."

"No, I never pleaded guilty," she said on the witness stand, adding the case had been fixed.

The attorney asked her if she had been in Chelsea District Court March 25, 1970, and pleaded guilty to charges of unlawfully using credit cards to obtain money and merchandise at a department store.

Again she denied she had pleaded guilty. "It was bought," she said.

Later, outside the courtroom, McLaughlin, who is presiding at the trial, said he had already ordered a probe.

"I'm certainly not going to let a bribery charge like that die, especially when it's made in front of me in open court," McLaughlin said.

Burke said he had checked all records dealing with the Norfolk court and had found nothing to link Mrs. Clements with it.

"I've looked at police records, investigation reports...everything. Her name isn't there," Burke said.

He said he had not, however, closed his investigation and was sending a detective to Barnstable to obtain more information.

Track and Field Goes Pro

NEW YORK (AP) - Amateur superstars Jim Ryun, Bob Seagren, Lee Evans and Randy Matsen turned pro Tuesday as the nucleus of a track and field circuit that plans 48 meets next year in the United States and Europe.

Safetyman Richmond Flewers of the New York Giants, a former hurdles star at the University of Tennessee, also signed a contract, it was announced by the new International Track Association.

"We plan 24-30 events in North America," said Michael O'Hara, president of the new International Track Association (ITA), "and about 15 more in Europe."

Ryun called it, "the birth of pro track."

Plans were unveiled at a New York news conference.

The ITA format calls for up to 48 meets with basic purses of $10,800 each. There are to be two meets a week-one apiece on Saturday and Sunday-in cities that are close to one another.

"We will sign five athletes for each of 12 chamionship events," O'Hara said. "At each meet, the winner of an event will receive $500 with $250 for second, $100 for third and $50 for fourth."

Ryan said it had been projected to him that "a good year could be worth $18,000 and up at the beginning. That might not seem huge, but it is when you've been earning zero."

The former Kansas University world record holder in the mile said he forsees, "possible great financial benefits-as long as your name is hot in the news-in such areas as endorsements and commercials."

O'Hara said that Flowers, who makes an estimated $25,000 yearly in the National Football League, "contacted us about running since track was his first sports love."

The ITA president said he was, however, "treading cautiously in talking deals with pro football players. We want to play ball with the clubs and the NFL.

"But, for sure, we are interested in such people as Bob Hayes, Paul Warfield, Mercury Morris, Earl McCullouch and Jimmy Hines, who were track heroes as well as good football players."

O'Hara said the minimum total 1973 purse would be $609,600. He admitted "our pioneer athletes" received extra money and long-term contracts, but said most rewards will come from the events.

Marty Liqueri, the premier distance runner from Villanova who missed his Olympic chance due to an Achilles heel injury, was signed, but as "master of ceremonies" for the ITA meets and not as a performer.

"Personally, I believe my future is in broadcasting rather than track," said Liqueri, now in graduate broadcasting school at the University of Florida. "I will still run as an amateur during the coming indoor season."

O'Hara released a partial schedule which included Albuquerque, N.M., March 23, 1973; Los Angeles, March 24; Fort Worth, Tex., April 6; Oklahoma City, Okla., April 7; Baltimore, April 14; Chicago, May 4; Atlanta, May 5; Philadelphia, May 11; Pittsburgh, May 12; Vancouver, May 18; San Diego, May 19; Louisville, Ky., June 1; Richmond, Va., June 2; Long Island, N.Y., June 9.

Krakau-A Cyclone

Merv Krakau has come a long way ... a lot longer than the 30 or so miles from his home in tiny Guthrie Center, Iowa, to Iowa State University in Ames.

"He played very little as a sophomore," recalls Coach Johnny Majors, "and we debated a long time about redshirting him. But he was 6-foot 3 and 235 pounds and ran a 4.8 40 and we didn't have a lot of people around here like that in those days, so we played him some at midseason. I'm sorry now we didn't redshirt him."

If they had, the Cyclones would have Krakau-it's pronounced Croaker-for another season. And another season might really have been something, if Krakau's performance in Saturday's 23-all standoff against defending national champion Nebraska is any indication.

All Krakau did was make 11 tackles-six of them unassisted-break up three passes, cause two fumbles, recover two others and make five tackles behind the line of scrimmage, including three sacks of Nebraska's quarterback for 25 yards worth of losses.

For that show - "the finest play by a defensive end I have ever seen ... playing or coaching," Majors called it - the Iowa State senior was named National College Lineman of the Week by The Associated Press.

Ham Honored

NEW YORK (AP) - "This was our finest victory," Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll said after his Steelers whipped the Kansas City Chiefs last Sunday. "Our defense, especially, just 'out-physicaled' them at their own game That's why we scored our points at the end."

And the main reason why the Steelers got those points-13 of them in the fourth quarter that produced a key 16-7 victory-was the presence of left linebacker Jack Ham, selected Tuesday as The Associated Press Defensive Player of the Week in the National Football League.

Other nominees included Atlanta tackle Mike Lewis, Minnesota cornerback Bobby Bryant and San Francisco end Tommy Hart.

Ham made seven unassisted tackles-three of them behind the line in one-on-one situations-assisted on three other tackles and had a crucial pass deflection in that decisive fourth quarter. But it was in these final 15 minutes that he came up with the biggest plays of the game, namely a pair of fumble recoveries.

The first one came when Ed Podolak lost the ball. Kansas City tackle Dave Hill appeared to have it but Ham literally stole it. "I didn't think the referee would give it to me....but I wasn't complaining when he made the call," Ham said of the recovery on the Chiefs' 39-yard line. And later he pounced on Jim Otis' fumble on the Kansas City 22.

Both of them led to Pittsburgh points, the first setting up Roy Gerela's third field goal to send the Steelers into a 9-7 lead, the second paving the way to France Harris' game-clinching touchdown.

And he did it all despite working with a sprained ankle. "Sure, the ankle hurt, but I don't want to use that as an excuse," said Ham, who didn't need one. "These are the kind of games you play in, no matter how hurt you are."

Typical of the play by the 6-foot-2, 220-pounder, a second-year pro from Penn State, was not so much those fumble recoveries but a pair of plays in the third quarter, when the Chiefs led 7-3.

With a third-and-10 on their own 20, Len Dawson tried a screen pass to Otis-but Ham flew in and threw Otis for a one-yard less. Said defensive tackle Joe Greene; "they'd completely fooled me but Jack went through a mess of blockers and made the play."

It forced the Chiefs to punt-but they got the ball right back on an interception. Then Dawson tried a swing pass to Podolak. Again Ham blew in, this time dumping the ball-carrier for a two-yard loss.

IT'S ALL OVER--John Mazur, who has been under constant criticism the past few weeks, resigned after his team was humiliated 52-0 by Miami. (AP Wirephoto)

Mazur Says "Pats Divided"

BOSTON (AP) - John Mazur said Tuesday he believed the New England Patriots football team is "divided because of the things that are going on," and said he did not believe the Patriots had given him a fair shake during his tenure as head coach.

Mazur, 42, resigned Monday after two years of directing the National Football League team. He was replaced for the remainder of the season by Phil Bengston, former Green Bay Packers coach.

"The ball club is divided because of the things that are going on," Mazur told Tim Horgan, columnist for the Boston Herald Traveler and Record American. "And I'm primarily interested in the ball club. I felt, well, maybe I'd stir the guys up if I stepped out. Maybe, then they'd win a few."

Mazur declined to say what the things were that had divided the Patriots, saying, "What's the sense. It's over now. I'm gone."

Asked by Horgan if he got a fair shake from the Patriots, Mazur said, "Frankly, no. But the situation was getting no better, and the team looked worse and worse. I just hope things will change now. There are a lot of great football fans in New England. They deserve better than we gave them."

Of his job as Patriots coach, Mazur said, "This was something I'd worked for all my life. To give it up, to turn my back on it...it wasn't easy. It isn't easy to put into words.

"I never quit on anything in my life. I come from a family that lived on relief, $9 a week. I know what hard times are. I know what work is. I know what it means to get kicked around."

Mazur and the Patriots found out what it was to be kicked around this season. They've lost six in a row, and are tied for last place in the NFL's American Conference East with a 2-7 record.

Only a pair of one-point upset victories over Washington and Atlanta have separated the Patriots from non-winning record, and both their defense and offense have encountered increasing problems.

In the past four weeks, the Patriots offense led by sophomore quarterback Jim Plunkett has scored only three touchdowns. And the defense has allowed a league-leading 296 points this season, including 222 in the losing streak.

Yesterday's sports head was former Cincinnati Redleg, Mel Queen.

Holy Cross Bolts YanCon

WORCESTER (AP)-Holy Cross College's one-and-a-half year membership in the Yankee Conference came to an end Tuesday, a victim of coeducation, school officials said.

"When Holy Cross went in the conference, it was looking at its total athletic picture," said Athletic Director Ronald S. Perry.

"Now with a decline in male enrollment-which will be only 1,500 within three years, we had to take another look," Perry said.

The previously all-male college went coeducational this fall, starting its policy of admitting one woman for every two men.

Since the school is not increasing overall enrollment, a spokesman said. any places women take will have to be given up by men.

"The decline in male students here will drastically affect our minor sports program," Perry said.

Perry said the Rev. John E. Brooks, college president, notified conference President Thomas N. Bonner of the University of New Hampshire Monday, then notified the presidents of the seven other conference schools.

With 2,500 students, Holy Cross was the smallest member in the conference.

Other Yankee Conference members are Boston University and the Universities of Maine, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

Holy Cross will honor contracts already signed with conference teams for future games, Perry said.

"In no way are we de-emphasizing our athletic programs," he said. "We are just taking a more realistic approach. We are withdrawing from conference affiliation, but do hope to continue our fine relationships with the conference schools we have always played."

Harriers Qualify For Nationals At IC4A's

By WALT POWERS

The UMass Cross Country team, on the strength of peak season performances from four of their top five runners, started fast, and went to finish tenth in the I.C.4A. championships, Monday afternoon in New York. In their wake, they left, in 18th place, a Northeastern team that had beaten them soundly only a week before.

It was the second best I.C.4.A. showing in the schools history, and assured them of a berth in the N.C.A.A. championships.

Manhattan College was the winner. Running on their home course before a big, enthusiastic crowd, they romped home with three of the top seven places, including first and second. Mike Keogh, the Irish Olympian, broke Art Dulongs course record, set in 1967, by one second, and won the race in a time of 24:03.4. He was followed by another Olympian, teammate Tony Colon, in a time of 24:11.6. John Hartnett, the Irish Olympian from Villanova, took third, ahead of Dennis Fikes and Bob Childs, both of Penn. Ricardo Rojas, of Harvard was the top New England finisher, in sixth place.

Manhattan's victory, its first I.C.4A. title in eighteen years, broke Villanova's six year domination of the event. Villanova was runnerup, with 131 points, only one point ahead of third place finisher Penn State. Navy was fourth.

The UMass harriers broke fast, covering the first mile in 4:35. This enabled them to enter the narrow forest trails in good position. At the mile and a half mark, Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin were running together around fifteenth, but in the next mile, Gillin pulled away. In a battle for twentieth, Gillin was edged out by Tom Gregan of Villanova and Paul Squires of Manhattan. Gillins time was the fastest ever recorded by a UMass runner in the history of the

I.C.4A.'s.

Randy Thomas was next for UMass. He pulled away from Tom Maguire in the last mile and finished 40th in 25:24. It was the second fastest UMass time ever recorded for this event.

Freshman Tom Maguire was spiked in the heel, calf, and knee at the three mile mark (Who said cross-country wasn't a contact sport?), but hung on to finish 67th. He tired near the end, but his time of 24:44 was good enough to make him the fourth fastest runner in UMass I.C.4A. history.

The rest of the team went out hard, but faded toward the end. Chris Chambers finished 84th in 26:01. Pete Crisci finished 88th, and Doug O'Connel finished 110th. Co-Captain Rick Barry ran his fastest race ever on this course, finishing 143rd in 26:24.

Coach O'Brien was pleased with the teams performance. "They went out faster than I expected, but they avoided a lot of physical contact that that way. You have to go out hard if you want to win these meets. You have to enter the woods in good position, because it's narrow, and almost impossible to pass in there. Even though a lot of them faded near the end, they had assured themselves of good position" said O'Brien.

The team as a whole, ran its best race of the year. About the only one who didn't was Randy Thomas. "This wasn't my course" he said. "It's hilly, rocky, and has a lot of sharp curves. I like smooth, flat courses, and I ran a lot worse here than I did in the New Englands." Coach O'Brien concurred "The course never gave Randy a chance to open up a smooth stride. Billy (Gillin) is more of a workhorse-type runner, and he fared a lot better."

The teams improvement over last years I.C.4A. race was remarkable. Last year, Bill Gillin was the top Minuteman finisher, in 86th. This year, five harriers made the top 88. Gillins, '71, time of 27:01 was beaten by the ENTIRE TEAM. The average individual improvement over last years race was 87 seconds. Doug O'Connel improved 106 seconds.

O'Brien was proud of the teams showing. "I think our training finally paid off" he said. They were prepared for this meet, and aggressive from the start. You've got to give them credit. It was by far their best race of the year."

Denver Balks At Olympics

DENVER (AP) - A resolution by the Denver Olympic Organizing Committee withdrawing Denver as a site for the 1976 Winter Olympics has been forwarded to the International Olympic Committee and the United States Olympic Committee, the DOOC said Tuesday.

The DOOC had passed the resolution Nov. 9, two days after Colorado and Denver residents approved ballot proposals prohibiting the state and city from spending any more money on the Olympics.

But a temporary restraining order was obtained by a citizens committee preventing the DOOC from advising the IOC of its decision to withdraw Denver's invitation to host the games.

The restraining order was effective until Monday, and the DOOC resolution was sent Tuesday, accompanied by a letter signed by Carl N. DeTemple, DOOC president and general secretary, explaining the Nov. 7 vote prohibiting further spending, and the reasons for delaying notification of the IOC.

"We do not want to do anything to prejudice the efforts of the citizens committee trying to retain the games," DeTemple said, "However, we also have an obligation to inform the USOC and the IOC of recent developments and the actions we have taken."

The IOC met in Lausanne, Switzerland, Monday and IOC president Lord Killanin, said his organization would not rule out Denver as a site for the 1976 winter games until it receives word from the Denver committee.

Maury Wills To Japan?

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Maury Wills, a baseball free agent after 14 years as a major league shortstop, said Tuesday he is considering an offer to play baseball in Japan next season but would prefer to join a U.S. major league club as a player-coach.

Wills confirmed that he has been in contact with the Nankai Hawks of Japan but denied reports that he had reached any agreement with them.

The 40-year-old athlete, who set a major league record in 1962 by stealing 104 bases, was put on waivers by the Los Angeles Dodgers several weeks ago after spending most of the 1972 season on the bench.

No other team picked him up, presumably because of the requirement that they match 80 per cent of his $100,000 Dodger contract for 1972.

The Ice is Melting

I tip my stocking cap to the people of Springfield in deference to the treatment they are giving the two hockey teams they find their city inflicted with.

Springfield has always been a good hockey city. For years through thick and thin they supported Eddie Shore's Indians and more recently, Jack Kent Cooke's Kings. The bad teams have drawn well, the good teams have sold out.

This year the hockey fans of Springfield find themselves in an entirely new situation. The Kings have moved from the old Coliseum in West Springfield to the new Civic Center downtown. The New Haven Blades of the Eastern League, waiting for a new building in Hartford to open, moved into the Coliseum. You would expect the city of Springfield to go wild with all this hockey.

They haven't.

The Kings, in their new building, are averaging around 3,000, well down from Coliseum figures. The Blades, thanks to an opening night crowd of 4500 are hanging around the 1500 mark.

Neither is a good team, and neither is drawing. The Kings, who have drawn rain or shine, are horrible. They are probably the poorest excuse for an AHL team Springfield has ever seen. The advent of the WHA, the expansion of the NHL, and the expansion of the minor leagues have all taken their toll on the Kings.

But the Kings aren't unique. All hockey has suffered from the onslaught of the WHA, etc. They've just been hit a little harder. What is unique is their fans' reaction.

This is really the only way the fan can tell pro hockey to stop. The NHL expanded and the WHA was formed with one reason in mind-make more money. If the fan doesn't go they can't make more money.

Unfortunately there aren't enough cities like Springfield around who can tell pro hockey to "shove it". There are too many Vancouvers around who accept an expansion team at its "major league" face value, not realizing that the old Vancouver team of the Western League was probably a better team than their current Canucks. But they sell out anyway.

Hockey is a great game. But you can only go so far in selling a diluted product. Perhaps Springfield is an indication that hockey has reached its saturation point.

And if that saturation point has been reached, then the next few years will see hockey drastically changing. There is no way all the current franchises, from the Eastern League on up, can survive. There will have to be some sort of consolidation. It will be survival of the fittest.

Or maybe, and I hope it never happens, the minor leagues will cease to exist entirely. Maybe the skyrocketing costs of operating a major league franchise will force the big boys to drop their subsidies of minor league clubs. Maybe the fans, because of the availability of "major league" hockey, will simply stop going to see the minors. Maybe the calibre of minor league hockey will become so bad that the whole world becomes a Springfield.

In any event, the result would be the same. The major leagues would be forced to rely on colleges to act as their farm system, as well as Canadian Junior hockey. This would be the best thing in the world for American college hockey; the worst thing in the world for the game in general.

Maybe Springfield is just like the little boy crying "wolf" for the third time. Maybe no one will believe that the hockey boom has to end somewhere. But Dave Reece is now playing goal for the Boston Braves of the AHL. Dave Reece, the guy who just two years ago was playing for the University of Vermont and just one year ago got cut from the Syracuse Blazers of the Eastern League.

Dave Reece. It is sad.

Oath Deadline Extended By Court

By MARK VOGLER

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—A class action suit filed by three University of Massachusetts-Boston branch faculty members was granted yesterday by Judge John W. Coddaire Jr. in Middlesex County Superior Court.

The suit prevents the personnel offices of all three university campuses, including Amherst, from terminating employees for one week for failure to swear to the Massachusetts loyalty oath.

Court action came just hours before Wednesday's 5:00 P.M. deadline established by the university for the dismissal of employees, Kenneth Ford, a physics professor at Boston and a spokesman for the three plaintiffs, said last night.

According to Ford, the class action suit guarantees all university employees and faculty members, who have not signed the oath and who entered employment from 1969 up to now, relief from dismissal of their jobs until next Wednesday's hearing, at which time a temporary injunction will be sought.

Att. Steven Oleskey, legal counsel for the UMass-Boston trio, was unavailable for comment. The Boston attorney had previously represented a client in opposition to the state's loyalty oath.

Oleskey won a case in the lower courts this year when an employee of a state hospital filed a grievance against the employees oath. However, the Supreme Court reversed that decision last spring.

Ford said that Oleskey made a decision Monday night to try for a class action suit rather than a temporary restraining order. Oleskey was already aware of the outcome in Hampshire Superior Court where the 18 UMass-Amherst plaintiffs had been granted their restraining order. Their hearing will be conducted Friday morning at 10:00 when further action will be taken on the matter.

Ford credits Attorney William A. Norris of Cummington, the legal counsel for the Amherst and Berkshire Community College (Pittsfield) groups in opposition to the loyalty oath, as a motivating force of the unprecidented action taken at the Boston campus.

"Bill Norris has been extremely helpful to our cause. He has helped us directly by giving advice, and he has aided us by providing copies of the briefs he had presented in the other two courts," Ford stated.

He also added that the Boston group has been guided by the efforts displayed by the groups of UMass-Amherst and B.C.C. faculty and staff members.

Ford admitted that there was no threat made by the administration of the Boston campus as yesterday's deadline was approached by those who had not sworn to the oath.

"They gave us an informal assurance that we wouldn't be terminated immediately," he said. "The only written specification that we received was the one that spotted today as the deadline."

Asked if he thought that Friday's decision in Northampton involving the university plaintiffs from Amherst might influence next Wednesday's decision in the Cambridge court, Ford replied: "Each decision will have some influence on the other, but I certainly don't know how much."

Ford said that he hopes for support from other people in the area and is certain that there are others interested who have not already signed the oath.

DCE Goal: University Open To All

By BARBARA VOORHEES

"What we're trying to do is to provide programming and facilities for all of the people in the state. Our goal is to open these University to everyone," said Dr. William Venman, director of the Division of Continuing Education (DCE) in an MDC interview.

Venman said that the DCE, which was opened in August, 1970, is an an organized way of reaching those who are not full-time students.

"Two years ago, the University was open only to undergraduate and graduate students with smarts, money, and motivation fresh from high school or college," said Venman...The University's public service role was neglected with the exception of the College of Agriculture's Co-op Extension Service."

"Most of our students are older than regular students and cannot afford the time or money involved in a regular undergraduate program," said Venman. Nevertheless, all pay their own way. There is no financial aid for part-time students.

The Division of Continuing Education consists of three parts: Academic Services Conference Services, and Central Services.

The Academic Service places students in University courses and in evening courses offered by the DCE. The DCE offers mainly social science and humanities courses and very few lab sciences. The courses are taught by University faculty and outside personnel.

Students wishing to work for a degree may enter the program they desire after completing 30 credit hours with a 2.0 average.

The DCE offers both regular University degrees and it's own Bachelor of General Studies degree, the only such degree offered in the Commonwealth.

DCE academic registration takes two to three weeks; a period in which each student is advised and counseled.

Besides offering regular university courses and degree programs, the DCE offers such unusual courses and majors as law enforcement, fire science, and nursing-home administration. The DCE is also involved in a joint program with all Bay State community colleges.

The Conference Service provides a variety of gatherings and workshops staged by outside experts and University faculty. These conferences and workshops vary from marketing seminars to gymnastics clinics. Some are offered for credit.

The DCE's Central Services do administrative work. The clerks and other personnel work in the Campus Center ninth floor offices.

"If I were asked if the DCE were trying to get away from a typical three credit, degree-oriented program, my answer would be 'yes'. But the University deals in a currency of credits," said Venman.

"This is the most exciting field at the University today. We're plowing new ground."

The DCE is self-supporting except for minor state and trust funds, Venman said.

At present the DCE is involved in planning a program of correspondence instruction with eleven other universities and the Xerox Corp.

When this program begins next year, it will offer two non-credit courses, Small Business Administration and Effective Writing.

Several UMass faculty members are helping to set up the courses.

"Correspondence instruction is not the best education available but it is another area I want the University to enter," Venman said.

Dean Allen Describes School of Education

By BRIAN COYNE

Speaking before an audience of about 200 in the School of Education Auditorium yesterday, Dean Dwight Allen characterized the UMass School of Education as a place "trying to maximize the human potential of students and faculty."

The talk was held in conjunction with the Marathon currently taking place at the school. The Marathon began Monday and will end Friday of this week.

Allen said that one way of maximizing the human potential is to decrease the status difference between student and faculty member in most graduate schools. The typical graduate student has the status of "peon." The reason for this is that the closer the student gets to the level of professional, the more the faculty attempts to put him in his place.

Although there still exists a difference between students and faculty at the school, according to Allen, ideally it should be one of mainly an administrative nature. The student's contributions should not be taken lightly. He went on to say that he did not think there was any student at the School who did not feel that someone there thought he had potential.

Allen noted that the School of Ed seemed to specialize in accepting the "non-exceptional" student for graduate work. He said, "Any time a school of education puts grade-point average as a criteria for admission, they are putting up a smokescreen."

A high grade-point average as an undergraduate does not automatically insure one of success as a teacher, according to Allen. A better criterian for admission must be developed, but it is very difficult since those qualities intrinsic to leadership are not readily assessed quantitatively.

Allen also spoke of the need for the school to feel they are first-rate if they are to do a first-rate job. Too many schools, he said, show they are second-rate by trying to prove they are first-rate.

A favorite ploy of such schools is to list all the degrees the members of the faculty hold, hoping to add prestige to the school through the accomplishments of their teachers. Rather, Allen feels an institution should take the attitude that its name lends status to the teachers.

Allen admitted that during his five-year tenure as Dean, he has opted for the dramatic. "A job well done must first command attention before it can compel action."

One of the things Allen said he was most proud of was that the School has proved its viability. He feels the people at the School have enough confidence to survive their mistakes. He said that in the five years since it was reorganized along different guidelines, which included the discontinuation of most of the existing degrees and programs, the School has made its share of mistakes.

Allen said he tried to capitalize on the mistakes by being the first to publicize them. If the dean could admit mistakes of such a magnitude, he felt the faculty would be more disposed to admit their mistakes. He said they developed a sense of being first-rate when they discovered their errors were not insurmountable.

Allen noted that, contrary to public opinion, the history of the School of Education does not begin with 1968. It was just that the people before him did not feel a mandate to go beyond the traditional forms of teacher preparation.

Rep. McColgan

Legislation Can Be Influenced

By WALT LALIBERTE

Representative Edward A. McColgan spoke yesterday afternoon in the School of Education on the topic of influencing legislation. His address was part of the week-long School of Education Marathon.

He is the state representative from the First Hampshire District, which includes Northampton.

McColgan said that most people do not know how to use the legislative process and explained the various "pressure points" through which citizens may influence their government.

He said that legislation can be influenced easily at various times in its movement through the House. He called these "pressure points."

To begin with, each Massachusetts resident may initiate legislation. "As far as I know, this is unique to Massachusetts," he said.

Another unique Massachusetts feature, he said, is that everyone can appear and testify at public hearings.

Writing letters has some effect on legislators, he explained. Furthermore, he said, "A rule of thumb is that a personal letter is worth fifteen times than a form letter."

More influential than letter writing are personal visits with representatives, he said. Telephone calls and letters are often "Too easy to fluff off."

A person who meets with his representative should know the number of the bill under consideration, its sponsors, and reasons for opposing or favoring the bill, he added

Above all, McColgan explained, it is important to get a committment of support for a proposal from a representative. "Politicians can condone all sorts of conduct except breaking a committment," he said. A representative who breaks committments will not be re-elected, he warned.

Group activity is the most effective form of legislative pressure, he said. As an example he said that the UMass students who opposed a tuition hike sent rosters of students to state representatives. The tactic worked at the time, he added.

A representative is easily swayed while considering Election Day, McColgan said. "I think you should let your representative know you are registered and a constituent," he said. Further, he said that, "Any effective lobbying group today puts out a voting record" of representatives to focus public attention.

Representative Edward McColgan spoke yesterday on influencing legislation.

Senate Approves Added Area Funds

By BOB SCHEIER

After a one-week delay and extensive debate, the student senate last night to return a large part of an area government contingency fund to the areas for their own use.

According to senate figures, the money to be made available to the areas by the bill for special projects will be:

Central: $1,259.
North East: $634
Orchard Hill: $668
Commuters: $2,171
Southwest: $2,815
Greeks: $556
Sylvan: $612.

In other action, the board approved changes in the joint constitution for the reconstituted SUG board, agreed to by the undergraduate and graduate senates, and passed a motion supporting the University Marching band.

The area fund motion, which was postponed from last week after considerable debate, was passed last night only on a second vote.

During the debate over the return of funds to the area governments, Student Government Association president Larry Ladd said the senate should back up its commitment to giving more power to area governments with money.

In action near the end of the four hour meeting, the senate passed a number of changes in the new SUG board constitution, including taking voting powers away from three members of the non-professional staff who will be on the board.

The joint act, on which work was begun upon the abolition last month, is now expected to go to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery for action, and if approved will replace an interim board, currently in power.

In the Marching Band motion, which says it may go out of existence aft] this year if new sources of funding are not found, the senate approved funding for the band, on the condition it did not increase any student fees or eliminate existing student programs.

The band says it needs new sources of funds to stay in existence.

Three non-voting representatives from the Stockbridge School of Agriculture senate were also voted for the senate.

In one of the livlier parts of the meeting, Eric "The Rat" Walgren asked the senate for volunteers to increase student involvement in Amherst government.

Walgren, who is reportedly going to run for the Amherst Board of Selectmen, said "Amherst is a hick town, but there's a lot of energy around...students are getting power all over the country."

The senate also approved funds requested by the University and State Communications Council (USCC), a student-lobbying group to send four state legislators to the SWAP (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) conference.

The senate also passed a motion expressing support for the Collegian in what the motion called attempts to influence the paper's editorial policy.

The motion was a reference to a request by Rep. Louis Morini (R—Northampton) for an investigation of the funding and editorial policies of the Collegian, after the paper published an allegedly obscene letter attacking Morini for his stand on students voting where they go to college.

Pres. Wood Explains Phillips' Other Salary

By JAMES GOLD

UMass Vice-President Franklyn W. Phillips receives an extra salary in order to "encourage him to make a special contribution to the University," President Robert Wood said yesterday.

Wood, speaking at his weekly telephone conference, also discussed the dispute between Rep. Louis Morini (R—Northampton) and the Collegian, the loyalty oath court action and matters brought out at a recent meeting of state college and land grant universities.

The Phillips discussion came about as a result of an Associated Press report saying he received $588 weekly as a UMass Vice-President and $84 weekly as a UMass lecturer.

Wood said that Phillips' situation was part of his program to have "new people in administrative posts to teach."

He said it makes a "positive contribution" to get these people on to the campuses. He pointed out that Phillips conducts a weekly seminar in the School of Business Administration at the Amherst campus.

He said that it would not be hard to determine who laid the ground work for the story. He explained it as "another example of the perilous path of the executive department...chipping away at our autonomy." "It looks like a good front to kick around," he said referring again to the executive branch of state government.

He said that administrative salaries are based in terms of the individual involved. They are used to "provide incentives for people (in administration) to get on campus." He acknowledged that the other vice-presidents are in a similar situation to Phillips, but would not elaborate. When asked if he took a separate salary for the course he teaches, he said no.

Concerning a recent allegedly obscene letter about State Representative Louis Morini (R—Northampton) which appeared in Monday's Collegian, Wood said whether or not it is obscene "depends on whose standards of obscenity are used."

He refused to comment on the merits of the letter and said he had not yet read it. He did say however, "I deplore the use of abusive language."

He also indicated an annoyance with having to waste time dealing with this matter, the Phillips controversy, and the dispute over the new systems office at One Washington Mall in Boston.

"It is an unproductive use of my time," he stated.

Concerning the loyalty oath, Wood commented "this controversy can't be reconciled by court proceedings." He mentioned that the Supreme Court had already acknowledged its constitutionality. He also said he does not think it inhibits academic freedom.

Speaking on his Washington trip, Wood said that UMass was cited twice during the convention, once for the University Without Walls program and once for the University Year For Action program. They were both called innovative, he said.

He added that the mood among all the large public institutions across the country was "sober," they are all facing budget cuts and the possibility of control by some sort of "superboard".

WMPIRG Okays Consumer Agency

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The regional board of WMPIRG yesterday approved the creation of a consumer protection agency for the Williamston-North Adams area.

The agency would be a branch of Consumers Education and Protective Association International, Inc. (CEPA).

According to a prospectus written by a student from Williams College in Williamston WMPIRG would organize the branch of CEPA and fund it until it is able to stand alone, or until June 1973. It would then become an autonomous.

The Board, made up of students from the five schools participating in WMPIRG, also approved a revision in WMPIRG's by-laws, changing the title of the organization's head from president to chairman and postponed the election of it's four officers, until their next meeting.

The Williamston/North Adams CEPA will be organized by two members of WMPIRG from Williams, Scott Shane and Scott Canedy. According to the prospectus the CEPA branch is needed to handle consumer complaints and consumer education. According to Shane, the author of the prospectus, there is presently no effective organization to handle those problems.

WMPIRG will provide the CEPA branch with money for a post office box, office supplies and other "initial purchases".

Steve Rider, acting-chairman said the elections are a "formality", and not vital to the PIRG's functioning. WMPIRG, he said, is running well now under the control of the regional board.

The regional board is composed of eight students. Four are from UMass and one from each of the other four colleges involved; Mt. Holyoke, Springfield College, Williams College and Hampshire College.

Rider said the board will expand as more colleges join the PIRG.

WMPIRG is presently funded by three of the five colleges involved. UMass contributes $20,500, Mt. Holyoke $1725 and Hampshire College $1986. Williams College and Springfield College have collected funds and are in the process of turning the money over to WMPIRG.

The four officers to be elected are a chairman, a vice-chairman, a treasurer and a clerk.

The chairman would control the day to day functioning of WMPIRG. The vice-chairman would fill in on the chairman's absence. The treasurer would draw up a budget, see that it was adhered to, issue monthly statements and arrange for the books to be audited once a year by an outside organization.

The clerk would be responsible for recording the minutes of each board meeting, distributing them to to each board member.

Kerr Endorses Sargent's Ed Reform Plans

By JAMES E. GOLD

Clark Kerr, Chairman of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education has endorsed Governor Francis W. Sargent's position paper on the future of higher education in Massachusetts.

In a letter sent to Sargent on November eighth, Kerr stated, "I have read it with great interest and need hardly add that I am in virtually complete agreement with it, in view of the fact that it incorporates so many of the recommendations of the Carnegie Commission."

The one-page letter of endorsement comes in the middle of a battle between the executive branch of the state government and the UMass administration over the size of the proposed fiscal 1974 budget and the reorganization of public higher education in the state.

Previous to Sargent's release of the paper October 14 at a Trustee conclave at Framingham State College, he had cited one Carnegie report, The More Effective Use of Resources, as the basis for cutting the proposed 1974 UMass budget.

Kerr, shortly afterwards, said in a Boston Globe column, that most of the recommendations in that report did not apply to UMass in such specific terms.

Kerr, in his letter of November eighth, also stated two more reports will be issued shortly. He said these will be "touching on matters mentioned in your position paper on which the Commission has not yet made its recommendations".

Kerr explained, "One of these forthcoming reports, Who Benefits and Who Should Pay in Higher Education will deal with the issues of tuition and with the question as to how the burden of financing higher education should be divided between public and private sources of support. The second report will consider selected issues in the governance of higher education."

Kerr concluded, "I share your desire to continue this dialogue."

Sargent's position paper included reformations in public higher education which he felt were innovative yet held the cost to the taxpayer low. These included individualized study programs, restructuring the higher education administration, and instituting a new tuition program.

US Steps Up Bombing Of North

ARRIVES FOR MEETING WITH THIEU–Maj. Gen. Alexander M. Haig, left, President Nixon's special envoy, talks with Gen. Frederick Weyand, commander of U.S. forces and Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker in Saigon, last week. Gen. Haig was in Saigon to confer with South Vietnamese President Thieu on a proposed Indochina peace agreement. (AP)

SAIGON (AP)-The United States mounted against North Vietnam in the past two days some of the most concentrated air attacks of the war, the U.S. Command announced Wednesday.

American officials said the raids would continue until a peace agreement was concluded.

Air Force and carrier-based fight-bombers launched more than 300 tactical strikes Tuesday. During the 24 hours ended at noon Wednesday, B52s flew more than 30 missions against targets in the southern part of North Vietnam.

It was the largest raid of the North in exactly a month.

"This is to let North Vietnam know that as long as the war is not over, as long as it has troops in the South, we are not going to hold back," said an American official.

The United States told North Vietnam Oct. 22 that there would be no bombing above the 20th Parallel during the current peace talks. The line runs roughly 75 miles south of Hanoi, the capital, and 40 miles north of the demilitarized zone.

The violence of the latest raids brought a clamor of protest from North Vietnam against what it charged was "indiscriminate carpet bombing of heavily populated areas."

Hanoi's official Nhan Dan newspaper demanded a halt to the U.S. bombing and the immediate signing of the draft peace agreement worked out between presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger and North Vietnamese representatives last month.

American and South Vietnam officials say up air campaign is directed against a substantial flow of enemy war material. The U.S. official said "If they did not have logitical supply points and infantry divisions in the South, things would be different."

U.S. fighter-bombers and B52s also attacked enemy troop concentrations in South Vietnam, Cambodia and along the Ho Chi Minh Trail in Laos, the command announced.

The United States is pushing its own massive supply buildup to the forces of South Vietnam in a bid to beat a cut-off after a cease-fire.

Pentagon sources reported the United States has turned over more than 600 planes and helicopters since the big logistics operation began two weeks ago.

About 350 American transport planes have carried 7,000 tons of military equipment, which includes artillery, tanks, armored personnel carriers, ammunition and spare parts.

The new supplies bring South Vietnam's air force up to a strength of nearly 1,850 planes and choppers and make it one of the biggest in the world.

Castro Calls For Hijacking Talks With U.S.

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)–The Fidel Castro government called on the United States Wednesday to engage in immediate bilateral negotiations for an agreement governing all types of hijackings-including air and sea piracy and armed attacks against Cuba by exiles.

"In the opinion of the government of Cuba, this is the only competent, rapid and effective way to halt the wave of airplane hijackings and similar, serious violence which endangers human lives," said the statement read over Havana radio.

The announcement, monitored in Miami, came amid numerous pleas by airline officials and congressmen in this country for some sort of accord between the two nations on the hijacking menace.

The Cuban request for bilateral negotiations was similar to statements made by Cuban officials at least twice previously.

But it appeared to be Cuba's strongest statement yet on the 11-year-old problem.

The call for bilateral accord was contained in a long position paper issued by the Castro government Tuesday and distributed by all news media Wednesday.

The stumbling block in the past, reiterated in the present declaration, has been Cuba's insistence in tying any agreement to what it calls the hijacking of boats and planes from Cuba to the United States by refugees fleeing the island.

Cuba has often called for the return of these boats and planes held in this country. Another point of contention between the two countries are exile incursions into Cuba by Cubans living in the United States.

"The government of Cuba is disposed, in all seriousness and without delay, to take those steps which will lead to an adoption of a broad agreement over this specific question, if the government of the United States demonstrates equal disposition and interest," the statement said.

It said Cuba had no interest in encouraging hijackings such as that of a Southern Airways jetliner which made an emergency landing in Cuba Sunday after FBI agents shot out its tires at the Orlando, Fla., airport.

Castro reportedly praised the pilot who landed the crippled jet and told him the hijackers would be treated as criminals, according to U.S. Federal Aviation Administration officials.

American authorities have in the past denied encouraging Cubans to escape from the Communist island.

Vietnam Peace Official Resigns "In Sheer Disgust"

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

DA NANG, Vietnam, (AP) - Willard E. Chambers, a ranking official in the American pacification program in Vietnam, has resigned his $42,000-a-year job "in sheer disgust with the leadership and the philosophy being applied" to what he calls a much-maligned cause.

Although protest resignations have occurred occasionally during the Vietnam war, veteran observers here can recall no other U.S. official as senior as Chambers quitting under such circumstances.

After more than six years as a civilian official in Vietnam, Chambers said in his final report to the pacification agency: "I am no longer willing to remain patient with the parade of overranked nonentities whose actions reflect their own ignorance of Vietnam, of the peculiarities of a people's war and of the requirements of counterinsurgency."

Chambers, 55, of Columbus, Ohio, holds the title of assistant deputy for CORDS in military region 1, meaning he is the No. 1 official in the pacification program for the northern quarter of South Vietnam.

Chambers, a retired Army lieutenant colonel, said in an interview that he has always supported the U.S. policy of trying to prevent a Communist takeover of South Vietnam, "but we just don't know how to do it."

Both politically and militarily, he said, the Americans have been unable to carry out policies capable of defeating the insurgent forces.

"After all these years of war," Chambers said, "I read the newspaper and think, 'This is where I came into this war.' Binh Duong, Hau Nghia, Cu Chi, Bien Hoa - the same names we were fighting over then we're fighting now. We're bombing the same places all over again."

Pope Paul Claims World Under Satan's Dominance

VATICAN CITY (AP)--Pope Paul VI said Wednesday the devil is dominating "communities and entire societies" through sex, narcotics and doctrinal errors.

The 75-year-old pontiff, speaking in a sad and dramatic voice, addressed a crowd of 6,000 at the weekly public audience in the huge hall off St. Peter's Basilica.

Vatican observers said the Pope was voicing concern over Satanic cults and spiritualist sects that have spread recently from the United States and northern Europe to Italy.

There are reports that spiritualist seances by those who believe they can contact the dead have become fairly frequent even in Rome.

"Do we not see how much evil is in the world?" Pope Paul asked. "Are we believers not those who are most troubled by the observation and experience to evil?"

"We all are under an obscure domination," he said. "It is by Satan, the prince of this world, the No. 1 enemy."

He said the devil was a "terrific reality-mysterious and awe-inspiring."

In a reference to devil worship he deplored those who believe in Satan as "a self-sufficient being which does not draw its origin from God like all creatures."

On the other hand, he criticized those who question the existence of the devil. Some theologians in Holland and other countries have inferred in recent works that Satan may be just a myth.

"This obscure and disturbing being does exist," the Pope said.

He said Satan has a host of other devils at his orders. The Christian, he said, must fight a "struggle in the dark....not against one devil but against an awe-striking plurality."

It was the first time Pope Paul spoke at length in public about Satan. Sources said Church scholars have recently sent in reports to the Vatican on Satanic cults and their spread. Special attention his been reported given to the Manson case in California as an instance of "Satan on the loose."

In his speech, Pope Paul appeared to regret that in the new rite of baptism, which he approved three years ago, loss emphasis is given to exorcism. This is the part in which the priest orders Satan to get out of the new Christian.

"I don't know whether this is realistic," he said of the revised exorcism.

Dems To Look For Governors' Direction

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic leaders across the country say the party should look more to its governors for direction in the aftermath of the election landslide which buried presidential nominee George McGovern.

An Associated Press survey of state Democratic chairmen, National Committee members, state legislators, governors and members of Congress showed strong sentiment for diverting some of the party's focus from Washington to the grassroots.

Norbert Dreiling, the Kansas party chairman, said Democrats need to "get out of the halls of Congress and go to the grassroots and see what the people are saying."

And in particular he said they should listen to governors "who have their ears to the ground a little better."

In response to questions about future national leadership for the Democratic party, governors as a group were mentioned more frequently than any other group or individual.

However, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts stood out as the individual most looked to for party guidance and was far and away the Democrat most mentioned as a prospect for the 1976 presidential nomination.

"I think everybody is thinking of Teddy Kennedy," said Indiana House Minority Leader Phillip Bainbridge, in a statement that summed up most responses-even from some who did not endorse Kennedy but conceded he is the frontrunner.

McGovern still was mentioned as a party leader, second only to Kennedy, despite his trouncing at the polls. But there were some who said he should withdraw from active leadership because of the election result.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, the party's 1968 president nominee and unsuccessful contender for the nomination this year, also drew frequent mention as a potential party leader and healer.

Also drawing strong support for future party responsibility was Sen. Walter Mondale of Minnesota, who was one of the few Democrats winning landslide victory last week.

Mondale ran second to Kennedy among those mentioned for the 1976 nomination, and his name was linked with Kennedy's as a possible vice presidential running mate.

Humphrey, Alabama Gov. George Wallace and Sens. Edmund Muskie of Maine and Henry M. Jackson of Washington were mentioned for new tries at the White House, along with new faces like Govs. Robert Docking of Kansas and Reubin Askew of Florida, Sens. Birch Bayh of Indiana, Lawton Chiles of Florida, John Tunney of California, Adlai Stevenson III of Illinois, Alan Cranston of California and McGovern's running mate, Sargent Shriver.

Part of the turn to gubernatorial influence probably stems from the fact that Democrats did much better at the state and local level last week than they did nationally, prompting New York Chairman Joseph Crangle to comment the party "is healthy despite the Nixon landslide."

U.S. Production, Deficit Rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — A sharp rise in the nation's balance-of-payments deficit brought bad economic news for the Nixon administration Wednesday but a plus was registered by another solid increase in the rate of industrial production.

The balance-of-payments deficit for the July-September quarter surged to $4.7 billion after nine months of improvement, the Commerce Department reported. This compared with a red-ink entry of $850 million for the second quarter.

However, the Federal Reserve Board reported a few hours later that October industrial poduction rose by 0.9 per cent, indicating that the domestic economy still is growing in vigorous fashion. This index, which represents output of the nation's factories, mines and utilities, showed widespread gains among consumer goods, equipment and materials.

The deterioration of the balance-of-payments picture was blamed on unsettled foreign monexchange markets caused by the British government's decision to cut the pound sterling away from its fixed value and let it float.

But the dollar drain that resulted did not last long, the Commerce Department reported, with substantial improvement reported during the latter part of the third quarter.

The $4.7-billion deficit came in the official reserve transactions balance, one of the key measures of the balance of payments. This balance is designed to show how the United States fares in transactions with foreign central banks and governments.

The balance-of-payments picture had improved since the third quarter of 1971, when the red ink in America's international accounts reached record levels.

The rise in industrial production brought the index to 116.7 per cent of the 1967 base, 9.3 per cent higher than the index was at this time last year. The board also said that the August and September increases were revised upward by 0.4 per cent.

Eagleton Says He Was Made Scapegoat

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton said Wednesday that he felt some members of the George McGovern staff made him a target of "scapegoatism" toward the end of McGovern's unsuccessful presidential campaign.

Eagleton, the Missouri Democrat who stepped aside as the party's vice presidential candidate after disclosures about his medical history, made the observation during a question-and-answer session with several hundred journalists at the 39th annual Associated Press Managing Editors Association convention here.

Asked if he had been treated fairly by the McGovern staff, Eagleton replied:

"Not at all times. Toward the end of the campaign there were members of the McGovern staff who were looking for a convenient scapegoat for what appeared to be the inevitable results. And I believe I became the target of that scapegoatism."

The senator did not mention any names.

He said he believed the election outcome would have been the same had he remained on the ticket. But he added that he felt he would have been "more of an asset than a liability" during the campaign, despite controversy after he disclosed he had been hospitalized for exhaustion and received psychiatric treatment in the 1960s.

In an interview in Wednesday's Washington Post Eagleton declared he was "certainly not" the cause of McGovern's defeat.

In his appearance here, Eagleton reiterated his admiration and respect for McGovern.

In the campaign, however, Eagleton said "his views ....sometimes they were misinterpreted or a bit garbled...some or all of these views disturbed a good many people."

The Democratic party now faces the task of "broadening its base," the senator declared. Asked whether that might involve replacement of Jean Westwood as the party's national chairman, Eagleton said he planned to "sit on the sidelines" on that issue.

Eagleton said he would give "mixed reviews" to press coverage of the events leading up to and surrounding his departure from the national ticket. He said he saw that coverage as "creditable" on the whole but less than perfect.

As an example, he said, he did not believe coverage accorded columnist Jack Anderson's retraction and apology after reporting that Eagleton had been arrested several times for drunken driving, was sufficient to counter "the harm done by the original erroneous allegation."

Committee Discovers Health Ed Neglected

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — A White House-appointed committee, disclosing findings of a year's investigation, reported Wednesday that health education throughout America - especially in non-white areas - is "a neglected, underfinanced, unhealthily fragmented activity" requiring major overhauling.

The investigative committee of private health professionals, created by President Nixon in September, 1971, to make a nationwide study, also found that "no agency, in or out of government ... is ... responsible for establishing goals" in the health education field.

One of its major conclusions was that there is need for "a major new commitment of federal money" and a reallocation of current and future funding by federal, state, local and private sources, "so the money will be spent more wisely."

Four members of the committee disclosed these and other "highlight" findings at a news conference at the centennial convention of the American Public Health Association. They said their detailed report - together with specific recommendations - would not be made public until the report is formally presented to Nixon "before the end of the year".

They declined to define the amount of new federal funding being recommended, but said it would be "in the millions, not the billions ... not like the Defense Department."

One of the committee members, Victor Weingarten, president of the Institute of Public Affairs, Inc., New York, said the group's recommendations "are going to flow from our findings ... so ... they become fairly self-evident."

The other committee members reporting were Dr. Irving Shapiro, director of health education, Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York; Clarence E. Pearson, of the health and welfare division of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., New York; and Prof. Scott Simonds, a health educator, of the University of Michigan school of public health.

The committee held fact-finding hearings last January in several major cities, including Boston, St. Louis, Denver, San Francisco, Atlanta, Houston and Los Angeles.

Weingarten declared that of $75 billion spent nationally for health services by federal, state, local and private sources each year, only one-half of one per cent is spent on health education. He said the bulk of the money is spent on "packaged information," such as brochures - and "It's not doing the job."

Weingarten said that "insofar as the non-white population is concerned, most of the informational material has very little relevance" to their health needs. In ghetto areas, he said, "the condition of their health is far below" that of white areas.

Soviet Economy Weakening

MOSCOW (AP)–The enemy is showing persistent weakness in areas the leadership promised would launch the Soviet Union into the consumer era.

After a "once in a century" crop failure, Soviet economic managers are getting disturbing news from the industrial sector.

Gross industrial production, up 6.9 per cent, is meeting the planned targets, according to statistics published Wednesday, but the key to continued Soviet economic growth-increased labor productivity-is lagging.

Explaining the 1971-1975 five-year plan to the party congress last year, Premier Alexei N. Kosygin pointed to targets of planned labor productivity and said they "are of crucial importance for our whole economic development program."

In its review of the economy for the first 10 months, the weekly "Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta" revealed that over-all labor productivity had grown by 5 1/2 per cent.

The target for the end of the year-six weeks away-is 6.01 per cent. The 1972 productivity performance was not only short of its objective, but it had fallen behind the rate reached a year ago.

Discussing the shortfalls in the economy, the journal said, "In all branches of industry there are significant reserves available for increasing the rate of labor productivity..."

The paper also complained about the lack of "new lines of high quality materials, machinery and equipment" and insufficient production of consumer goods.

Singled out for shortfalls by Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta were ministries responsible for technological equipment for the consumer-oriented light industry, cotton fabrics, wool, flax, silk, knitwear, shoes and refrigerators.

Production figures showed that output of cotton fabrics had increased by only 1 per cent over last year, wool was up a mere 2 per cent, knitwear nine-tenths of a per cent and shoe production had declined to 96 per cent on its 1971 levels.

New Test For Poor Readers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A university researcher said Wednesday he has developed an early warning system that spots children with learning difficulties even before they enter school.

If the test holds up under further investigation, said Dr. Paul Satz of the University of Florida, educators could begin applying remedial measures before youngsters fall behind in reading and writing skills.

"Difficulties in reading can have a shattering impact on children in later years," Satz said at a news briefing arranged by the National Institute of Mental Health.

A two-year study of 500 white boys in Alachua County, Fla., tested in 1970 before they entered kindergarten and again at the end of the first grade, correctly predicted reading abilities of 91 per cent of the pupils, he said.

The tests correctly classified 100 per cent of those with reading handicaps and 95 per cent of those with superior skills.

"The present findings provide preliminary support and encouragement for remedial intervention approaches at a time before the child begins formal reading, at a time when his central nervous system may be more plastic and responsive to change, and at a time when he is more free of the frustrations and emotional turmoil associated with repeated academic failure," Satz said.

Boys were chosen for the study because they are more likely to suffer from dyslexia, or reading disability, Satz said. Conservative estimates place at least four million American grade school children in that category, he added.

Satz said he suspects that the problem results from a lag in brain development, emphasizing: "These children are not brain-injured or impaired. They're delayed."

Reading is probably only a symptom of the developmental lag which affects other learning and motor skills, he said.

When the decision is made to apply remedial intervention, he said, great care will have to be taken to avoid calling attention to high-risk children identified in the tests.

Race Is Navy's Largest Problem Says New Cmdr.

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The new commander in chief Atlantic and U.S. Atlantic Fleet believes there is no greater internal problem in the Navy today than race.

"Within the larger context of human relations and communications, race is as big a problem as we have," Adm. Ralph W. Cousins said during an interview with the Norfolk Ledger-Star, his first interview since he took over the top job in the Atlantic two weeks ago.

Cousins, who worked as vice chief of naval operations for Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt, Jr., for two years before coming to his present job, said he hasn't any doubts that Zumwalt "is very, very deeply imbued with the feeling that we have to do more than our share to see that our black citizens in the Navy are, indeed, treated as first class citizens. He's committed to it, and all of us just have to be sure that we are deeply committed as he is."

The speech made by Zumwalt last week to nearly 100 of his top admirals "was shape up or ship out–there's no misreading the intent there," Cousins said.

"If anyone has some reservations within himself that this isn't the proper way to go, if he can't say 'Cherry aye, aye,' then he's got to shove off," he said.

Cousins said that "the turmoil and instability and turnovers" and the "tremendous tempo of operations" occasioned by the war in Vietnam can largely be blamed for the problems.

This has resulted in neglecting "some of our fundamental tenets in the Navy of communicating with your men and knowing their problems."

For whatever reason, commanders "aren't doing enough to know their men and get on top of these things before they get out of hand," he said.

Cousins said the Atlantic Fleet is now "re-emphasizing the whole program" in minority affairs instituted by Zumwalt.

The former fighter pilot Navy Cross in World War II said "drugs have peaked out and are declining as a problem.

"Our statistics show that hard drugs probably never were the problem we thought they were," he said. "The experimentation continues at a level that's of concern to us, but it's not an epidemic."

Another problem, one that the Navy hasn't said much about, is what Adm. Charles K. Duncan referred to as "sabotage" in his farewell address when Cousins relieved him–the willful damage of a ship or its equipment.

"We don't see any pattern to sabotage or malicious acts of vandalism," Cousins said. "They're related to instability and the tempo of operations, too.

"I've given it a lot of thought and all of our commanders are, but when you examine the number of ships and aircraft in the fleet I don't feel that it's of epidemic proportion by any stretch of the imagination," he said.

Four Nations To Take Part In Viet Truce

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has received what it regards as agreement in principle from Canada, Indonesia, Hungary and Poland to participate in a Vietnam cease-fire, a State Department spokesman said Wednesday.

Details were still sketchy on how the operation will be worked out.

Press office Charles W. Bray indicated that the United States could provide at least some of the logistic support for inspectors from the four nations to oversee the truce when it is agreed upon.

Also, Bray did not rule out logistic support from other countries and from the four nations themselves.

According to diplomatic sources the inspection teams will include 250 officers and 1,000 men from each of the four nations, making a total of 5,000 inspectors.

To their operations will be added the mixed teams of the South Vietnamese army and Viet Cong and other teams that will include representatives of the United States and North Vietnam as well as Saigon and Viet Cong.

In Ottawa, a spokesman for the Canadian Foreign Office said Canada has made no commitment for a new truce supervision role.

Nature Lovers Share Home

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Nature lovers Mark and Becky Schneider share their home here with 1,000 fish, two cats, two dogs, two tarantulas, five birds and five snakes.

"I like nature," says Schneider, 25. "I like to surround myself with nature. I like to go out in the woods and this is the most convenient way to do it without getting mosquito-bitten, frost-bitten and bitten by other sundry creatures."

In their living room, Schneider and his wife have three fish tanks and the spare bedroom is wall to wall, floor to ceiling tanks.

Schneider, a student at the University of Florida's college of nursing, said he started his fish hobby 15 years ago with "tiny little tanks and tadpoles, like a lot of people get started."

Then he went to Vietnam and saw all the tropical fish, birds and plants there and says he "really went hog wild" when he returned to the United States.

"The cats don't bother the birds or fish and the dogs don't bother the cats," he said. "Nobody bothers anybody - except the dogs bother us at night sometime."

Christian Science Monitor Editor To Speak

Erwin Canham will speak tonight in Mahar Auditorium at 7:30.

Tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, Erwin Canham will speak on "The Presidential Election and Beyond". Sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, the public is invited to attend this informative and entertaining lecture.

Erwin Dain Canham, Editor in Chief of The Christian Science Monitor, has been a first-hand observer at many of the conferences and events which have shaped recent history; a member of international organizations and advisor to many leaders in public life. He holds honorary degrees from 27 colleges and universities. Several years ago rebellious convicts in Boston's old Charlestown Prison asked for him as one of a group to enter a besieged cell block and help end a dangerous revolt.

Mr. Canham was born in Auburn, Maine, the son of a part-time farmer and weekly newspaper publisher.

With a printers-ink background he attended Bates College and took part in intercollegiate debates, including the first held in the United States with a team from Oxford. He received his B.A. degree from Bates, and in the same year became a reporter for the Monitor.

He took a three years' leave of absence as a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford, and received B.A. and M.A. degrees there. Between college terms he was assistant Monitor correspondent at League of Nations assembly sessions in Geneva. In 1930 he covered the London Naval Conference, and began service as the Monitor's Geneva correspondent; from 1932 to 1939 he was chief of the Monitor's Washington bureau. Then he went to Boston as General News Editor. In 1942 he became the Monitor's chief editorial executive with the title of Managing Editor, in 1945 Editor, and in 1964 Editor in Chief.

Because of his wide contacts and experience, Mr. Canham has been appointed by American presidents to various commissions and boards. In the spring of 1948, Mr. Canham was vice-chairman of the U.S. delegation to the United Nations Conference of Freedom of Information at Geneva, and the following year was Alternate United States Delegate to the United Nations General Assembly. In 1970 he was appointed a member of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest.

He is a member of the American Society of Newspaper Editors (and past president); and was chairman of the National Manpower Council. He is a fellow (honorary) of Sigma Delta Chi, a professional journalists' fraternity, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Delta Sigma Rho, the Association of American Rhodes Scholars, and is a 33 degree Mason.

In 1959 Mr. Canham was elected President of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States for a term of one year.

He has many affiliations–trusteeships of several colleges, directorships of businesses and foundations, and membership in learned societies.

He has written or collaborated on five books.

Mr. Canham gave regular weekly broadcast commentaries over the American Broadcasting Company from 1945 to 1964. For a number of years he was moderator of a television program, "Starring the Editors", a Boston newspaper panel appearing Sunday afternoons on WBZ-TV. At present he is commentator on public affairs for the Westinghouse Broadcasting Company-Group W.

He has decorations from six foreign governments.

In June, 1966, Mr. Canham was elected President of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston for a term of one year.

Airline Pilots Threaten Strike

By VERY HAUGLAND
AP Aviation Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)–The Air Line Pilots Association threatened Wednesday to call another worldwide air service strike in protest of governmental inaction against hijackers.

At a news conference in which he criticized tactics used by the FBI in the most recent hijacking, John J. O'Donnell, ALPA president, said he believed a worldwide strike was the only alternative remaining to the pilots.

He said ALPA's board will meet within two weeks to decide whether to call such a strike after the first of the year.

He added that the U.S. airlines had indicated that they might go along with a strike this time, rather than opposing it in the courts as they did last summer.

Court actions prevented the one-day shutdown, ordered by the airlines last June 19, from being effective in the United States. Many other parts of the world, however, experienced a complete shutdown.

O'Donnell added that, if the air service shutdown was not strong enough, he anticipated that sympathetic unions would also close down all sea commerce.

O'Donnell charged that the FBI action in shooting out the tires of a hijacked Southern Airways DC9 as it attempted to take off from McCoy Field at Orlando, Fla., interrupted action by the hijackers to release the 27 passengers aboard the craft.

The shooting was authorized by L. Patrick Gray III, acting director of the FBI. O'Donnell said William Haas, pilot of the plane, told him he had almost induced the hijackers to release the passengers at two other previous stops-Chattanooga, Tenn., and Key West, Fla.

In both instances, the hijackers became alarmed at the activity of "too many people around the plane- people walking around that appeared to be armed" and forced a hurried takeoff with the passengers still aboard.

Segregation Units Not To Be Reopened

BOSTON (AP)–Massachusetts Correction Commissioner John O. Boone said Wednesday he will not reopen the segregation unit at Bridgewater State Prison, once used to isolate troublesome prisoners from other institutions.

The commissioner replied in a statement to suggestions by Norfolk County Dist. Atty. George G. Burke that the segregation unit be reopened to house 39 "problem prisoners" from the maximum security Walpole State Prison.

On Tuesday Burke disclosed that he asked the Bridgewater facility be reopened in a letter to Boone Nov. 2.

The district attorney said the move would have prevented the stabbing death this week of Walpole inmate Raymond F. Rich, 46, of Somerville. Burke said Rich was on the list of 39 men he urged be removed to the segregation unit.

"We have no intention of reopening the departmental segregation unit at Bridgewater," said Boone in a statement. "We will provide the proper degree of security for most of these men at Walpole."

The commissioner said cell block 10 at Walpole, used to house prisoners who must for one reason or another be isolated from the general prison population, "is more secure than the departmental segregation unit at Bridgewater and provides more safety for inmates than the DSU ever did.

"And block 10 is the unit I intend to use for coping with inmates with serious behavior problems."

Boone acknowledged that Burke's list included "a well known and difficult inmate named Ray Rich who was found stabbed to death at Walpole yesterday."

The commissioner said he had asked newly appointed Walpole Superintendent Raymond E. Perelle to confer with Burke "for details concerning the characteristics of the 39 inmates he wants transferred out of Walpole.

Boone said his staff would also ask the district attorney for any "information on them the inmates that would support a possible legitimate transfer or increased security for these individuals."

Rich was one of two Walpole inmates found stabbed Tuesday. The second man, Edward J. McCarthy Jr., 29, of Quincy was not fatally injured. The Bridgewater segregation unit was ordered closed at the beginning of the year on the grounds the cells were unfit for human habitation.

A spokesman said Wednesday that no inmates have been housed in the old DSU cells, but an adjacent group of cells at Bridgewater is being used for inmates from Walpole who requested they be placed in protective custody.

Noise Ruining Rome

ROME (AP)-Rome is becoming a city of eternal noise-even on Sunday, supposedly the day of peace.

Last Sunday hordes of sports fans swept through the streets in a horn-honking, trumpet-blaring outing to the Olympic Stadium for a soccer match. Once there, about 90,000 of them shrieked. Firecrackers exploded every minute.

Outside, in expresso bars and even on serene parks, radios were at full blast for details of the game, delighting fans and annoying others.

Noise in Rome is not an affliction only of soccer fans and on Sundays. Every Roman seems to contribute to it in one way or another.

"Noise pollution is ruining us," Momento Sera, a Rome daily, wrote recently.

Romans are not in the habit of keeping the volume of their radios and television set an iota less than the maximum, at home, on the beach or in the car, the paper complained.

Their conversations in most neighborhood "trattoria"-small restaurants-seem like horrendous quarrels. At home and in public, many a mama screams at children for no reason, so it seems.

Speakers at political and labor rallies-they are endless in Italy-shout as if the louder they are the more convincing they will be.

Youngsters who scoot around town on their motorcycles usually have the machine stripped of its muffler and rigged with special gadget to make more noise.

The biggest modern-day noise pollutants in Rome are the motorists, suffering from what Roman writer Giorgio Capuano calls "claxon mania," horn-honking.

Horn-honking is illegal in cities but the law goes inenforced in view of the mass violation.

A Roman jurist, Paolo Emilio Quaranta, has formed a citizens' group to fight horn-honking and other noise in the capital.

He admits the fight is uphill but his volunteer organization has started a noisy publicity campaign for some peace in Rome.

The group hopes to get the point across to legislators for a law that would impose criminal penalties for noise pollution as Italian law now does for air and water pollution.

Until then the only oasis of peace for Romans is still the countryside, but they have to honk their way to get there and back.

Two Policemen Assassinated

By RICK KIRKPATRICK

(AP)–Two policemen were shot and killed early Wednesday behind police headquarters in what was called an ambush by "a cool assassin."

Dist. Atty. William H. Lamb of Chester County said: "This was a brutal assassination-type killing...no casual type of killing...a planned, deliberate attack...the work of a cool assassin."

State Police Commissioner Rocco Urella said, "It was an ambush." He took charge of an investigating team of 30 troopers plus homicide experts from Philadelphia, 30 miles east of this tiny town.

The bodies of Patrolmen William Davis, 27, and Richard Posey, 38–each shot once–were found on top of one another, face down in a puddle of blood, next to their patrol car.

Investigators said the officers apparently had just parked the vehicle and were planning to enter the closed building when they were ambushed.

They said Davis apparently was hit first, the bullet going through his body and then shattering the window on the driver's side. Posey, running around the back of the car to Davis' aid, probably was struck as he bent over his bleeding comrade.

Originally it had been reported the men were hit while sitting in the car.

Autopsies disclosed Davis, a bachelor, was hit on the left side, while Posey, who had four children, was shot in the back.

Lamb said there is nothing "to indicate anything more than two shots."

The shots were believed to have been fired from about 30 yards away, possibly from a nearby building.

Lamb said "some evidence" had been found across the street, but declined to give any details.

He said three persons had been questioned because they had "peculiar knowledge concerning the incident," but he refused to elaborate.

FBI Actions To Stop Hijack Criticized By Airlines

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)–An official of the Air Line Pilots Association said today the FBI's decision to shoot out the tires of a hijacked Southern Airways jetliner last weekend brought it "closer to disaster" than any hijacking he has investigated in the last three years.

Capt. Thomas M. Ashwood, chairman of ALPA's International Flight Security Commission, criticized Acting FBI Director Patrick Gray for the FBI's action against the Southern Airways DC9. Gray has said he made the decision to shoot out the tires of the plane. Despite the shot out tires, the DC9 took off from Orlando, Fla., and landed safely in Havana, Cuba, where the passengers and crew were released after the 28-hour hijacking.

Ashwood, of Trans World Airlines, said "the attack-and I call it an attack"-by the FBI left the pilot and crew convinced that they and their 27 passengers almost lost their lives because of the FBI's action.

Speaking at the 39th convention of The Associated Press Managing Editors, Ashwood said hijacking must be ended and "if necessary we will shut down the world or individual countries to achieve our objectives." ALPA today threatened to call another worldwide air service strike in protest of government inaction against hijackers.

Parent Protest Supt. Choice

(AP)–Parents of residents at the Belchertown State School of the Retarded, charging the state has conducted a half-hearted attempt to select a new superintendent, plan to meet with an aide to the governor Friday to discuss their dissatisfaction.

The parents, the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Children, the Children's Lobby and the Special Legislative Commission Investigating Belchertown are protesting the way the Department of Mental Health is selecting a new superintendent to replace Dr. Roland Nagel.

But the chairman of the selection committee, Dr. Edgerton Howard, said Wednesday that "I've had a great deal of experience in searching for top level psychiatrists and the method used for Belchertown was the very best."

The protesting groups say there was lack of a systematic nationwide search, a failure to advertise the position in national professional journals and a failure to consult major placement services for retardation personnel.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of the Belchertown parents group, says that an assistant dean at St. John's University in New York City, Dr. William Jones, has been unofficially selected as the new superintendent.

Ricci claims that Jones has only limited experience with the retarded and was one of only two candidates considered by the search committee appointed by the commissioner of the Department of Mental Health, Dr. Milton Greenblatt.

Howard said that the selection method used by the committee was an "extensive search" conducted via "the grapevine."

He said that the committee contacted specialists in the field throughout the country to ask if they knew of any suitable candidates.

He said that Howard, who will be present at the Friday meeting in Boston, "has had a great deal of experience dealing with the retarded. He has done a lot of education of the retarded and has had top level positions in designing curricula in teaching the retarded."

Howard also said that there were many applicants screened" but that "only two were found acceptable."

Ricci claimed the search committee has held only two meetings and did not meet at all until Sept. 7, five days after Nagle's resignation became effective. He says that Howard who is mental administrator for Western Massachusetts, did not attend either session and that only four of the eight committee members were present at either session.

Howard said the committee began meeting in August. He said that more than two meetings were held and that he had offered to postpone his vacation if the commissioner felt his presence was necessary at the meetings.

At the time of his resignation Nagle attacked the Department of Mental Health "system" and said he didn't "have the stamina of the few exceptional people who can tack into the teeth of the gale."

The parents of 28 retarded patients at Belchertown have filed a class action suit seeking a summary judgement against the state to force major improvements at the facility.

A Point For Sargent

Governor Francis Sargent's education reform plans received a boost late last week when Clark Kerr, Chairman of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, endorsed in a letter Sargent's position paper on public higher education. "I am in virtually complete agreement with it," he wrote.

Just because of this letter we cannot discount Kerr's column in the Boston Globe last month in which he stated "The development of public higher education in Massachusetts will be stunted if the state university's development is impeded by overly stringent budgets."

Sargent's plans have called for the reduction of state expenditures in the area of public higher education. He has cited one Carnegie Commission report, The More Effective Use of Resources as the basis for cutting the UMass proposed fiscal 1974 budget. In that same column in the Globe, Kerr stated that the report should not be used in that manner.

It almost looks like either a contradiction or a change of heart on the part of Kerr. But the message, if one looks deeply, is that Sargent's ideas in creating such things as three-year degree programs, individualized studies, and other reforms are thought worthwhile by Kerr. However, they will not necessarily come about merely by further cutbacks in the University's operating budget.

Kerr's endorsement gives one more point to Sargent in this affair which has become quite a political game.

Real Obscenity

Every two or three years, it seems that the Collegian is accused of some heinous crime. The accuser is usually a Massachusetts State legislator--a Senator Barrus or a Blackie Burkie. We are usually investigated.

The crime, of course, is that of publishing a letter, a column, or a cartoon attacking certain politicians. The article typically contains words that are allegedly "obscene".

Traditionally, the sensible citizens of the Commonwealth realize what the legislators are doing to the freedom of the press, and the sanctity of editorial freedom is preserved.

Representative Louis Morini is the latest legislator to rise in defense of restrictions and censorship of this free press. Not unsurprisingly, he is a Republican in the tradition of Nixon, Joe McCarthy, and Cromwell.

Mr. Morini was attacked in a letter-to-the-editor, and in a policy editorial for his position about disenfranchising citizens who vote where they go to school. His party, you see, took a drubbing in the election.

Mr. Morini is surely arrogant to suggest that this newspaper or any newspaper be investigated because of what he calls "obscenities".

Mr. Morini thinks that this intimidation of the American press is not obscene.

Mr. Morini thinks that disenfranchising student voters because they do not agree with his party is not obscene.

Mr. Morini does not think that the policies of the man he supported for President are often obscene, even though they often attack the Bill of Rights insidiously.

Mr. Morini wishes to apply his standards of a different people

Some people think that libel is obscene. Mr. Rashed's letter was hardly libelous, although it did contain rather weak invective.

Perhaps Mr. Morini should not be re-elected in 1974. His actions indicate he does not believe in the Bill of Rights.

Perhaps Mr. Morini should stop wasting the taxpayer's time and money in his partisan publicity boondoggles.

Perhaps Mr. Morini should start to combat the real obscenities of society.

Ending Imperialism

By ANN EGAN and MARY SMITH

Rumors proliferate once again that peace is impending in Vietnam. The American people are asked to be patient, trust the U.S. government, and the Indochina carnage will shortly be ended.

The whole sordid history of the Vietnam war has been marked by confident government-issued predictions of its imminent end. Johnson's Secretary of Defense McNamara promised the GI's they would be home by Christmas of 1965. Mr. Kissinger told war protesters, "If we have not ended the war by six months from now, you can come back and tear down the White House fence." That was 41 months ago. Nixon's Secretary of Defense Laird gave assurances that "we have certainly turned the corner toward peace." That was over three years ago. Mr. Nixon has constantly claimed to see "the light at the end of the tunnel." Two and a half years ago he announced, "We finally have in sight the just peace we are seeking." In January of this year he glibly promised, "The issue of Vietnam will not be an issue in this campaign as far as this administration is concerned, because we will have brought the American involvement to an end."

The United States Government's latest proclamation came on October 26 when Henry Kissinger announced that peace was at hand and proceeded to outline a nine-point program that is supposed to achieve peace in Southeast Asia. The main points of the agreement include significant concessions forced from the Vietnamese and supporters of the Vietnamese revolution should not delude themselves into thinking that peace has been won. The United States has no right to demand concessions from the Vietnamese, and it would be incorrect for the American antiwar movement to approve of any concessions wrested by the United States from the Vietnamese. The U.S. has no right to be in Vietnam to begin with and no right to any voice whatsoever in determining the political future of Vietnam. Yet in the tentative cease-fire the U.S. government arrogantly asserts such a right. They dictate a series of conditions to which the Vietnamese must agree before the U.S. will stop its genocidal bombing and pull out its forces.

The Oct. 31 deadline set by Hanoi for signing the nine-point proposal has come and gone without an agreement being signed. President Nixon continues to delay while negotiations continue with Hanoi on other points. Appearing on NBS television's "Meet the Press", Secretary of State Rogers predicted that an agreement will be reached but that it will take at least several weeks before the remaining details can be ironed out. According to the New York Times when Roger's was asked why the Administration was so certain that peace is on its way, he replied, "that 'major suppliers', such as the Soviet Union and China, agreed that the war did not serve anyone's interests, that the people in Indochina had 'come to the conclusion that military solution is not possible, that the problem should be solved by political methods.' The reference to 'major suppliers' confirms other recent reports that Moscow and Peking are exerting considerable pressure on Hanoi to make this settlement even if it means major concessions.

One of the reasons Washington doesn't want to sign the agreement right away is that it's trying to squeeze more concessions from the Vietnamese. For example, the U.S. is trying to convince the North Vietnamese to agree to pull some of their troops out of the South. Another reason for stalling is that the U.S. government needs time to rush more equipment to Saigon before a cease-fire is signed According to an Associated Press report the present military aid is the largest since the war began. "It will make the South Vietnamese air force the third largest in the world, with more than 2000 aircraft." Roger's explained in his "Meet the Press" appearance that this is being done "to assure" the South Vietnamese "that they will have the necessary supplies in the event that agreement doesn't work out."

As the North Vietnamese have explained the agreement, a cease-fire is to begin throughout South Vietnam twenty-four hours after the signing of the accords. The U.S. is to stop bombing in North Vietnam and mining its harbors. All U.S. troops are supposed to leave South Vietnam within sixty days. It should be noted that no limitations are placed on American forces in Thailand nor on the Seventh fleet.

Within South Vietnam a standstill cease-fire would amount to formal recognition of a situation of dual power, where there are two opposing armies and two governmental administrations, each controlling a certain portion of the country. Such a cease-fire would be highly unstable.

In a key concession from earlier negotiating positions, the North Vietnamese have agreed that the tens of thousands of political prisoners already held by Thieu as suspected Viet Cong will be deferred, although all U.S. prisoners will be released concurrently with the withdrawal of U.S. troops. The tentative cease-fire agreement also provides for the establishment of a "National Council of National Reconciliation and Concord". This administrative structure is intended to supervise the cease-fire and organize general elections under international supervision at some unspecified future date. Two points on this: 1) No other country has the right to oversee what kind of elections should be held. That is up to the Vietnamese themselves; 2) In other situations such "international supervision" has proved to be a way of giving legitimacy to totally fraudulent elections. The elections in the Dominican Republic in 1966 are a case in point. The conflict in Vietnam is not a parliamentary squabble; it is a civil war between two fundamentally opposed class forces. The nine-point proposal does not settle the question of whether South Vietnam will be adminstered by a capitalist or socialist government. It would leave instead a very unstable situation in which the struggle would break out again in some form.

While most of the press hails the anticipated cease-fire agreement as one that will transform the conflict from the military to the political, Nixon and Thieu are proceeding on a more realistic assessment of what is to come. This is attested by the mad rush to send new jets, tanks, and artillery to South Vietnam and by Roger's statement cited above as to the purpose of this effort.

The point is that having made a test case of the strength vetween itself and the colonial revolution, U.S. imperialism is not about to willingly give up at this point. Its fundamental objective remains the same: the stabilization of a pro-imperialistist regime in South Vietnam. For Nixon, signing a cease-fire agreement with the Vietnamese is a tactical maneuver, a bid for a Korean-type "peace" that will enable them to prepare further blows to the revolutionary forces.

It is for these reasons that the demonstrations being planned by the National Peace Action Coalition and the Student Mobilization Committee are of importance. The U.S. anti-war movement has played a crucial role throughout the history of the war. Mass anti-war sentiment forced Nixon to end the invasions of Cambodia and Laos and withdraw U.S. ground troops from Vietnam. We can not rely on promises to end the war. We must continue to judge the U.S. government by deeds and not words. And no talk of an impending cease-fire can obscure the fact that two tons of bombs are being dropped on Asian people every sixty seconds. Demonstrations will be held in 20 cities on Saturday, Nov. 18 demanding U.S. Out of Southeast Asia Now. No Conditions. In Boston, the demonstration is at 12 noon on the Boston Common near the State House.

The Boltwood Walk Plan

To The Residents Of The Town Of Amherst:

As a member of the Amherst Town Meeting and a representative of precinct two (which includes Southwest), I feel it my obligation to inform you of the forthcoming referendum dealing with the Boltwood Walk Plan.

At present the plan, having been passed at Town Meeting is about to come to referendum. The referendum was drawn up by local businessmen and community members who are voicing objections to the plan on the grounds of the impact it will have on the character of Amherst and on the problems that the town currently is facing. Some members of the business community have voiced their concern to stop the Boltwood Walk program on the grounds that the plan is a threat to the ecology of Amherst center or that it will conflict with the old New England atmosphere of Amherst center or that the planners are attempting to take the land by force through eminent domain. Another objection is that the complex will add to the problem of traffic congestion of Amherst rather than alleviate it. To all these objections I would like to pose the following statement as a student supporter of the Project.

It is my opinion that the Boltwood Plan has been proposed to the Town after much careful consideration and planning. I feel the center, which would include a school complex as well as commercial areas and activity centers for the young and old alike, will serve to benefit all of Amherst. I feel that Boltwood will bring a healthy new look to that part of town that has been neglected by developers in the past. I would hope that indeed the plan would change the face of the downtown area as it seems to have been neglected by the merchants. As far as the traffic and ecological problems, are concerned, it has been demonstrated by the Amherst Redevelopment Authority, that the complex will be able to handle all the traffic it draws to the apartments, commercial and recreational facilities. I would further state that I believe that the reason the local merchants have petitioned for a referendum is that they fear the new commercial development that might bring some competition for the market of Amherst and its great amount of students. To this I offer my hope that new economic interests be developed and that competition be developed against many of those merchants that presently have the local market cornered.

Now what can we as students do? We can either vote yes in support of the Town Meeting action or you can abstain from voting on the referendum and show your disapproval on the referendum. To the opposition of the Boltwood Project I would offer these words; "The opposition to intelligent change is not permanence; It is Extinction."

Rashed Reaction

To The Editor:

The criticism of Richie Rashed's letter in this weeks Collegian is an act of snobishness and ignorance of world reality. The issue at point should not be the editor's judgement, the Rhetoric requirement (at best an absurdity), the obscenity laws, the image of UMass, nor the tax-payer's wasted dollars. The issue at hand is freedom of expression, both in the voting booth and in the newspaper. Another, more difficult issue, however, comes to light in the ensuing discussions.

Regimentalization. Conformity. Homogeneity. Unification. We all live for a day when all people will be treated with the respect they deserve. Unfortunately, many people are trying to reach that goal by making everyone "the same". Rhetoric and its accompanying regimentalization strips many people of their rightful use of words and phrases. I can remember, when I was being "cured" of a "lisp" in the UMass speech therapy, a girl with a beautiful Scottish burr who was having it trained out of her. Whether she sought this help or not only proves that people are afraid of and ridicule the "different" ones.

With such a large incoming third world population, the advocates of conformity (Better Communications?) serve a kind of racist cause in addition to hurrying us along the way to 1984. Why the hell shouldn't I allow my children to see or say four-letter words if they understand what they mean and why they're saying them? With all the attacks against good taste going on on this campus such as Three Stooges film festivals, commercial promotion of everything from beer and girls to Kultur and courses (I notice they're selling them in the Campus Center – that den of iniquity–lately), and even that good old Amerikan meal of steak and potatoes--with all this why do we pick up on "gutter" rhetoric, probably the last entrenchment of the honest man?

If Audrey Duckert is out there somewhere I wish she would fill everyone in on how many "cuss-words" have become absorbed into the language. If that beautiful woman cannot respond then I appeal to Marshall McLuhan (reluctantly) and Jack Kerouac and James Joyce (lately). The elitists are at the barricades again!

Get our heads together, there's still a media revolution going on even though we've given up the streets. Don't fuck it up!

Responsible Press?

To The Editor:

Every day the Collegian editors take a stand on an issue that is deemed to be important to the members of the University community. This is a good policy; news people often have a perspective that others cannot quite see. Yet, it seems peculiar to us that the MDC espouses, through its editorials, to be the epitome of campus equality and progressive thinking, when its internal policies seem rather regressive and inequitable.

By this, we refer to the current status of the make-up of the editorial board. One cannot help but notice that all of the executive positions are filled by white males. One cannot help notice an absence of women and minority people on the staff, at least in any position of real responsibility.

This absence has to be attributed to some factor. We do not believe that the incumbent editorial staff is totally to blame; they inherited the system last February. But they will be to blame if the current situation remains the same by February, 1973.

We are not condoning or encouraging the election or appointment of token or unqualified participants. Nor are we suggesting an exact method of change for the Collegian that is an internal function of the editors and the general staff.

We do, however, suggest that the Collegian either change with the times (the vote and equal say amendments came 100 years ago), or remove the slogan "A FREE AND RESPONSIBLE PRESS" from the headline. It's a real contradiction, Collegian.

Editorial Points

We have to admire John Mazur's integrity in stepping down as coach of the Patriots. However, people should be aware that not even the best coach in the world can win with material that is unwilling to try, and whose quality is pretty suspect, too.

The people at BC must be laughing in their handkerchiefs over the recent fortunes of the UMass football team. Let them be advised to hold their glee until after the UMass-BC game. If they then still have cause for laughter, good luck.

Rip Off

To The Editor:

To one among us who has lowered himself to preying upon his fellow man,

It was embarrassing for me when, upon purchasing a cup of coffee at the Campus Center, I found myself gazing at an empty wallet in my hand. Embarrassment was followed by realization, short-felt anger, and then disappointment; a disappointment felt for all of those who indulge in "ripping-off". Maybe you who cleaned out my wallet while I was in lifesaving class Tuesday think nothing of it. Well I just wanted to let you know that I really worked hard all summer in order to support myself out here and you didn't help any. If you're not enough of a man to return the money, Okay, but please, stop stealing. It's just another bummer in a world that doesn't need any more sadness.

Perkins Replies

To The Editor:

Richie Rashed's reply yesterday to my criticism of his presentation of views in Monday's Collegian once again points out my original intent: that a rhetoric course apparently has a hard-pressed (if not eager) clientele here at UMass. While the tone of Richie's letter yesterday was well above that of Monday's "adolescent yelpings", his logical presentation of ideas hasn't seen any improvement. To my rather straightforward charge that his "frustrated rantings" are an insult to all who read this page, he saw fit to publish an obtuse 18-paragraph monument to illogic and irrelevence; (his long-winded thesis that I am either "blind or a hypocrit (sic) is a case in point).

And judging from Wednesday's letters to-the-editor on the subject of Richie's rhetoric, there are others around here who see the situation in exactly the same light. The point is clear, simple, (and getting a bit boring): if you don't wish to be judged as intellectually incompetent, (call it what you will), then stop sounding like you are. The insult Monday was not to our morality, but to our intelligence. And that, I trust, is the end of that.

Open The Door

To The Editor:

This evening, Tuesday, November 14 at 9:40, my husband and I took the five-college bus to Smith College after a class. When it came, since the buses rarely run on schedule, my husband asked the young lady driving whether it was the bus going to Northampton, and she replied negatively (in a rather irritated manner). When the next bus came, it was the Mount Holyoke bus, and we found we had been misled, but took it into Amherst, where the driver was kind enough to signal the first bus and let us transfer. Since it was sleeting out, and we live a mile before Smith College, we asked if we could be let out in town at a red light she had stopped for. She replied negatively (in a rather irritated manner). I wonder, would it have been a major hassle for the poor girl to simply open the door?

Aged "Will Stand Up"

SPRINGFIELD (AP)-The president of the greater Springfield chapter of the American Association of Retired Persons says senior citizens "will stand up and fight for their fair share" of the $4.4 million in federal revenue sharing funds earmarked for Springfield.

Theodore W. Bamforth, a former city councilor, said that part, if not all, of the money should be used to reduce the property tax rate and lighten the financial burden of the aged and the poor.

He has called for a public hearing before any decision is made by the city as to how to spend the money.

His call for a public hearing follows a Monday night vote by a city council subcommittee to recommend that increases in the salaries of city councilors and the mayor.

Golden Gate Protest Wins

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Bowing to public outcry and a lawsuit, a construction firm has agreed to remove its signs from a traveling construction platform above the Golden Gate Bridge.

Allied Structural Steel Co. of Gary, Inc., contracted to replace suspension cables of the bridge, had placed "Allied" signs on both sides of two platforms spanning the main bridge cables.

The company agreed in a statement Tuesday to remove the three-foot-high white letters as soon as weather permits.

On Monday, attorneys for the Public Interest Law Center filed a suit in Superior Court in an effort to get rid of the signs.

"Allied's contract did not give it the right to assault the sensibilities of the public or to appropriate the span, converting the Golden Gate Bridge into a billboard," the suit argued.

Earlier protests included thousands of telephone calls from commuters and letters from as far away as Chicago where people saw pictures of the sign in newspapers.

"Home Cookin' "

By TONY GRANITE

NEW UNDERGROUND PAPER at Oklahoma City features the writing of an unidentified chemistry prof. Billed by its editor as "an alternative paper to change the laws, not to break them," the 24-page tab is making the rounds of the UOklahoma campus. It's called "Home Cookin'."

Louis Falco Here Today

The Louis Falco Dance Company begins a half-week residency at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst this morning, Thursday, Nov. 16, at 10:30 when Mr. Falco will conduct a master class in the Women's Physical Education Building. This event is open to the public without charge.

Friday, Nov. 17, and Saturday, Nov. 18, at 8 p.m. each day, in Bowker Auditorium, the Company will present programs with an innovative feature–the use of "live" music, by rock band Vertical Burn. This is the first time in recent years that "live" musicians will supply music at a dance event at UMass.

Dancer-choreographer Louis Falco has already taken his place among the elect of contemporary dancers.

"Dance News" has characterized Falco as "having a total physical, mental and emotional involvement in every role. He also has that sense of daring, that pushing of technique to the very edge of danger, combined with a supreme confidence in his own prowess which is usually found in one or two of the greatest Russian classicists." Since its formation in 1967, The Louis Falco Dance Company has made an impact on the dance world. The Company has won the attention of dance enthusiasts here and abroad; and Mr. Falco has collaborated with personalities in other media as resources, including Robert Indiana, the noted artist; the renowned South American sculptress, Marisol; and now the young rock group, Vertical Burn.

Included in the repertoire at UMass will be "Caviar" which was a smash hit in the purest Broadway tradition and has rapidly established itself as the most popular of Falco's creations.

Reserved tickets may be obtained by contacting the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst. Telephone 545-0202. Tickets are $1.50 to full-time UMass undergraduates and $3 to the general public. The engagement is part of the 1972/73 Massachusetts Coordinated Dance Residency Project supported by grants from the National Endowment for the Arts and The Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities.

Central Area Offers Courses

As part of the Central Area's master plan to evolve into a viable living/learning center, the Area, with the cooperation of many academic departments, is offering University courses for Central Area residents.

These regular three-credit courses are offered by the departments to facilitate community-building and to allow for greater familiarity between students that participate in these courses.

Normally, these course, when placed in the residential setting, are informal in nature and are placed in the various classrooms and lounges throughout the Area.

If you have any questions about these offerings listed below, call Ross Benjamin at Central Student Affairs (5-2041).

Engineering To Be Discussed

Massachusetts organizations now have an opportunity to learn first-hand about some of the things today's engineers are doing to solve medical, social and environmental problems.

The University of Massachusetts has set up a speaker's list of School of Engineering faculty to explain "Engineering: Its Broadened Mission " to schools and organizations throughout the state.

One basic message is that more and more engineers, at UMass and elsewhere in the profession, are now working on human problems in addition to those of technology. Another is that engineering now offers growing employment opportunities in these new, socially-relevant areas. The 25 speakers cover such topics as mass transportation, alternative auto power plants, health care delivery, spare parts for people, food engineering, energy from the sea, and many aspects of pollution.

The talks are presented without charge; groups who wish may provide a small honorarium for travel expenses. They are designed for general audiences but faculty welcome requests for more technical discussions. A full schedule of speakers and topics is available from Dean J. S. J.V. Booters Enjoy Very Successful Season

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

"It was a very enjoyable season for me," sighted JV soccer coach Jack Berryman. "We were as good or better than all twelve teams we played, but I don't mind losing as long as I know we played the best we know how." A record of 7-5 dictates a successful season by it's own right, but another key to success in sports is whether everyone gives 100% and does everything they can when they are called upon. By this criteria also, the JV booters had a very successful season.

The coach had some additional comment about his team, "I wouldn't want to single out any individuals. It wasn't the type of team where one or two players did most of the scoring, the scoring was very equally balanced. Anybody I put on the field performed well. All 25 guys were highly skilled soccer players."

The JV booters season began seven short weeks ago with Holyoke Community College providing the opening game competition. This game, and the next one vs. Worcester Polytech, were games in which the booters completely outplayed their opponents, but because their offense was not yet polished, the scores were very close, 1-0 and 2-1 respectively. The polishing up of the offense was to come within the next two weeks.

After losing to high school power Ludlow High, in a game which the booters really couldn't get themselves up (facing only a high school foe), came the big cross town rivalry game with the Lord Jeffs. Amherst was one of the better teams the JV's faced all year long and they shut out our guys (1-0) with some good strategic defense which wouldn't allow the Minutemen to get anywhere near the Amherst net, except on rare occasions. "If this game was played later on in the year," sighted Coach Berryman, "the outcome might have been very different."

As the offense still couldn't finish off on good opportunities, the Minutemen went down again, this time to Deerfield Academy. The booters actually outplayed the Preppies, but the young, aggressive high school players hustled to victory to the tune of 1-0.

It was a chilly Thursday afternoon, when the search for the scoring shoes came to an abrupt halt. The result of the finding was the total embarrassment of Greenfield Community College 6-0. From this game on, the Minutemen found the scoring touch often as they were never again to score less than three goals in a game.

Things got even better the next week, when the JV's squared off against a highly touted team from Springfield Tech CC, a team which would go on to become Community College champion, and lose only one game, this one against our JV's. By virtue of a tremendous team effort the booters handed the Techies a 3-2 drubbing.

The booters made it three victories in a row against UConn (3-2) and four days later, four in a row as they had a fiesta against Boston State (6-0). In both of these games, the Minutemen were in command throughout, although Connecticut almost caught the Minutemen in the late going when Coach Berryman gave his substitutes an opportunity to play. By now, the offense was polished. Polished well.

The streak came to an end, in a heartbreaking defeat issued to the Minutemen by Springfield College, a team which a UMass soccer team had never beaten at that time. The lead went back and forth four times but Springfield clinched the contest 4-3 with a late goal. One thing that would have to be mentioned about this game was the loss of the all important sweeper-back Jim O'Hara, who was injured after the first Springfield goal. The sweeper is the most important man in the defense, as he is the last person between the offense and the goalie, and O'Hara was a good one. Dave Himmelberger replaced O'Hara and did an outstanding job, considering he had never played the position before.

After defeating an English coached team from Keene State College 2-0, the Minutemen had their season finale against Westfield State. Westfield did things that were unorthodox, quite unorthodox, like using at least four of their varsity players on the JV squad and having two varsity players referring. Make your own conclusions. Anyway, the booters from UMass put up quite a fight and eventually hung up their shirts after losing 4-3 in overtime. They put up a great fight and came up with one heck of an effort.

What can you say when every game a team loses is lost by one goal. It must mean that the team was never really out of any contest. The Minutemen weren't. It also means that one goal here or there could have resulted in a couple more victories for the JV's.

Although the efforts were characterized by good "team effort", this team, like any team, had to have a leader, someone they could call for that extra something. Charlie Palano provided the necessary leadership for the JV's as he gave at least 110% and definitely earned the name "Charley Hustle". Palano set an excellent example for the rest of the frosh laden squad.

Steve Richter and Tom Fentin shared the goaltending duties after starting goalie Paul Peloquin led the team in the beginning, before he was called up to the varsity. The duo was quite adequate, and at times outstanding. Fentin for example, twice made great saves on penalty kicks, which are usually considered sure goals.

The JV's are finished for the season. They'll get a chance to keep in shape throughout the winter, practicing indoors. To the many of the guys who will return next year, they are already looking forward to another soccer season. Many have hopes of making the varsity squad next season. To them, the best of luck. As far as Coach Berryman goes, hopefully he will give us his services, his yelling from the sidelines, and his leadership for many years to come. It would be for the betterment of the soccer program at UMass.

Penn State vs. Okla. in Sugar Bowl

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Oklahoma and Penn State will meet here New Year's Eve in the Sugar Bowl football game, The Associated Press learned Wednesday.

The official announcement will be made Saturday at 6 p.m., but unimpeachable sources confirmed the match was made Wednesday.

It will be Oklahoma's second consecutive trip to the New Orleans classic, Penn State's first and will mark the first time since 1949 that a Southern Conference team has not been in the contest.

Confirmation of the Sugar Bowl matchup, the source said, made it virtually certain that Nebraska will play Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl with Alabama meeting Texas in the Cotton Bowl.

Louisiana State had been a possibility from the Sugar Bowl until Tuesday night, it was learned, until the Tigers decided to meet Tennessee in the Astro-Bluebonnet Bowl Dec. 30 at Houston.

Sixth-ranked Penn State with an 8-1 record, has won eight straight since losing to Tennessee 28-21 in its season opener.

The Nittany Lions, who whipped Texas 30-6 last season in the Cotton Bowl, are led by quarterback John Hufnagel and coached by Joe Paterno.

Fourth-ranked Oklahoma is 7-1 for the season after being upset by Colorado and still has games with Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado State.

The Sooners, who will be making their sixth trip to the Sugar Bowl, swamped Auburn 40-22 in last season's Sugar Bowl.

Slushing Through the Snow

By MARTY KELLEY

The Ukraine--Below the icy tundra around Leningrad, the world's most potent army to date stood in siege of this Russian fortress. And as the patriarchs of the city ate rats and dogs to stay alive, it was the impending bruteness of mounds of snow that huddled the Russians together at the feet of Napoleon for 799 days. Snow was the factor at Leningrad, what role will it play at the Stadium this Saturday afternoon?

The weather helped the "Little Colonel" at Leningrad, but said nothing at Waterloo. And greater than a century later, the most powerful force known to mankind stopped at the doorstep of Moscow and with the key to the Western World, was banished with tanks and hopes under the spite and severity of another Russian winter.

Both Hitler and Napoleon took it on the chin when it came time to face the strength of the firmament. But one of our founding fathers, George Washington by name, somehow withstood the austerity and the inclemency at Valley Forge to go on to the capital while two tyrants failed in the snow.

Now in no way, shape, form, or fashion is the intention of Dick MacPherson and his Minutemen tyrannical. But like the three forementioned hierarchies, Mac will get his chance to play in the snow this Saturday against New Hampshire, for better or for worse. He may not win the key to the Western World or the Revolutionary War (he has the Minutemen to do it), but he does have a clear cut shot at his first outright Yankee Conference title. He shared such an accolade with Connecticut last season.

How will the snow effect the game plan of the Minutemen? Offensive line coach Bob Lord feels the difference won't be felt.

"It can't effect our game plan", said Lord. "Offensively we're casting our bread upon the waters for all the marbles. Come heck or high snows, we've got to be mobile, agile, and hostile." Coach, you should have been Napoleon's attorney.

But Valley Forge, Alumni Stadium is not. The two battle grounds do have parallel significance--that of survival. For the independent birth of a nation, the Quaker Valley was a necessity. For the Yankee Conference championship, the outcome at Alumni's pastures will tell the story.

You see, although the Boardwalk Bowl and the Lambert Trophy are but whistles in the wind (and no, we won't be ranked with McNeese State any more), the UMass Minuteman football team, 1972, can still accomplish all their previous objectives. Although let's fact it, it would have been nice to be undefeated.

"At the beginning of the season we set goals", said MacPherson. "Our first objective is to win the Yankee Conference championship. We also want to be New England's number one football team. Although we've had some rough luck the last couple of weeks, the nice thing about our season is the fact that in the last two games against New Hampshire and Boston College, we can do what we set out to accomplish."

Now what do you think Napoleon thought of when the tide began to turn? "Do I get better personnel, better uniforms, more scholarships, a new office and a more loyal horse?"

Hell, no. You gotta go with what you have and make do with that. Napoleon didn't complain about injuries. Good God, there isn't a Sports Information Director in the country who could tabulate Nap's casualties. He lost part of his team on his western swing to Leningrad. On our Western Swing to Lewisburg and back up to the gut to Worcester, we lost a few comrades as well, namely John Healy and Dick Cummings.

What's nice about John and Dick is that they have a chance to mend their wounds. With Napoleon you only get one shot in life.

So Healy and Cummings return and if you think the offensive line put on one of their all time circus performances in months at Fitton, well, you're right. But the fact that Cummings was not around to block hurt their morale. And that defensive backfield desperately needs Healy to return to help Earl Brown who's still learning and those linebackers who need location. And you may even see Metallo and Berra in the backfield defensively going both ways. That only shows a lack of depth, fear, and a quick ticket for Metallo to the infirmary.

Yes, if Napoleon and Hitler had it to do over again, they would have stayed at home in front of the fireplace with their Vodka and Schnaps respectively, but Uncle George had no choice, he had to with his snowshoes. And although the choice won't be his either, Mac will take his Minutemen out in the snow this Saturday and it won't be for God, country, the key to the Western World, or for a head cold, it will be for his first outright Yankee Conference title.

Richie Allen, MVP: "I really feel wanted"

CHICAGO (AP) — Powerful Dick Allen of the Chicago White Sox, newly named Most Valuable Player of the American League, said Wednesay, "I hope I'm worthy of this honor and, actually, I thought Joe Rudi would have won it."

Dressed in a mod maroon suit with leather shoulder decorations, Allen told a news conference, "I'd like to thank all the guys I played with—I'm one guy who believes that baseball is a team effort."

First baseman Allen, who last season bolted a league leading 37 home runs and a career high of 113 RBIs while batting .308, won the trophy in a landslide vote.

The once controversial player, who wheels a 40 ounce bat like a toothpick, captured 21 out of a possible 24 first place votes and was named on all 24 ballots of the selecting panel of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

He collected the runaway total of 321 points against the runner-up 164 for outfielder Rudi of the world champion Oakland A's, who batted .305 and was named on 22 of the 24 ballots.

While reviewing his past comparatively turbulent career in eight National League seasons, Allen declared, "I have found a home here in Chicago. It really has made me feel like a human being. Before I was hidden. Now I'm a little more outgoing.

"Believe me, I won't stop until Chicago has a winner.

"This would have meant more to me had we won the pennant," Allen said. "But Wilbur Wood was a close second in the Cy Young vote, so our team did pretty good."

Third in the voting with 158 points was star reliever Sparky Lyle of the New York Yankees who saved 35 games and won 9. Rudi, Lyle and pitcher Mickey Lolich of the Detroit Tigers, who finished 10th in the poll, were the only other first-place vote-getters with one apiece.

Remainder of the Top Ten in the MVP listing were: catcher Carlton Fisk, Boston Red Sox; outfielder Bobby Murcer, Yankees; pitcher Gaylord Perry, Cleveland Indians; pitcher Wilbur Wood, White Sox; pitcher Luis Tiant, Red Sox, and shortstop Ed Brinkman, Tigers.

Since the start of the MVP award in 1931, Allen is only the second White Sox winner, preceded in 1959 by second sacker Nellie Fox.

Allen, who missed spring training entirely, finally was signed April 1 by the White Sox.

Where's UMass?

(AP) — Delaware remains ranked No. 1 in The Associated Press College Division football poll after crushing Maine 62-0 for its ninth straight victory.

The Blue Hens took 13 first place votes of a possible 18 in ratings released Wednesday, but Louisiana Tech 10-0 remained a close second after beating Eastern Michigan 24-17.

Delaware piled up 286 points and Louisiana Tech had 268.

California Poly at San Luis Obiabo ranked third with 189 points, followed by Ashland of Ohio, Tennessee State, South Dakota, North Dakota, Grambling, McNeese State and Drake.

"Let go of my leg!" It seems that some invisible force (exposed here by our X-ray vision camera) has been plaguing UMass quarterback Peil Pennington for the last two weeks. Maybe he will break away from him this Saturday afternoon when the Minutemen host the University of New Hampshire. (Photo by MDC Staff)

Double Duty For Metallo and Berra

By BILL BALLOU

It looks like Steve Schubert let the cat out of the bag at Wednesday's Varsity M Club luncheon when he told the crowd in attendance that Paul Metallo and Tim Berra were going to play in the defensive backfield in Saturday's game against New Hampshire.

Schubert, a normally candid guy anyway, mentioned almost matter-of-factly that Berra and Metallo would be seeing double duty.

Head Coach Dick MacPherson, while he didn't deny that those two would be going both ways, said that he "didn't know where Steve heard that."

Schubert was the only football player to speak, and being from New Hampshire, he said he had plenty of incentive for Saturday's game. "I come from New Hampshire," he said, "and their university (UNH) wouldn't take me. They said I wasn't smart enough."

MacPherson and Schubert also got into a bit of a "debate" about Schubert's problems with the officials during last Saturday's Holy Cross game.

Schubert said, "I thought I was held all day, but I guess you can't second guess the refs."

MacPherson replied, "Steve was trying to officiate rather than play. He's too good an athlete to be fooling around with that stuff."

MacPherson was somewhat happier this week than in the last couple of weeks with the health of his team. He said he was pleased that Dick Cummings and John Healy were back and ready to play Saturday. "Our offense," he said, "is not the same offense without the blocking of Dick Cummings. And our defense is not the same defense without John Healy."

MacPherson also reflected some on what has transpired thus far this season. He said that "at the beginning of the year the coaching staff set up as its No. 1 objective winning the Yankee Conference Championship. So far things have gone pretty well toward that goal and this Saturday we've got a good shot at achieving it."

I came no closer to my own goal of winning the door prize, but Glenn Briere echoed my sentiments as to its distribution. Briere noted that you stand a lot better chance of winning it if you come in late because they don't shuffle the tickets very well.

Needless to say, I got there early.

Holy Cross is Gone...So What?

By EARLE BARROLL

Did Holy Cross's departure from the Yankee Conference serve as a catalyst for comment? Try these out:

From Basketball Coach Jack Leaman: "I expected it. I heard it all summer at the basketball camps from the Holy Cross coaches.

"My first impressions were not to play Holy Cross at all and to suggest that the entire Yankee Conference not play them either.

"They were the ones who were begging to get into the conference. We didn't go out and ask them.

"Football and basketball will now become the money sports for Holy Cross and they don't want to waste the time and the money on the minor sports.

"From my standpoint competition isn't the factor. They haven't beaten UMass in anything in three years up until Saturday's football victory."

From Football Coach Dick MacPherson: "If they don't want me, I don't want them.

"We allowed them into our conference and since that time they haven't been an influencing or dynamic force in the league.

"The only people who suffer are in the Holy Cross athletic department."

From Athletic Director Frank McInerney: "I believe that there is a genuine concern about the reduced number of boys and the financial problem.

"I came from a private school (A.I.C.) and I understand the financial concerns private institutions must go through.

"But the one thing that intrigues me the most and which I'll be anxious to read more about is where the football and basketball programs at Holy Cross will be going and how much money will be put into them."

Dartmouth Takes Over

(AP) — Dartmouth has taken over the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press' New England college football poll as well as inching into the Ivy League lead.

The Big Green, humiliated by Yale, rebounded in fabulous fashion last Saturday, hiking their overall record to 5-1-1 with a 38-8 victory over Columbia.

The impressive triumph earned Dartmouth 15 of the 18 first place votes and a total of 177 points today in the weekly AP poll.

Holy Cross, a big surprise, took second place with 140 points after improving its record to 4-2-1 with a 28-16 upset of Massachusetts, which suffered a second consecutive loss after six victories in a row.

Yale was walloped 48-30 at Penn, but was voted third with 132 points, as Massachusetts fell to fourth with 117. Despite a 42-10 loss at Georgia Tech and a 3-5 record, Boston College was fifth with 113 points, based mainly on the Eagles tough schedule.

Rounding out the top ten were Harvard (84), Bridgeport, winner of nine games this season and 19 in a row (67), Northeastern (57), Middlebury, which ended its first unbeaten season in 36 years was ninth with 39, and undefeated Amherst was ranked 10th with 28.

Ruggers Lose Two, Tie One

By DICK FITZGERALD and STEVE FERRARA

While the UMass football team disappointed its fans by losing to Holy Cross Saturday, the UMass Rugby Club followed suit by losing two and tying one with the Hilltoppers.

In a particularly hard-hitting game reminiscent of when Boston College came to Amherst two weeks ago, the first and second teams were soundly defeated. The B side lost by a score of 26-8 and the A's lost 32-8.

The C team managed to salvage some dignity for the UMass Ruggers by battling to a 4-4 tie.

Two weeks ago Boston College came to UMass and managed to pull off two close victories by playing this same type of bone-crunching game.

Last weekend the Ruggers were at their best when they won four out of four games.

On that Saturday they soundly defeated two sides from the Portland Rugby Club 8-4 and 16-14.

Sunday's games took the UMass team north to Keene State College where under drizzling skies and on two inches of snow, they were victorious 10-4 and 12-4.

On November 24, the Ruggers will end their season against Harvard Business School in Cambridge, and on March 25, they will open their spring season with the Boston Mystics.

Whalers Robbed

BOSTON (AP) — The New England Whalers hockey team has offered a $750 reward in the hope of recovering uniforms and equipment stolen from their Boston Garden locker room.

A spokesman for the World Hockey Association team said the money will be paid for information leading to the return of the stolen items or leading to the apprehension and conviction of the thieves. The theft was discovered by a janitor early Wednesday.

Jack Kelly, coach and general manager, said the estimated value of the stolen equipment was $10,000. Large racks of uniforms, custom-made skates and hockey sticks were lost in the burglary.

The Whalers, two points off the division lead, host the division leading Cleveland Crusaders Friday night.

The club spokesman said no definite decision had been made on where replacement equipment would be obtained, should the stolen items remain lost.

Cowens Stars
Celts Romp 113-94

BOSTON (AP) — Dave Cowens scored 25 points and hauled down 19 rebounds in pacing the Boston Celtics to a 113-94 National Basketball Association victory over the Phoenix Suns Wednesday night for the Celtics' 14th victory in 15 starts.

Cowens was one of six Celtics to hit double figures as Boston's fast break offense and a hard-nosed defense were the ingredients in a 57-33 halftime advantage and a lead which was never seriously threatened.

Charlie Scott led all scorers with 33 points for Phoenix, 18 of which came in his team's 33-point third quarter.

Phoenix trailed from the outset. The Suns made a late bid in the fourth quarter with a nine-point burst to cut their deficit to 10, 89-79 with 7:36 remaining.

But the Celtics roared back with 13 straight points, eight of which belonged to Jo Jo White who turned in 18 points for the night. Don Nelson had 21 points for the Celtics, followed by Paul Silas with 14, Don Chaney with 13 and John Havlicek with 12.

Phoenix' Dick Van Arsdale reached the 10,000-point career plateau in the game. He needed 11 points and had 14 on the night.

The Patriots Goofed

The Patriots have pulled off another beauty.

This makes the fourth coach to be on their payroll at the moment. The question is what good will an interim coach, who knows virtually nothing about the team, do? Even if he is Vince Lombardi's former assistant.

Phil Bengston is not the man for the job. This is not to say that he is not a capable coach--certainly he added much to the Green Bay glory years. But the man insists that he will not stay on as the Pats' coach. He insists that he will return to San Diego where he is director of pro talent for the Chargers as soon as the season finishes.

Where does that leave the Patriots? If Bengston works a miracle, and they win a few of their remaining games, so what? Next season they'll be starting from scratch again. If they lose the rest of their games, which is highly likely, then it's a waste of some $20,000 because that's what Mr. Sullivan, the Pats' brilliant owner, is paying his "old navy buddy."

What seems totally unreasonable is that they did not go after a man who was interested in the job beyond the remainder of the season. What about Don McCafferty? It seems that a couple of years ago he was good enough to lead the Baltimore Colts to the Super Bowl Championship.

What about one of the assistants finishing out the season? At least that would have given the front office some time to search out a capable and EAGER candidate for the job. Bengston is hardly oubbling with excitement over his new position. Can you just see his:

"Ah, hi, fellas. My name's Phil. I won't be around here for too long, so if I don't learn everybody's name, please forgive me. But even though I don't know much about the set-up here, maybe we can win some ballgames anyway. Oh, by the way, did any of you guys see the Chargers on Monday night football this week?"

Seriously, the Patriots have made a big mistake. How can a team possibly get itself into the position wherein it is paying four head coaches? Why don't they hire a coach for every player. If they're going to pay four coaches, why not pay 40? The way Sullivan thinks, he probably would go for the idea. At least then no players could complain about lack of communication. They'll have 40 voices to listen to.

The damage unfortunately is done. What should be done now is to hire a permanent (if such a thing is possible with the Pats) coach BEFORE the college draft. At least the new choice would have some say as to whom the Patriots draft this year. And they do have some very high draft choices because of this year's performance and previous trades. Then they should give the coach free reins to try and do something with the team.

This year is shot, but there is talent on the team. There must be someone, somewhere, who can dig it out.

Canham Discusses 'Four More Years'

Erwin Canham, Editor-in-Chief of the Christian Science Monitor, called for "an affirmation of values that go beyond fear and selfishness" in last night's DVP-sponsored talk in Mahar Auditorium.

Speaking on the topic of "The Presidential Election and Beyond", Canham attributed President Nixon's "accidental landslide" to fear, and George Wallace's absence from the ballot. (MDC Photo by Kevin Mack)

By ED BRYANT

Calling for "an affirmation of values that go beyond fear and selfishness," Christian Science Monitor Editor Erwin Canham speculated about a second Nixon Administration before a moderate-sized crowd in Mahar Auditorium. Sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, Canham spoke extemporaneously on the topic "The Presidential Election And Beyond."

Speaking about the recent election, Canham said that "fear explains the election as well as anything else." He cited the absence of Governor George Wallace on the ballot in November as a major cause of what he termed "an accidental landslide."

Quoting President Nixon as a source, Canham said that Senator George McGovern's mistakes may have accounted for five percent of the Nixon vote. He said the major lesson to be learned from the Nixon victory was that "Centrist politics have again been shown to be the sort of politics that can win in the United States."

Canham expressed his surprise at Nixon's success in minimizing VietNam, the economy, and the Watergate scandal as issues.

Looking ahead to the politics of 1976 and beyond, Canham hypothesized that candidates will continue to seek coalitions as they have in the past. Canham refuted the popular belief that the South is becoming Republican. "Those Southerners who serve as Committee Chairmen in Congress will remain Democrats," he said.

The remainder of Canham's address dealt with possible courses of Presidential action during the next four years. Speaking first of foreign affairs, Canham expressed his belief that the end of our involvement in VietNam was near, but that "Peace in Southeast Asia is not the only issue."

He spoke well of President Nixon's diplomatic activities with the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China.

Canham cautioned, however, that, "while we have improved our relations with the superpowers, our alliances in Western Europe and with Japan must be strengthened and improved."

Turning to domestic affairs, Canham remarked on the necessity of trimming waste from the budgets of various federal programs. He spoke of the "scores of billions of dollars" wasted in defense spending, and expressed his hope that the President would make cuts there, rather than in what he termed "the good programs" in areas such as urban renewal, health care, welfare, social justice, and equality of opportunity.

Portraying Congress as "a composite of special interests," Canham spoke at length on the need for tax reform, expressing doubts as to whether "tax reform is legislatable."

Canham drew an analogy to President Franklin Roosevelt's tariff commission as a possible way to actuate tax reform; he felt a similar commission could develop an effective program to reform the present system.

The environment was Canham's next topic. He called the crisis an "opportunity for hope" as well as a cause for concern.

According to Canham, "we have to organize to find out what the score is with our environment." Canham stressed the need for strong regulatory action as well as individual voluntary action.

The problems of our environment are not national, which is what makes Canham hopeful. He expressed his wish that response to the challenge presented by the environmental crisis would lead to "action by all of us as citizens of planet Earth" which would "make it possible to make use of the United Nations as has never been done before."

The former Moderator of "Starring The Editors" concluded his address with some thoughts on "Nixon the unknown." He remarked that President Nixon is in a new phase of his life; "always before since the beginning of his public career he has been running for office."

Cahnham refused to make any predictions, but expressed the hope that President Nixon will concentrate on domestic affairs in his second administration as he did on foreign affairs in his first. "We need a tremendous therapeutic awakening," Canham said. "We need to eliminate fear, fear of change, fear of each other, fear of ethnic groups."

Tying together the question of the environment with the question of the economy, Canham stated that "the size of the Gross National Product is not the only question. A reexamination of the quality of life is very necessary."

His final remark was that if President Nixon concentrates on solving domestic problems for the next four years, his place in history would be a gratifying one, but if he does not, "it'll be a pretty dreary four years."

Following a question and answer period, refreshments were served in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

DC Continues To Buy Lettuce Despite Boycott

By HUGH OWEN

The issue of a possible lettuce boycott on this campus has caused a clash between the financial and social considerations in the purchasing of lettuce according to Joel Stoneham, Director of the Food Services Department.

"I sympathize with the plight of the migrant workers, yet it is my responsibility to buy the best product at the lowest possible prices," Stoneham said. "And if non-union lettuce is the best we can get then that is what we will buy."

Stoneham also said that until the lettuce arrives at the dining commons he has no idea whether it is union or non-union. The lettuce, he said, is purchased from the lowest bidder and the bidder does not disclose what type of lettuce it is.

Teresa Carr, a member of the United Farm Workers (UFW) and its official representative for UMass, has been trying to organize a boycott to stop this method of purchasing. "Since he (Stoneham) does not know whether he is buying union or non-union lettuce," Ms. Carr said, "then he should not buy any lettuce at all. This is the only way to assure me that non-union lettuce is not being bought."

A petition which asks that no lettuce at all be served in the dining commons is being circulated by Ms. Carr in an attempt to get Stoneham to stop buying lettuce. "He told us that if we got 4,600 signatures then he would stop buying lettuce," said Ms. Carr.

Stoneham, however, said that he had told Ms. Carr he would only "consider" ceasing to buy lettuce if confronted with such a petition and that "as long as people eat it the lettuce I will continue to serve it. My responsibility is to feed the students and I will continue to feed them lettuce if they want it."

Stoneham further said that since only about 15-20% of the lettuce on the market is union lettuce then it would be impossible to keep up a constant supply of union lettuce. Thus, to supply the dining commons with lettuce he in effect is often forced to buy non-union lettuce.

Since Stoneham apparently will not concede to the demands of Ms. Carr, she is looking in other directions for an effective boycott.

The VVAW, the Poverty Commission, and Ahora have all pledged support to the boycott. Ms. Carr hopes also to draw support from the Student Senate, the Collegian, Hillel, and the Newman Center.

Once a strong backing is obtained Ms. Carr plans to approach Chancellor Bromery to request an effective boycott of lettuce in the dining commons. Starting at the top of the administration and working down, Ms. Carr hopes to achieve some administrative support for the boycott.

Ms. Carr, when asked what steps she would take if she was denied support for the boycott, replied, "If we are unable to obtain satisfaction through administrative channels then militant action, such as the destruction of all lettuce in the dining commons, will be the only remaining solution."

Gage, President's Council Clarify Educational Goals

By JEFFREY LEVIN

"What is the function of the Student Affairs Office?" was the question directed at Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert Gage at a meeting of the (Student Government Association) President's Council last night.

Gage replied that his office is responsible for setting the educational aims of the University. He also said that Student Affairs must make sure that all types of students are provided for. For instance, he said that engineering as well as psychology majors must be afforded equal opportunity to achieve their educational goals.

The third goal of the Student Affairs Office is, "to find out the needs of the students," said Gage. The last goal was the chief topic of discussion between Dr. Gage and members of the President's Council.

Recently a motion called the Community Policy Council proposal was brought up in the Student Senate. This proposal would establish a student advisory board to assist the Vice Chancellor in Student Affairs policy. Members of the President's Council would like to have their group become the student advisory board.

The President's Council is a newly-formed body composed of all of the Area Government Presidents and the Speaker of the Student Senate. It was established to function as an advisory agency to SGA President Larry Ladd.

According to Ladd, the Council seeks two goals. The first is to strengthen each Area Government. The second goal is to take some power away from the Student Affairs Office and give it to the Area Governments. Ladd said that only recently has Area Governments been given a voice in University policy. He remarked that at the present, the Vice Chancellor, the Student Senate, and the SGA President all must deal with Area Governments.

According to Dr. Gage, the President's Council would not serve as an effective student advisory board to the Vice Chancellor. He told the Council that departments in the operational sphere of Student Affairs are in dire need of student advice. "We've been eager to have a student advisory group to Dave Johnson of the Security force. We really need it now" declared Gage.

He said that the other departments that need student advisors are Health Services, Counseling, Career Planning and Admissions. He revealed that he advocates the establishment of student advisory boards to each of these departments.

It is Gage's contention that representatives from each of these departmental boards in addition to two Area Government representatives would constitute an effective student advisory board to the Vice Chancellor. "This type of advisory board would help me to hear from people who are informed about the issues," declared Gage.

According to SGA President Larry Ladd, the composition of the proposed board will continue to be a topic of discussion of the President's Council before action is taken on the matter.

January Break Will Be No Vacation For Faculty

By STEVE SECHE

The Office of Provost, in a memo circulated to all department heads, chairmen, and faculty members, has directed faculty and graduate assistants to involve themselves in "educational activity" during the January class break.

The memo, signed by Robert L. Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, states, "We must consider that the obligations and responsibilities of a faculty member and graduate assistant continue during the January (class break) period."

"At the same time," Gluckstern continued, "any suggestion that the January class break is being used as a winter vacation is likely to bring strong public and legislative reaction."

This year is the first that UMass has operated under a 4-1-4 calendar, and according to Gluckstern, several questions were raised concerning faculty "obligations" during the month-long hiatus.

While Gluckstern stated that it was "clear that faculty members are under obligation for continued University service during the entire academic year," he allowed that the "nature" of these obligations could be determined at the departmental level.

David Booth, Presiding Officer of the Faculty Senate said that the intersession would offer faculty an opportunity to accomplish a lot of work they are unable to complete during the semester.

"I assume that a lot of faculty will be travelling during this period," Booth said. "Many are involved in research work; there will be seminars they will want to attend," and Booth feels that the new calendar will give them the opportunity.

Mac Edds, Dean of the Faculty of Natural Science and Math agreed that the directive from the Provost need not be inhibiting. "Scholarly endeavor embraces an enormous array of activities," he said.

"It is a very difficult time, being the first such semester break we have attempted here," he said. "But," he added, "it can be a very creative time."

Responding to Gluckstern's admonition that "any suggestion" of the class break being used as a "winter vacation" by faculty members would likely provoke a strong public and legislative reaction, Edds said, that "anything that articulates the university position is a protection against an unwarranted attack by the legislature."

Gluckstern's memo stated that "at the very least", there were plans "to provide space on next year's Faculty Report and Evaluation Form for each person to describe his or her activity during the forthcoming class break."

Among the activities outlined in the memo as "appropriate during the January break", were: informal short courses with students; planning a coherent program for subsequent January breaks; research, writing, or other forms of traditional scholarship; intensive planning of new courses for the spring semester; off-campus professionally related public services; faculty colloquia or seminars.

Board of Ed. Adopts Plan Against Racial Imbalance

BOSTON (AP) — A plan to racially balance all but 14 of Boston's schools by September, 1974, was adopted by the state Board of Education yesterday and forwarded for court approval.

Currently there are about 65 imbalanced schools in the system. Under the definition established by Massachusetts 1965 racial imbalance law an imbalanced school is one with more than 50 per cent non-white enrollment.

The plan approved by the state board yesterday was rushed to completion to meet a court-ordered deadline after the board voted last week to reject a short-term balancing plan submitted by the Boston School Committee.

The court mandate was one result of Boston's suit against the Education Board over its decision last year to withhold $52 million in school aid funds from the city because of Boston's alleged failure to comply with the imbalance law.

Superior Court Judge Robert F. Sullivan ordered the money released to Boston but directed the city and the state board to prepare within two months a short-term balancing plan.

Sullivan must now review the plan submitted by the state in order to have it "effective and in operation on or before Nov. 21," the deadline he established in the Sept. 27 ruling.

The foundation of the state plan is a redrawing of school district lines for elementary, intermediate and high schools across the city, said Education Commissioner Thomas J. Curtin.

The new districts are based on a decision already made by the city to have elementary schools serve grades kindergarten-5, intermediate schools 6-8, and high schools 9-12.

The Task Force on Racial Imbalance, designated by the state board to draw up the short term plan, said the new district lines will require a "moderate increase" in busing or other transportation for students in intermediate schools. The task force report said the plan reqquires "very little" busing for elementary school students.

Most high school students will find themselves closer to their schools than they are under the existing districts, the report said.

Most pupil transfers to achieve racial balance must be made by September, 1973, under the state-approved plan. Only those transfers which require substantial rennovation of school buildings to accomodate new students will be put off until the 1974-75 school year.

Foreign Student May Challenge Oath

By MARK VOGLER

John K. Jessup, Foreign Student Advisor at the university, told the Collegian last night that one of the foreign students is exploring the possibilities to bring a suit against the loyalty oath on behalf of all foreign nationals.

"At best, it's exploratory so far," Jessup said. At the present time a Canadian student is getting advice from a lawyer in Boston. Just in case the class action suit initiated in Cambridge fails, he wants to check out the possibility that court action against the oath could be taken by all foreign students."

The Massachusetts loyalty oath is supposed to be administered to all employees and teachers who work for the Commonwealth. No where in the statute, however, is there an exemption granted for foreign students and teaching assistants. And for those foreign nationals who agree to sign the oath, loss of citizenship from their homeland is conceivable.

The oath, as enacted by the state in 1949, reads as follows: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States of America and the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and that I will oppose the overthrow of the government of the United States of America or of this Commonwealth by force, violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional method."

Jessup said last night that the Foreign Student Advisors Board would play no part in a suit, but is definitely concerned with the status of its students.

"We're sort of a midwife. We are primarily concerned with protecting the interests of the foreign students. I think it would be a good idea if there was an exemption granted for all foreign students. I feel it would be in their best interests."

Jessup said that the foreign student advisor's office has already begun to contact several embassies of foreign countries. He stated that their present response hasn't been good. The three countries that have replied in regard to the oath, have expressed disapproval.

"Canada isn't too happy at all. The Canadian students wouldn't automatically lose their citizenship if they signed the oath, but they conceivably could. There are laws on their books which say that a Canadian can lose his citizenship for swearing to an oath of another country," Jessup remarked.

"Nigeria and Germany said that they weren't too pleased with the matter. They raised objection to the oath, opposing it on principle. The Canadian government has made a bigger legal issue of the matter."

Jessup pointed out that some of the foreign students have already signed to the oath because they feel their governments won't object to it. He said that there are at least 100 foreign students who are employed by the university, but he didn't know just how many had not signed the oath.

"It's a question of individual governments," Jessup declared. How they feel is what counts. If the students do have to sign the oath to maintain their jobs, it's conceivable that they could lose their nationality. I think that the oath has put quite an imposition on the foreign nationals."

Jessup said that the foreign nationals presently employed by the university and who have not signed the oath are protected up to next Wednesday. He says that he advises the students who are pressured to sign the oath, not to do so because of the pending litigation.

Court To Decide Action On 'Bill Of Complaint'

By MARK VOGLER

A court hearing will be held this morning in Hampshire Superior Court to determine the action to be taken on the Bill of Complaint filed by the 18 UMass faculty and staff members of Amherst in opposition to the state's loyalty oath.

The group, represented by Att. William A. Norris of Cummington, was granted a temporary restraining order Monday by Judge Samuel Tisdale.

James Matlack, an English professor at the university and a spokesman for the UMass-Amherst plaintiffs, said last night that this morning's session would simply be "a round of arguments to issue a preliminary injunction which would be good for an unspecified time limit until the case is heard on its merits.

Although optimistic that the injunction would be granted, Matlack explained that there were several possibilities that could develop from the court session: 1) The case could be heard on its merits at which point the restraining order would be continued indefinitely, 2) An extension of the restraining order could be granted with an established time limit for further hearing, 3) The state could deny a request for an extension of the restraining order.

Matlack said in the unlikely event that the state would oppose the injunction request, they would probably seek a denial through Massachusetts Assistant Attorney General Robert Mayo.

Mayo has handled the state side of the oath issue for the past three years and has carried it to the United States Supreme Court.

He lost an argument to a Pittsfield court when Berkshire Community College faculty and staff members won an extension to a restraining order. He also failed in his appeal to the Supreme Judicial Court.

Matlack said that there's a question as to whether the state would choose to send Mayo again or decide to hear the case of the UMass group on its merits. He doubts that Mayo will represent the state because a precedent may have been established by the B.C.C. group.

Regardless as to what transpires from the court session, the UMass plaintiffs are protected at least until Wednesday when a hearing reconvenes in Middlesex Superior Court, Cambridge to weigh the merits of the class action suit filed by three UMass-Boston faculty members earlier this week.

The suit prevents the personnel officers of all three university campuses from terminating employees for failure to take the loyalty oath. The action came just hours before the Wednesday 5:00 P.M. deadline which was established by the university.

Matlack said the Amherst group will meet tonight at 8:00 in the Campus Center (room 917) to discuss further details of the court action taken and the group's policy. He urged members who wished to join the suit to attend.

UM Takes Highest Rent Bid

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

BOSTON - UMass officials in signing a five-year lease for office space here not only accepted the highest bid available, but also rejected bids that were offered at half the $142,000 per year total.

A study of rental records also revealed that the rental rates per square foot for the offices of state education agencies average $3.46 compared to $9.00 for the present UMass offices at 1 Washington Mall, two blocks from the president's former office on Devonshire St.

Secretary William I. Cowin of Administration and Finance said the present rate is much higher than other Commonwealth rents being paid in Boston. The $700,000 five-year lease also represents a $100,000 per year increase over their previous rent.

The university posted bids twice and on each occasion selected the $9.00 per square foot Washington Mall bid with $5.34 being the average bid for the first posting, and $7.19 for the second posting.

The UMass trustees asked the state Supreme Court Nov. 1 for a temporary injunction to force the state to pay rental costs for the office space.

The action came after Cowin refused to authorize payment on the lease and two other rental agreements. The case has been taken under advisement.

Frank W. Phillips, UMass vice-president of financial affairs, said Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn advised the university that it had the authority to enter into the lease.

"The university's fiscal autonomy permits it to obligate the Commonwealth to pay for it," he said.

In his opinion, Quinn ruled the the UMass trustees "have the autonomous authority...to enter into a lease for a term of years for new office space with rental to be paid from state appropriations."

But Cowin said the lease and rental agreements raised a significant question over the right of a public agency to spend "enormous amounts of money in ways divorced from the fiscal constraints that apply to most governmental agencies in Massachusetts."

He said there might exist a moral obligation to pay something for the use of the property, but added that no obligation will be recognized for rental after Dec. 1 absent the securing of proper approvals.

Many people have an emotional view toward the educational agencies because of the subject matter that they deal with. There is a feeling, he continued, that these agencies should be more independent of the political process than the normal state agency.

"I question the wisdom of relieving them of normal administrative constraints on how meoney is expended."

In an editorial policy, the Collegian criticized UMass President Robert C. Wood for signing a five-year lease for a "palatial" new office when the university is faced with a "serious fiscal crisis."

UMass has been involved recently with a series of monetary controversies including a report released this week by the Associated Press that Phillips receives $588 weekly as a UMass vice-president and $84 weekly as a UMass lecturer.

Wood said Phillips received an extra salary in order to "encourage him to make a special contribution to the university."

Study At U of Bologna

Speak Italian? Well, even if you don't, you could be studying at the University of Bologna this summer, from about June 16 to Aug. 25.

The UMass 1973 Summer Program in Bologna is accepting applications for its seven-week study session of Italy--its language, its history, and its people. Courses will be in language, art history, history of Italy, literature, and cultural anthropology; and all except language will be taught in English.

Interested students should contact Asst. Prof. Anthony Terrizzi at 429 Herter Hall. Dr. Terrizzi, resident director of this year's program, will meet with interested students Mon., Nov. 20, at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, 905-909.

Students from other colleges and universities may also apply for admission to the program. Applicants must be in good academic standing at their schools, application deadline is March 15, and enrollment will be limited to about 65.

Classes will be in the Bologna Center of Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, a modern air-conditioned building at the University of Bologna, close to the center of Bologna.

An estimated cost of $875 will cover air transportation to and from the U.S., tuition, health and library fees, travel and lodging in Italy, and partial board in Bologna. For the two weeks after the session ends, students will be free to travel, at additional expense.

2 Killed, Emergency Declared In La.

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) - An area state of emergency was declared here Thursday after two blacks were killed when law officers moved to clear out students who had taken over the Southern University administration building.

Gov. Edwin Edwards said a state of emergency for East Baton Rouge Parish county was declared after Sheriff Al Amiss learned of stepped-up purchases of guns and ammunition in the area.

Sale of firearms also was suspended and the mayor was empowered to set a curfew if necessary.

Coroner Hippolyte Landry said the victims were killed by either buckshot or shrapnel from exploding grenades or bombs. Both had head injuries, he said.

One of the slain men was identified as Denver A. Smith, 20, of New Roads. The other was unidentified.

Trouble continued on the campus through the afternoon. Edwards said fires extensively damaged two buildings and a bomb exploded in another.

The campus was blocked by state police and sheriff's deputies. One hundred National Guardsmen were on the campus and 400 more were ordered out as a bolster force.

"There would have been no violence had not the students fired or thrown the first tear gas," Edwards told a news conference, noting he had seen film of the incident showing a cannister hurled toward officers as they approached the occupied building.

He said he would make no more efforts to solve student problems "if they do not have enough confidence in me to go back to classes peacefully and can give me time to solve their problems."

The 9,000-student Baton Rouge campus and the 2,900-student New Orleans campus of the university-the nation's largest predominantly black university-have been embroiled in boycotts since mid-October when they began pressing their demands for more student control of administrative affairs.

Newsmen who tried to talk to students were rebuffed throughout the afternoon and telephone lines to dormitories were cut off after the campus was closed.

Shortly before the students were routed from the building, one girl spoke to a reporter by telephone from the president's office. "I'm going to give you the accurate situation," she said.

"We came up here to talk to President Leon Netterville this morning about the students being arrested. Dr. Netterville said he had a meeting at the state board of education at 10 a.m. We stated we would wait here until he returned and he agreed...we have not taken over the building. We had no idea that the National Guard would be out there accusing us of taking over the building. Now they are out there shooting tear gas."

Her reference to the National Guard apparently referred to state troopers and sheriff's officers in riot gear.

The university was closed and all students except those who live on campus in dormitories were ordered home.

Accounts pieced together by authorities indicated the trouble began when students, who have been demanding a greater voice in college affairs, took over the administration building. Another crowd of students, estimated by police at 2,000, gathered outside the building.

Police ordered the students to move and, according to officials, a tear gas grenade was fired from the crowd at the officers. The students started throwing things and police responded with tear gas.

"Nobody shot one round," Sheriff Al Amiss of East Baton Rouge Parish County told the governor, who rushed to the campus.

In Brief...

Reporter Farr Freed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Newsman William T. Farr was jailed briefly Thursday for refusing to obey a judge's order to disclose the source of a story he wrote while covering the Charles Manson murder trial.

Farr was ordered freed on his own recognizance about 3-1/2 hours later, however.

Police Quell Prison Riot

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — State police used tear gas Thursday to quell a brief disturbance at the huge Eastern State Correctional Institution near here after inmates assaulted three guards, seized the maximum security block and set fire to mattresses.

The rebelling inmates held the block for nearly three hours.

Communist Nations Invited To Talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Western Allies yesterday invited five Communist bloc countries to join them Jan. 31 to prepare a conference on troop cuts in central Europe.

The United States sent individual notes to four countries of the eastern bloc: the Soviet Union, Hungary, Poland and Czechoslovakia. Similar notes to the same four were dispatched by the foreign offices of Britain, Canada, West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg.

An invitation to East Germany, a country with which the United States has no diplomatic relations, was sent by the West German government.

"The hope is that the proposal will be acceptable to the governments which receive it," State Department press officer Charles W. Bray said.

The invitation is regarded a formality as it, in effect, accepts a Soviet proposal that preparatory talks on "mutual and balanced force reductions" — MBFR — should start approximately two months after the preliminary conference on European security and cooperation begins in Helsinki Nov. 22.

Since 1966 the Soviet Union and its allies have been proposing an overall political conference on security and cooperation in Europe.

The two sides finally agreed last May to accept a loose linkage between the two issues and to negotiate them in "parallel but separate" conferences. Agreement on the timing was reached last September.

Because of the complexity of the troop reduction issue, American specialists caution that it might take years before agreement can be reached on reduction of forces in the heart of Europe.

France, which under the late President Charles De Gaulle, withdrew from the military structure of NATO, will not participate in the MBFR though there are two divisions of French soldiers stationed on German soil.

There is no agreement as yet on where the MBFR preparatory meeting should take place. The Western allies are understood to have proposed Switzerland.

Heavy Bombing Continues On N. Viet Supply Lines

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. planes kept up intensive bombing of North Vietnamese supply lines yesterday devastating an enemy truck park. Fighting on the northern front was reported the heaviest in two months.

Air Force and 7th Fleet fighter-bombers flew more than 270 strikes and B52 Stratofortresses 30 missions against enemy targets in the southern panhandle of North Vietnam Wednesday and yesterday, the U.S. Command reported.

Pilots reported knocking out 68 trucks loaded with ammunition, almost half of them in a vehicle park off the main highway near Quant Khe, 65 miles northwest of the demilitarized zone between the Vietnams.

The trucks were concealed under thick jungle cover but were photographed by unmannered U.S. reconnaissance planes.

Air Force Phantom jets hit the trucks before they could move out under cover of darkness.

All the raids were below the 20th Parallel in accordance with a U.S. pledge not to bomb north of the line during the current peace talks. This keeps Hanoi, the capital, and Haiphong, the main port, off limits to American pilots.

They raised to 1,560 the reported number of tactical air strikes mounted by U.S. planes against North Vietnam since Nov. 9, when the blitz was intensified.

The attacks are in response to what U.S. officials call a substantial enemy supply push into South Vietnam aimed at beating any cease-fire deadline.

B52s dumped tons of bombs south of the Barthelemy Pass, hitting supply convoys on their way to the Plain of Jars in northern Laos, where North Vietnamese troops have been attacking.

The U.S. Command also reported American fighter-bombers and B52s flew dozens of missions in support of South Vietnamese troops in battle around the provincial capital of Quang Tri on the northern front.

Government marines and airborne battalions killed 59 enemy troops at a cost of five dead and 41 wounded the Saigon command reported. The bodies of 25 North Vietnamese soldiers slain by air strikes were found.

A five-hour fight Wednesday was the heaviest combat on the northern front since last Sept. 16, when Quang Tri was recaptured from enemy forces who had occupied it for nearly five months.

Enemy gunners poured hundreds of shells into government positions to cover what the Saigon command reported was considerable movement in the area.

Hanoi Will Reject Agreement Changes

PARIS (AP)-On the eve of Hanoi peace negotiator Le Duc Tho's return to Paris, North Vietnam warned the United States yesterday it will reject any major changes in the draft peace agreement.

Tho is due here from Moscow today and is expected to resume his secret negotiations with President Nixon's security adviser Henry A. Kissinger in the next few days. There was no official word on the date of Kissinger's arrival in Paris.

Communist delegates at the 167th session of the semipublic peace talks repeated their charges that the United States was stepping up the war while trying to back out of the agreement negotiated here last month between Kissinger and Tho.

North Vietnamese delegate Xuan Thuy told the three-hour meeting "we resolutely reject all the pretexts put forth by the United States and Saigon to demand modification of the substance of the agreement."

The Hanoi delegation spokesman Nguyen Thanh Le recalled that Kissinger told a Washington news conference Oct. 26 that only minor drafting changes are needed to complete the still unsigned agreement in a final secret session with Tho.

"If the United States is willing, we can complete agreement in less than an hour," Le told newsmen.

The acting Saigon delegate Nguyen Xuan Phong reiterated his South Vietnam's government's vigorous objections to parts of the draft agreement.

The chief U.S. negotiator, William J. Porter, avoided any reference to the points still under dispute, but pleaded for moderation in the talks scheduled to resume Nov. 30. The delegations agreed to skip next week's regular session because of Thanksgiving Day.

"Each of us is aware that the restoration of peace in Vietnam is approaching," Porter told the meeting. "Each of us is equally well aware of the efforts being made to refine and perfect the accomplishments of negotiation so that a settlement fair to all will result.

"It is reasonable, therefore, to expect that our deliberations in this forum be consistent with the good will and seriousness required for productive negotiations."

More Test Controls Urged For Human Guinea Pigs

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) - The government was urged yesterday by a major scientific organization to further tighten its regulations on human guinea pig experimentation - so as to avoid such things as "a repetition of experiences of the Tuskegee study" concerning syphilis in Alabama blacks.

The American Public Health Association did so in adopting a resolution largely motivated by the recent disclosure, through an Associated Press story, of the details and aftermath of a U.S. Public Health Service experiment among syphilitic male Negroes in Tuskegee, Ala., begun some 40 years ago.

A key disclosure was that penicillin was not given to the patients long after that wonder drug became available as a cure for syphilis.

The AP story triggered a full-scale investigation by the federal Health and Welfare Department, which recently ordered the experiment officially terminated.

But the investigation still is in progress.

The Tuskegee study in 1932 involved 600 blacks. At the beginning of the study and 200 showed no signs of syphilis were used for purposes of comparison with the 400 men who had the disease. During the study at least twenty eight men died as a direct result of syphilis and the figure could have been higher, according to a health official.

In its action yesterday, the APHA specifically urged the government to tighten human experimentation regulations affecting test subjects drawn from "institutionalized or other 'captive' populations," so as to assure their protection.

And, among other things, the organization urged that new steps be taken to inform such participants of "changed circumstances" that might arise during the course of a human experiment, "including heretofore unknown side effects of the treatment employed or cures for their particular ailment."

In this connection, the APHA implicitly urged the government to see to it that scientists and others in charge of such experiments pay "closer attention ... to monitoring of ongoing research or altered research plans or other changed circumstances."

"Such monitoring of ongoing research," the organization said, "would help to avoid a repetition of experiences of the Tuskegee study, where penicillin was withheld from the subjects long after it became the accepted cure for syphilis."

Seminar Examines White Racism

By CINDY GONET

Dictionary definition of "black" is dark-complexioned, soiled, dirty, evil, wicked, harmful, sad, dismal, disgraceful, gloomy sullen and angered. "White" is having the color of pure snow, blank, morally or spiritually pure spotless, innocent, free from evil intent, harmless, auspicious, and fortunate. The connotations of "white" and "black" were discussed at the Marathon of the School of Ed's presentation entitled White-On-White.

Al Alschuler and Gerald Weinstein, professors at UMass directed consciousness-raising discussion topics, role-plays, simulations, films and tapes.

The White-on-White activities were designed to help white people assist white people in understanding the nature of racism. The event was set up so that those participating could develop the capacity to interpret thoughts and actions from a more humane point of view.

WOW (White-On-White), started with 6 definition groups which met for 2 hours. Each group performed different exercises to perceive what statements discussed could be interpreted as racist. Said one participant, "It helped me. I'd never thought the things I said could have a racist interpretation."

Some statements considered as racism and prejudice were "I don't understand what you people were saying; On the whole, the educated, the upper classes, the emotionally mature and the deeply religious are much less racist; Other ethnic groups had to struggle, why is this so different?"

After the discussions there was a break of 3 media presentations "A Time For Burning", "Troublemakers", and a night feature with Marlon Brando.

A simulation went on simultaneously with a tape of Art Thomas. The simulation was a "seven minute" day. It tested the perceptions of power relationships in social institutions in the context of racism. In the act of role-playing, each day was 7 minutes long, and each night was 2 minutes long. The roles assigned were those of student, teacher, administration, a newsman, and a policeman. The ensuing interaction centered around a racial erruption at a high school.

In the processing, those involved learned to deal with a racial problem on the basis of power relationships between the students and administration rather than on the basis of color.

The tape of Art Thomas was a lecture to a group of counseliors in Dayton, Ohio. Thomas is a doctoral candidate at UMass and taught school in Dayton. Due to racial discrimination in the schools Thomas took the Cleveland Board of Education to court.

It Doesn't Really Matter What Clothes You Wear...

By A. KENT BEST

Where a student is attending school, often determines whether a student is subject to a dress code, length of hair code and whether a student must stand and recite the Pledge of Allegiance.

These were the topics presented by Dave Schimmel, Associate Dean of Education, Thursday morning during the "marathon" week at the school of education.

Schimmel said, "From reciting the Pledge of Allegiance to remaining silent during prayer periods, the civil rights of the student cannot only be infringed upon, but totally neglected."

Some 45 people attended the one hour function, in which groups were formed to analyze five cases that have gone to various courts of law for a ruling on whether the school codes were of an unconstitutional nature.

The groups chose chair-persons to decide on their own ideas and then the final decisions were presented in a discussion type arena.

The two most relevant cases that are of a controversial nature was a school board that owned a great variety of dress regulations including the length of one's hair, to the length of a girl's dress.

The other case that seemed most interesting to the groups was the student who refused to stand up and recite the Pledge of Allegiance and by the way the Supreme Court upheld the decision that the student was completely legitimate in doing this as long as he was not inciting any other visible disruption.

Open Forum Held on Boltwood Walk

By THOMAS BARNES

The Amherst Chamber of Commerce sponsored an open forum Wednesday night where members of the Amherst Redevelopment Authority answered questions and received opinions from community residents and businessmen regarding the Boltwood Walk Plan for the redevelopment of the Central School Area of Amherst Center.

Boltwood Walk is a plan proposing the construction of a multi-purpose complex which would include up to 150 residential units for the elderly in three apartment buildings, about 15 commercial facilities (shops, ice cream parlors, etc.), a community health center, a recreational facility with a few buildings that will remain on the site and be incorporated into the program.

The meeting Wednesday night was the last in a series of meetings between the ARA and community representatives. The next step is the final acceptance or rejection of the plan which will be decided by town votes cast at local polling places in Amherst on November 27.

Most of the discussion dealt with the financial feasability of the project and the traffic and parking situation that would be created by the concentration of new residents and businesses.

In response to a question about the economics of Boltwood Walk, Jack Roetter of the ARA said that the basis of the plan is that it be 'self-liquidating", that is, the planners have conservatively appraised the costs of construction and maintainance and if the "worst" were to happen financially in the execution stage, the project would at least break even.

Town Assessor McDermott gave a brief talk on the finances of the plan and agreed that the figures were conservative (the least that could be expected) and gave his assurance that it was sound planning. The ARA expects the plan to pay for itself in five years.

In response to questions about the impact of the Boltwood Walk Plan on the parking and traffic problems in Amherst, Jack Roetter said, "We can't solve and aren't trying to solve the problems of traffic and parking in Amherst. We are concerned with the problems we are bringing up."

He went on to explain that overall parking space in the complex area and near surrounding business establishments will actually be increased according to the plan. Mr. Roetter said, "We have provided sufficient parking for what we put in there plus a little extra."

Ray Werbe of the ARA suggested that those seriously concerned with the traffic problem in Amherst ought to approach town officials with their ideas and get a separate project going that could perhaps run simultaneously with the Boltwood plan and have the problems solved by the time the Boltwood proposals became a reality.

Mrs. Peg Roberts of the ARA said she felt one of the main problems with Amherst is that the center of town is becoming little more than a throughway for a large percentage of traffic as they drive to other areas of town. She said that Boltwood Walk is a plan to bring new life into the center so that it will remain the center of town.

In a summary of what she thought it should be like to be "downtown", she said, "It should be a place where you can stroll around, meet friends, watch shoppers and traffic. It should be a great place to go. The center of town should be a place where people should go to satisfy needs and it should be a lively and pleasant area."

A question was raised as to whether or not the townspeople could be sure that the proposed buildings would be built after the independent developers hired by the ARA began construction on the site and Mr. Roetter explained that the ARA has absolute control over the land to be developed. They have control over what is to be built and which developers will be chosen to do the job.

Finally, Mr. Roetter said, "What we want to do here is stimulate something. We want to bring business back into Amherst center from surrounding areas so that the town can profit."

Watsa Theatre To Appear Monday

The Watsa Community Theatre of Brooklyn, N.Y., will appear here next Monday evening, Nov. 20, under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council.

As part of the 1972/73 Third World Cultural Series, the Wastsa Community Theatre will perform three one-act plays by Clay Goss on stage at Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Clay Goss, young black playwright and novelist, has been writer-in-residence at Howard University in Washington, D.C. Mr. Goss is the author of "Bill Pickett, Black Bulldogger", a novel for young readers, soon to be released to school systems throughout the nation. "Andrew", "Home-Cookin" and "Our Sides", his plays to be given at UMass Nov. 20, reflect the reality of the inner self of America's black community. Howard Thompson, reviewing Mr. Goss' works for "The New York Times", has characterized the plays as "striking in conception". He notes "All hinge on the past, in reference to incident, people and neighborhood."

Tickets to the single performance by the Wastsa Community Theatre are $1 to UMass undergraduates and $1.50 to others, and may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before curtain.

Stop It NOW

Two blacks were killed yesterday when police moved to stop a building takeover at predominantly black Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Police officials claim that the only weapon used by police was tear gas, but somehow two people lay dead, by police determination either of shotgun wounds or shrapnel wounds.

We question whether the police would have resorted to the use of teargas so quickly if Southern U. was not a predominantly black school. We question the police contention that teargas was the only thing used by themselves. We strongly question whether two people would lie dead this morning if Southern U. was not a predominantly black school.

This incident comes all too close on the heels of the last Tuesday's election for people not to feel uneasy. Two separate incidents, those at Kent and Jackson State, both involving the death of students, have occurred in the last four years. Must we look forward to FOUR MORE YEARS of the same? It's time for sanity to rule in this country. Repression must be stopped NOW, or we can look forward to more of the same horrors.

Good Usage And Rhetoric

The recent decision of the Faculty Senate to continue the Rhetoric requirement is an unfortunate decision. It states that body's faith in a process which does not accomplish its aims, and uses coercion, albeit unsuccessfully, as a necessity in the enforcement of that process. Students should not be forced to take Rhetoric, particularly in view of the program's failure, but they should not be required to do so even if the program were an overwhelming success.

A letter in Tuesday's paper chided opponents of the Rhetoric requirement, citing previous letters to the editor as examples of a serious deficiency of self-expression on the part of the authors of those letters. Another letter in the same edition came from the Speaker of the Student Senate, who remarked, "Positive actions are being done." To use these letters to demonstrate poor use of the English language is quite simple to do. Professors could contribute forgettable phrases they've read on exams. Any undergraduate could transcribe a conversation with a friend, and be shocked at the use of the language. Finally there's Marty Kelley, who lets the words fly without regard to the placement of subject or verb.

Anyone, with the slightest effort, could make the case that students are all too often poor in verbal self-expression. He or she would be correct. This was not, however, the issue at stake in the Faculty Senate Debate.

The Faculty Senate did not debate whether the little monsters could speak or write eloquently. It was agreed that students are barely able to request permission to go to the bathroom. Their debate centered on whether or not an unsuccessful Rhetoric Program should be continued. Their final determination was that it should be extended, since the goals of the Program were admirable goals. It is my feeling that the Faculty Senate is overstepping its authority in so doing. No one can legislate literacy; no one should try.

The value of words is different for each individual. Many politicians sell the English language daily for thirty pieces of silver. Many so-called philosophers trade semantics for philosophy and are successful in the attempt. Many people don't wish to use correct English. Rebellion runs deep in us all.

George Orwell warned that language can be used to subjugate. The belief that there is a correct usage of the English language is potentially a totalitarian concept. The freedom to abuse the language is an essential freedom. Censorship is far more dangerous and anything that might be censored.

Today's undergraduate is prone to punctuate his sentences with "like" and "you know" where a comma might properly be placed. He or she does so either deliberately or out of laziness. If a horse can be led to water but not made to drink, so can a lazy student be forced to take Rhetoric, but not forced to use the language properly.

There is no real need to worry about the student's use of the language. There are built-in safeguards in the system which make further worry unnecessary. If a student writes a totally incomprehensible exam, he or she will not pass the course. Each student must earn 120 credits to be graduated; the standards for receiving credit for a course vary from one professor to the next. If 120 credits worth of professors give a student an average of C, the student should be graduated. He or she will, or will not, need to use the language properly according to the demands of the life in which he or she finds himself or herself; it is my experience that most people survive with an imperfect knowledge of the language. The need for self-expression should not be exaggerated.

Compulsion runs counter to the philosophy which should guide this institution. The University should not act as intellectual guardian to its students; they are both too old and too stubborn for such treatment to be effective. Perhaps the teaching of Rhetoric should be forbidden; that might stir up interest where interest was previously low. The correct course, in my humble opinion, is to hope that a generation of students will arise which cherishes the power of verbal expression, and to live in anticipation of that day.

The Board of Trustees have the power to overturn the Faculty Senate's decision. I would hope that they would do so. The present requirement does not work, it is unfair, and it gives the incoming student a bad taste in the mouth which subverts the basic intentions of an institution of learning. With the right people behind it, anything can be made distasteful. Save good usage; don't force it on people. Hoa binh.

Insidious Projections Of Racism

By YACUNDU SUKARE

Once again we see the insiduous projections of racism in the Daily Collegian, "a free and responsible press", on Wednesday, November 15, 1972 as it reported the so-called Jazz Workshop, which took place on Tuesday night at the Student Union Ballroom.

Its front page picture featuring, Marilyn Dyer, was undoubtedly consistent with Feminism Explored at Women's Day at the School of Education's Marathon. Dwight Allen's plantation is exploring all facets of the popular feminist movement, which has been riding herd over the continuing oppression of Chicano, Puerto Ricans, Native Americans and Blacks who have struggled against this racist imperialist systems in past decades. White women have come to the forefront quite rightly so, and both Dwight Allen and the Collegian explore it so they might be consistent with the amorphous politics of Affirmative Action. Last year, they discussed Institutional Racism, this year the popular topic is Feminism.

Let us see how consistent the front page of the Daily Collegian of Wednesday, November 15, 1972, has been. The caption of the front page picture featuring vocalist Marilyn Dyer refers to the directors Dr Fred Tillis and Max Roach. Who is Marilyn Dyer? Another Chris Conners or June Christie? Who is Fred Tillis or Max Roach! Their names should resound through this campus or else American education has been faulty, or perhaps racist. Max Roach has made one of the greatest contributions to American Music as an artist, composer, arranger, teacher in the history of this country. Here is a great artist in our midst, who in the space of six weeks, developed a first rate choir in our University Community with young black singers who have never had any previous academic training in music. But Professor Max Roach and his beautiful, magnificent and elegant Voices of New Africa are relegated to "second class citizenship" in the Daily Collegian on page 3, with a note "See related story on page One." Of course there was no related story. Could anyone on this campus have believed that Leonard Bernstein or Eugene Ormandy would have been treated with such scant disrespect if they were teaching on this campus and they had developed a choir in six weeks, and they were making their first concert appearance. NO! European American chauvinism or racism would never have consciously done this on page 3.

But we, and Professors Max Roach and Fred Tillis understand the harsh realities of Institutional Racism in the Daily Collegian. The antics of Dwight Allen's plantation in 1971/1972 not withstanding. We don't even use the word "JAZZ" for we see this term as being defective, divisive and expressive of the racist cultural agenda of this society. We, as African Americans refer to our music as "Black Vocal and Instrumental Music." Brother Max Roach writes in a brilliant article in Black Scholar, Summer 1972:

When the term JAZZ entered the vocabulary of White America in 1914, it carried with it, loose, free swinging, brawdy house connotations., It's not surprising, therefore, that a period of permissive behavior thereafter came to be known as the JAZZ AGE-the 1920's. It was a period of self avowed irresponsibility related morality and gay behavior. Black musicians, presumably as some kind of sexual totem, were sought out, courted and listened to in the black bowels of Harlem, Chicago, New Orleans, and other cities, by the swing white set of that era.

Furthermore, when "JAZZ" did become acceptable and assimilated throughout white America on a mass basis, it was taken over by white production, recording and managing industries. This became the period of the big bands. In the "30's" promoting white musicians such as Bix Beiderbecke, Benny Goodman, the Dorsey brothers and others. It is, of course, crowning irony that Paul Whiteman became named the "King of Jazz" whilst during that same period, the foremost Black musician was labelled "the Duke"-Duke Ellington. It is sufficient to point out here that Duke Ellington has continued into the 1970's as a vital force in Black music, and that his Twenties and Thirties compositions are still alive-Caravan, Black, Brown and Beige, Mood Indigo and still played. Whereas, there's not a single Paul Whiteman tune or arrangement still alive."

This gripping analysis of Brother Max Roach is still with us today in the reporting of the Daily Collegian as it records the events of Tuesday night. No mention of the texture of the music "Wade in the Water" or "Singing with a Sword in My Hand", or the historical significance of these compositions, or the elegance of the sisters and brothers on stage (the first time in the history of this University), or the melodic harmonies of their choral work or even the standing ovation which they received as they exploded the night with their Black creative spirits. No, the Daily Collegian will not record the event and Brothers Max Roach and Fred Tillis will be locked into second class obscurity on page 1 and 3 of the paper.

But perhaps this is what Higher Education is all about in this country-a distortion of cultural, social and historical reality or truths. The Third World Alliance will fight this, The Third World Alliance will heighten the contradictions on this campus. It will attack the racist definition or implications on this campus whether it is in the opportunism of the Marathon on Dwight Allen's plantation, or in the Daily Collegian of Wednesday, November 15, 1972, or in the selection of a Master/Dean at Orchard Hill, whose administration is in shambles as a result of the mediocrity and incompetence of this chief administrator, or in the appointment of an Associate Provost who will be in charge of Affirmative Action, or in the paternalism of the Athletic Department, or in the outrageous recommendations of overseer Dwight Allen for the promotion and granting of tenure to his faithful cronies, lackies and shoe-shine boys Earl Siedman and Atron Gentry after the Third World Alliance challenged and closed down the Spring Marathon. Or in the recent decision to appoint someone in charge of women's programming, possibly Barbara Newman, after Sister Lorne Moor and Emiokan Sudan worked to develop Black Mass Communications for two years without any position as Director of Black Mass being developed for them, and being constantly told that there was no bread for the position (white women usually get more consideration than Black women in the feminist movement), or in the recent appointment of Fred Preston as Special Assistant to Vice Chancellor Gage and placing him symbolically as the "Spook Who Sat by the Door" (Brother Sam Greelee) as Fred's office is strategically located on the Third Floor of Whitmore after a long line of white boys (Bischoff, Krause, Woodbury, etc.), a white woman and then the "blood" next to the door. CHECK IT OUT. THAT'S AFFIRMATIVE ACTION.

These are the problems that grew out of life at the University of Mass-Amherst, and it has nothing to do with Poor Richard. Brother John Betsch, the outstanding drummer on Tuesday night, had a Southern Confederate Flag on his drums. It stood out symbolically. It was a gentle reminder of Homecoming night two weeks ago, when confederate flags were being sold to young children in Amherst on Main St. and South Pleasant. CAN YOU DIG IT! YEAH!

It is for real, brothers and sisters. And the Third World Alliance will be looking closely at the selection of the new Chairman of the Dept. of Music, especially to see if the two musical giants on this campus, Dr. Fred Tillis and Professor Max Roach, will be brushed aside like the Collegian's posture on the Orchard Hill Master/Dean shambles, for they are unquestionably the best equipped persons for the job, Institutional Racism at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst notwithstanding.

Movies Will Be Better Than Ever

By Steve Seche

There are, at the present time, several dedicated groups of people who are striving to present quality films to local, particularly UMass, audiences.

They do so in the face of great adversity, confronted by films that are often too expensive; by distributors who are slow, and often late sending films out; by a population that seems indifferent to many of their efforts; and worst of all, by themselves. So intent are they in their search for films "not usually shown" in this area, that UMass audiences will be treated once again this year to: The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari; All Quiet on the Western Front; The Virgin Spring; and more than likely, at least one Hitchcock film shown already since September.

It is not an easy task.

Still, when I spoke with program directors of the four groups that regularly show films at UMass, all were able to offer tentative schedules for the upcoming year. (Some are more tentative than others–Russell Mundy, of Butterfield Productions, said that his group was still "thrashing it out".)

Roughly, then, offerings for the spring semester look like this:

The Amherst Film Cooperative will present 33 films, beginning with 6 weeks of Hitchcock, followed by an American Comedy Series, featuring a full-length Chaplin film.

Butterfield Productions will present: a) a Marilyn Monroe series; b) a great gangster film series; c) an Andy Warhol film series; d) a great films of the '40's series; or 3) none of the above.

The Sunday Night Film Series (alias Speech 225) will become the Tuesday Night Film Series, and will offer 11 films. Titles include: Way Down East; Holiday; The Best Years of Our Lives; The Umbrellas of Cherbourg; Petulia.

The Campus Center Program Council will complete the Director's Series it began this semester, featuring films of Samuel Peckinpah and Luchino Visconti. Program director Russell Vierra then plans on beginning a "star" series, offering films of Harlow, Gable, Garbo and others.

Distinct from this series, the Program Council will continue to offer films on Sunday and Thursday evenings. Sunday films include: Summer of '42; The Sorrow

NEW

By Jeffrey Maienza

With Thanksgiving vacation next week you might want to catch one of the new films in Boston (or New York, or wherever the holiday leads you). There aren't too many decent films playing, since the distributors are waitig for the Christmas orgy but there are a few that you might want to catch now.

First on my list is Luis Bunuel's latest, The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie. From the man who gave us Viridiana, Belle du Jour, and started out in films by slitting his leading lady's eyeball with a razorblade (Un Chien Andalou), we have the best film of the year and probably one of the funniest also. Starring Fernando Rey, Jean-Pierre Cassel, and Stephane Audran the film deals with six people of the French aristocracy and how they maintain their cool through a series of absurd situations. Bunuel adds his surrealistic touch without being heavy handed, and also manages to make satiric jabs at "high society", religion, the military, and social etiquette with little effort.

Truffant's latest, Two English Girls is a controlled, well directed study of two sisters in love with the same man. Truffaut's direction tends to be dry at times with an unnecessary narration, but it is visually arresting and well worth the effort. Jean-Pierre Leaud gives a fine performance.

Heat, Paul Morrisey directing and Andy Warhol producing, should still be around. A parody of Sunset Boulevard, this one features good performances by Joe Dellesandro (Trash) and Pat Ast (who shortly commited suicide after the film's completion), and a knock-out by Sylvia Miles (Midnight Cowboy); also, Otto Preminger highly recommends it. Fellini Roma takes up where Satyricon left off. Again he brings us on his personal fantasy tour with anything but boring results. An autobiographical pot pourri, his circus world is always excitingly striking with clashing colors and personalities in beautifully garish settings. (Now in New York, it should open in Boston before Christmas).

Marjoe is a reformed preacher-huckster who has been described as a cross between Billy Graham and Mick Jagger. If that sounds interesting to you, then this staged documentary should be engaging to you. It deals with Marjoe's travels along the church revival circuit selling religion to ignorant dupes and has him candidly admitting it's all a performance. It boasts footage of Marjoe at the age of four performing a marriage ceremony.

Also of interest: Lady Sings the Blues has Diana Ross singing her way through her first movie as Billie Holiday. Although a lot of emphasis is placed on Miss Holiday's drug addiction, the film is old-fashioned light entertainment. (see review elsewhere in issue).

King of Marvin Gardens is only for absolute Jack Nicholson and/or Monopoly freaks. The Great Waltz shows how to spend a lot of money and make a horrible movie musical. This is the sort of thing you see on the Late, Late Show and decide to go to bed instead. Great for laughs.

The Gang's All Here. If you haven't seen a Busby Berkeley musical go see this one. One of the best of the surrealistic fantasies made in the forties, it has Carmen Miranda singing "The Lady in the Tutti Frutti Hat" while the camera weaves through Tropicana complete with yellow-clad girls whirling gigantic phallic "Chiquetta" bananas.

Analysis of the election results. Galen Tinder examines nation results, Massachusetts results and reasons for them. What happened to Nixon's coattails and just what does his mandate mean? A victory for conservatism or endorsement of one man's politics? A look forward to 1976 gives alternatives for Democratic Party and speculation about possible Agnew-Kennedy race.

Censorship On Campus

A report on the annual National Associated Collegiate Press Convention held recently in New York, indicates lack of freedom in much college press. Steve Tripoli suggests UMass press is as free from the control that other college papers are under as the voters of Massachusetts are independent of the views of the rest of the nation concerning our President. Perhaps this reveals something about why it will be President Nixon for another four years.

Russell's Latest

Newest film by Ken Russell is "no masterpiece but... joyous cinematic experience". The maker of The Devils and The Boyfriend tells story of struggling artist in Savage Messiah. Fine photography, and sensitive filming indicate Russell's abilities, while capable acting gives the viewer insights into the artist as a young man. Reviewer says Savage Messiah is one of these rare films we wish there were more of after it has ended.

Should 70 Year Old Judges Reinstate The Death Penalty?

By Howard Bloom
and Steve Ferber

While the death penalty is being revived by California voters, the Massachusetts electorate has mandated their 70 year old judges into their judicial graves.

Thirty eight judges will be forced to retire from the bench in Massachusetts as a result of the voter's overwhelming yes vote on referendum 7, a proposed constitutional amendment requiring the retirement of judges at age 70. The outcome will affect 10 Superior Court judges, five on the Probate Court, one on the Land Court and 22 District Court judges. A committee of six lawyers and six laymen set up by Governor Francis Sargent last August is screening 1100 names submitted as possible candidates to replace the 38 judges. The Governor expects to nominate enough new justices in the next month to prevent a lapse in the state court system.

There are, certainly, a number of judges now sitting on the bench who should retire. Their senility and inconsistency demands this. Probably the majority of these judges are over 70. The important point to keep in mind is that there are most likely 70 year old judges who are just as sharp as they were 25 years ago, and, in turn, there are also 50 and 60 year old justices who have mastered the art of sleeping with their eyes wide open while "hearing" a case. So, the 70 year old cutoff is not ideal.

Experience plays an important part in the way judges handle and decide their cases. Certainly anyone appointed to the bench by Governor Sargent to take the place of the 38 retirees will be extremely able and well qualified. However, the judges they will be replacing are much more experienced, and consequently, much better versed in the laws of the Commonwealth. With the new justices, Massachusetts runs the risk of having a barrage of inconsistent decisions pouring out of the 4 courts which will be affected by the referendum vote.

A third issue which comes to mind questions the ethicality of dropping these men from the bench. Suffolk Probate Court Chief Judge Robert G. Wilson, Jr., had this to say.

"It is highly unethical to ask a lawyer to give up his practice for the undoubted honor of being a judge for life and then after he is on the bench change the rules."

To force these men to cease doing what they spent a quarter of a century preparing to do is not cricket. Mandatory retirement ages are set in many occupations, however, so the ethics point fails. Considering the healthy pension the judges retire with (2/3 of their annual salary per year) money is not an issue. The judges who are still alert can always reopen their law practices. Some may even become authors. Boston Municipal Court Chief Justice Elijah Adlow, 76, said, "I plan to do a lot of writing and already have the notes and research completed for 2 books."

The soon-to-be-ousted judges wonder aloud why no one bothered to mention the fact that there is a provision authorizing removal of judges who are disabled by advanced age or physical incapacity. The justices believe that by utilization of this constitutional provision, the no-longer-competent judges could have been weeded out much more equitably. This brings us to our main point. Some method to distinguish the good from the bad was definitely needed. The constitutional provision would be a good first step. However, it is an incomplete step. The question still remains of who determines when a judge is mentally or physically incapacitated. We propose that an evaluation panel consisting of the Chief Justices of each of the respective courts in Massachusetts be formed to evaluate each judge on a regular basis. After the evaluations are made, the constitutional provision could be invoked.

Unfortunately, the referendum provided for the across the board retirement of all judges 70 years of age or over, not the creation of an evaluation panel. Maybe a referenda to that effect will be on the ballot during the next election. Let's hope so. Now, though, with the absence of any better immediate solution, retirement at 70 is necessary. It is a poor way to go about the business of improving the quality of judges in Massachusetts, but it will get the job done, much the way burning the barn down just to get rid of one or two lame horses did.

From judges and Massachusetts we whisk 3000 miles away to another matter that embraces both law and politics. This is the issue of capital punishment.

On November 7th of this year the people of California supported a motion in favor of capital punishment by more than a 2 to 1 margin. Although the vote was a statement of principal rather than binding legislation (the latter the case in Massachusetts), its implications are significant.

The indication is that California voters are reversing a trend in America towards abolishment of the death penalty. Since the early 1900's debate over the question of capital punishment has been prevalent. Throughout this century numerous pro and con discussions have raged and through it all the abolishionists saw a shift in their favor.

In 1960 there were six states in America that had abolished the death penalty. By 1970 that number was up to 14. Ten more states hadn't had an execution in over a decade. In the 1930's deaths averaged 167 per year by means of capital punishment. In the last five years not one person had died as a result of the death penalty.

Most recently, on June 29, 1972, the Supreme Court ruled that capital punishment was unconstitutional because it was judged as cruel and unusual punishment under the eighth amendment of the Constitution.

As the trend continued it seemed as if all of the arguments favoring capital punishment had been shot down. Deterrence has always been the number one issue on the side of the protagonists. But report after report has failed to show any conclusive evidence of this claim. A 1953 study done in Great Britain found the level of deterrence to be inconsequential in terms of capital offenses. The point was made clear: The motivations for extreme crimes of "passion" or "conscience" don't have the same deterrents as other criminal acts. A statistically predictable proportion of murder seems to occur no matter what the penalty of probability of capture and conviction. Said Jack Johnson, the Warden of Cook City jail in Chicago in 1965, "I simply believe that it's (capital punishment) not a deterrent, and it's not punishment. It's more revenge."

Other reasons for keeping the death penalty have been advocated, but none present a strong case. The retaliation argument, an eye for an eye, is on its way out. The moral indignation theory, whose premise is that punishment of gross offenses should reflect the severity of society's moral indignation, is a weak point in a fading argument. Finally the matter of cost to society, of supporting these people in prison, is said to hold no water at all.

Foremost in the minds of many abolishionists is that nagging doubt that innocent people might suffer from an irrevocable sentence. In fact it was this very doubt that led to New York State's recent abolishment of the death penalty.

A Gallup poll taken in 1953 showed that 63% of the American public was in favor of the death penalty. This figure dropped to 45% by 1965. The trend was certainly clear, America was ridding itself of capital punishment.

Why then should California voters be so overwhelmingly for the death penalty? The issue burst into the open in California in February of 1972 when a California Supreme Court ruled 6-1 against capital punishment, citing it as cruel and unusual punishment. The ruling outraged a great number of citizens throughout the state, most prominent of whom was Governor Ronald Reagan. This moral outrage led to the drafting of a constitutional proposition that appeared on the November 7th ballot.

Time magazine stated, "Proposition 17 was part of a national effort to reverse the Supreme Court's ruling and revive the death penalty." If indeed the American people are in favor of capital punishment what is to explain the difference between the court's and the people? Perhaps the American people are lagging behind their own court systems.

Surely the United States is lagging in their abolishment of the death penalty. Way back in 1791 Austria ridded itself, followed by Holland, Switzerland, Portugal and Italy, all of whom ended it 90 to 100 years ago. More recently Brazil, Honduras, Venezuela, Costa Rica and Ecuador did away with it, while in the last 50 years Sweden, Argentina, Mexico, Denmark and Great Britain (1969) abolished their death penalty laws.

In view of the world trend, as well as the trend of the American court system, the California voter is taking a step backwards, a step in the wrong direction. What remains a mystery to voters both in Massachusetts and California is the answer to the question: Should 70 year old judges reinstate the death penalty?

True Confessions: An Autumn Evening

By Sally Sapwell

Chapter One: Pride and Prejudice

Opening the front door Gwendolyn scanned the area in search of any sign of Mark. His note was crumpled limply in her hand. Remembering this afternoon in deep discord, she again scoured her memory. Mark had crossed the college campus, his blue jacket and pink shirt awry, to tell her that he 'had to see her later'. Then the leaves fluttering about in vivid burnt-sienna seemed an autumnal distraction instead of a local beauty as she began to steep in the realities of afterthought.

"Mark?" Gwendolyn became dismayed. "Is our date for tomorrow's football game called off?"

"No." Mark was obviously depressed. "It – it is more serious than that."

"What is it?" Anxiously Gwen asked.

"I've got to go," Mark turned sharply and, handing Gwen a note, smiled shallowly. Departing quickly towards the Anthropology building he threw back a verbal explanation. "My class started five minutes ago. I really have to run!"

Breaking into a trot, Mark scampered the rest of the way to the building, disappearing into a door. Gwendolyn looked after, a little bit shocked at what had happened and very much concerned. Mark was always so dashing, so able to handle any situation, yet he was just here and very evidently disturbed. ------ The note, what did the note say? Gwendolyn had almost forgotten it between her thoughts.

Gwen!

I'll meet you tonight at your sorority. My darling, something is to happen to change our lives.

Mark!

"What? What could it be?" Gwen remarked out loud to herself as she walked to the cafeteria.

"Gwen?"

"Oh!"

"I'm sorry, Gwen." Tom Sieberp stood looking at her awkwardly standing with a pile of books on his hip. "Is there anything wrong?"

"No, Tom," Gwen confusedly rattled off. "There is, but I can't say what yet."

"OK," Tom replied as he always did. Constantly interested and willing to help he usually never pushed himself on anyone. "If you want to talk though, I'll be around."

Tom left as she thought how much unlike Mark, Tom was, awkward and not able to easily talk to people and she thought:

"Poor, Tom!"

Chapter Two: Coincidentally

In the silence of the porch, Gwendolyn fingered the note while all the flashbacks vibrantly receded into the darkness. Mark's note, Tom Sieberp's kind face; all disappeared to the suspensions of emotions on the sorority steps.

"What was that?" Peering farther into the darkness, Gwen gasped. "Mark. — Mark."

"Gwen," the name was said sharply so as to be clear though the whisper. "Come away from the house!"

"Where?" Gwendolyn walked down the stairway to see Mark's silhouette between a stand of four or five trees.

"Here." Mark spoke softly, tensely, while Gwendolyn walked as fast yet as quietly as she could. "Gwen, let's walk away from the sorority, so as not to fear being heard."

"OK."

Silently they walked farther into the wood while a hundred questions were frothing into her head, filling it until Gwen had to say something.

"Mark!" Gwen gasped. "What's the matter?"

"Can we sit down," Mark looked around to find a large pile of autumn leaves coincidentally right at hand. "This is far enough so that the sorority won't hear; and although the sidewalk is not so far away, we shouldn't attract anyone with our whispering."

Sitting down Mark looked up waiting for Gwendolyn to lay beside him. She hesitated, feeling a curiously strong anxiety gnawing at her.

"Gwen?" Mark whispered reassuringly.

"Yes," Gwendolyn answered and awkwardly sat down, alarmed at her own instincts, as she thought: "But what could it be?"

Chapter Three: "BUT WHAT COULT IT BE?"

"But what could it be?" Gwendolyn wondered as she sat in the leaves with Mark. Valiantly she strove to conquer her apprehensions.

"Gwen, my darling!" Mark began. "Tomorrow I have to leave, my parents are moving and I want you to come with me."

"Mark!" Gwen laid back, stricken with the suddenness of the question. Mark bent over her and kissed her lightly on the lips. "I have to think."

"You know I love you, don't you?" Mark demandingly implored. "How I need you and how much I want to make love with you?"

"I guess so!" Then Mark began kissing her lips, her neck. "Wait, Mark! If we do, when?"

"I am driving off a 9:00 and I already have a place for us to shack up."

"Mark, please wait," Gwendolyn was so very unsure. "Let's talk about this."

"Gwen, I knew you would do it." Mark's hands began to draw her closer as he held her tightly. Kissing her very long, Mark's hands lowered to her hips, then her knees.

"Mark, stop!" Gwendolyn pleaded. "When we marry, only when we marry."

Gwen began to struggle futilely, trying to remove Mark's hands.

"Mark, please, STOP!"

Her body began to freeze.

"Gwen, I love you; we don't need to marry to make love."

"Mark, I will scream," Gwen desperately braced herself. "STOP!"

Mark instead of slowing, began to accelerate his advances struggling.

"HELP!" Gwen began to scream. "Will no one save me?"

Chapter Four: DELIVERANCE!

Gwen and Mark struggled in the darkness as Gwen's screams for help became muffled by Mark's endeavors. Her blouse was ripped and she began crying. Mark was actually hurting her. And then there were footsteps. Mark looked up quickly, only to leap to his feet, trousers open, fleeing into the protective darkness.

Gwen was crying, sobbing with all her body. She had been saved.

"Thank you!" She whispered, searching to find that her savior was awkward Tom Sieberp.

"Gwen!" Tom looked on. "What's happened?"

"Tom," she sobbed. "Oh, Tom."

Kneeling beside her, Tom gently smoothed her skirt and took off his sweater.

"Take it easy, Gwen. Take my sweater. – Your blouse is terribly torn." Tom held it out. "And tell me what happened."

The rigidness of his voice broke through her tears making her grief awkward as she began to catch hold of herself. Taking the sweater whe put it on saying: "Thank you."

"Well?"

"Mark Strada tried — he tried to –" but she broke into tears again. Between billowing sobs she blurted. "You – came just – in time."

"Hold my hand, Gwen, and I'll walk you back to your sorority." Then Tom began to explain. "I was lucky to be near, between my books and work, I don't have much time."

"Oh, Tom," Gwen walked beside him as the moon came out from behind a bunch of huge clouds. The leaves of brown and magenta were being flooded with a silver light making them glow metallically. They stopped to look at the miraculous splendour.

"Gwen," Tom looked over at her. "I know I am awkward, but this vision of autumn makes me want to tell you what I feel."

Chapter Five: REVELATION

Tom toes the ground nervously after his announcement. What was it that Tom felt which is so important. Gwen looked at the ground to see the leaves moving slightly and then at Tom's very kind face.

"I –" Tom looked at the branching trees becoming naked in the wind. "I have loved you for so long. The proverbial 'silent admirer', you could say. - - I don't know why I had to tell you, but I had to. Now to get you back before you think me another Mark."

They walked back to the sorority in silence. Gwen cautiously watching Tom's awkward yet true meaning steps. Falling easily in love with his kind features. On the porch of the sorority Tom began to turn away when Gwendolyn asked.

"Tom, I'd like to go to the football game tomorrow with you, if you would like to take me?"

"Gwen, could I —"

"What, Tom?" Gwen noticed his hesitancy.

"I work until 1:00 (PM) at a store, and you would miss a lot of the game."

"I'll be here, Tom."

"1:30."

Gwendolyn nodded and smiled. Tom surreptitiously smiled and Gwen knew that he wanted to kiss her, but he did not want to scare her. Leaning over, she kissed him lightly.

"Tomorrow?" She said.

"I'll be here!" Tom again turned but stopped. "Gwen, don't think too badly about Mark. — I sort of can understand his – frustration. – It sort of could get out of hand. – Good-night!"

Tom walked off quickly as Gwendolyn turned slightly toward the door. She whispered a thought out loud to herself.

"Poor Mark, if only he were like Tom."

Ded. to Tom, whomever he may be.

Agnew-Kennedy In '76?

By Galen Tinder

The United States has re-elected Richard Nixon to serve as their President for the next four years and while this may be disillusioning and disturbing to the many people who properly regarded George McGovern as the better of the two candidates a comprehensive examination of all the election results will reveal that they probably do not represent a plunge to the right on the part of the American people.

Once the magnitude of President Nixon's mandate was clear the question became that of whether his coattails would provide a springboard for the election of other Republicans and conservatives in the lesser races throughout the country. One glance, in fact, at the apparent pre-election length of these coattails was sufficient to make many Democratic office seekers so nervous as to spend a good part of their campaign frantically attempting to convince the local voters that they had never even heard of George McGovern. It was evident on the morning of November 8th however that the coattail theory of Presidential politics had been buried under an avalanche of ticket splitting. While President Nixon won his bid for a second term by a near record 23.5 percentage points the Democratic party survived and an examination of the Senate, House, and Gubernatorial elections will show that they approach the next four years of partisan squabbling in as good, if not better shape, than before.

The Senate: The Democrats registered their most impressive gains in the Senatorial races. With a total of 10 seats changing party hands the Democrats gave up 4 to the Republicans but retaliated by taking 6 back for a net gain of 2. Thus the new Senate will have a 47-43 split in favor of the Democrats. Of the 4 seats given up by the Democrats 3 are now occupied by more conservative men but of the six lost by the Republicans at least 4 were yeilded to more liberal men than had previously held them. The new Senate then, will not only be more Democratic, and thus in theory more independent from Presidential control, but also just a shade more liberal.

The two biggest upsets for the GOP occurred in Maine, where 24 year veteran Margaret Chase Smith fell victim to the relative youth and vigor of her Democratic challenger William Hathaway, and in Delaware where two term incumbent J. Caleb Boggs was ousted by the liberal and youthful Joseph Bidden.

The House: Although the Republicans picked up 13 seats in the House races these modest gains fell far short of their expectations and they still find themselves on the losing end of a 245-190 split. It is somewhat difficult to measure the general effect of the House elections at this time since so many of the new faces (about 80 of them) have as yet to take on an ideological coloring. Preliminary conjectures are that the new House will be slightly more conservative but also more feisty and more resistent to party pressure than the last one.

In the more prominent races, Pete McClosky and John Ashbrook, who had challenged Nixons renomination bid from the left and right respectively, were sent back to Washington by the voters of their districts as was Bella Abzug, who fought a bitter campaign against the widow of the late Represenative William Ryan.

In Massachusetts the House results were generally congenial with its now conspicuous liberal sentiments. Drinan won reelection, Studds finally beat Weeks, and independent John J. Moakley won against right-wing job hopper Louise Day Hicks. Only John Kerry who was done in by his elitist image and the withdrawal of a conservative independent who he had hoped would split the Republican vote, dissapointed the liberals.

The Statehouse: The Democrats picked up one statehouse from the Republicans and now control 31 nationwide.

Spiro Agnew and Edward Kennedy sparring for four years hence.

The most notable races occured in West Virginia, where potential Democratic star Jay Rockefeller lost to his conservative opponent, in Illinois where Democrat Daniel Walker, who headed the study bearing his name which accused Chicago's finest of engaging in a police riot, edged out Richard B. Ogilvie, and in Vermont where Democrat Thomas P. Salmon upset conservative Luther Hackett.

From these results it is clear that the reasons which impelled the electorate to reject George McGovern as radical did not also of necessity impel it to reject other liberals who share his viewpoints. An analysis of why this was the case must necessarily focus on the peculiarities of the Presidential campaign. Although this writer has expressed his opinion in previous articles that Nixon's popularity is in part the result of moral and perceptual defects in the American electorate, a few other observations are in order if we are to make sense of the disparity between the Presidential election on one hand, and the Senate, House, and Gubernatorial elections on the other.

First Nixon had an inherent advantage in being the incumbent. Unless a President's first term is an unqualified disaster the American people are generally disposed toward letting him finish what he has begun. Not since Herbert Hoover was gutted by the Great Depression have the American people rejected an incumbent. The tendency of American voters to give incumbents a second term was of a particular advantage to President Nixon since he was perceived by many as being in the middle of carrying out a revolution in the realm of U.S. foreign policy. Although the incumbent has something of an advantage in lesser races it is not as marked a one as a first term President has.

Secondly while the issue of foreign policy worked to the advantage of Nixon in the Presidential campaign domestic concerns were of primary importance in the Senate, House, and Gubernatorial races.

Thirdly, there was a widespread concern among the voters over Senator McGovern's alleged incompetence and this concern did not necessarily represent a disenchantment with liberalism in general.

In summary, the intent of this article thus far has not been to maintain that there were no tinges of conservatism to be found in President Nixon's mandate. Indeed his victory can be interpreted as an endorsement of his policy of murder in Southeast Asia and of his racist views on busing. Rather its intent has been to show that the American people have not simply stompted all over the banner of liberalism and embraced a reactionary ideology. The complex results of the 1972 elections call for an analysis less clear cut and more sophisticated than one based upon despair and emotionalism.

LOOKING TOWARD 1976

Senator McGovern's defeat will undoubtedly signal a potentially vicious struggle within the Democratic party between its left wing and the many party regulars who were alienated before and during the 1972 convention. The first skirmish will be held on December 9th at a meeting of the Democratic National Committee at which some party leaders plan an attempt to oust its McGovern appointed chairperson, Jean Westwood. These leaders who include Mayor Daily of Chicago and Senator Henry Jackson of Washington, feel that she not only represents an outer fringe of the party but that she is inarticulate and ineffective as well. Mrs. Westwood has asserted her intention to fight any such attempts to dislodge her from her position of power and it appears unlikely that party regulars will have the votes to do so. Nonetheless the December 9th meeting will be closely watched as a sign of how far the party will bend backward in an attempt to recover from the defections which it suffered in the Presidential elections.

Ideally the Democrats will have to find a way to bring the party regulars back into the fold without at the same time driving out the minority groups, women, youth, and reformers. The goal of the Democratic party for the next two years, simply stated, must be to unify those forces which propelled McGovern to the nomination with those who found him intolerable and would not lift a finger to support him.

The only person, many people are already saying, who can possibly hope to accomplish this task is Edward Kennedy. Kennedy in fact, not even two weeks after the election being spoken of as the shining hope of 1976. He has the advantage of being as liberal as Senator McGovern while at the same time being entirely acceptable to the party regulars (partly because of his name and partly because of his personality).

The Harris organization recently released a poll which indicated that Kennedy would not only have run much better against Nixon than McGovern did but that he could be expected to defeat Spiro Agnew if they were presidential candidates in 1976. Such a poll is of a limited value of course but it does indicate the strength of Edward Kennedy as a potential presidential candidate.

While the Democratic party is trying to put itself back together the Republicans will be doing their best to consolidate their power in readiness for the off-year elections of 1974 and ultimately the presidential election of 1976. Although most Republicans maintain a discreet public silence it is a well known fact that Vice-President Agnew is in prime contention for the 1976 nomination. Agnew himself, with remembrances of what happened to front runner Muskie, is admitting no ambitions but there is no doubt in the minds of people who encountered him during the campaign that he is grooming himself for 1976. Ultimately Agnews aspirations will hinge upon the success with which his boss meets during his second term. If Nixon is as popular at the end of his second term as he is now there is little doubt that Agnew will be the new standard bearer in 1976.

An Agnew-Kennedy race in 1976, with all its accompanying viciousness and divisiveness, is not much to look forward to but we Massachusetts liberals can distract outselves by worrying about what depths of barbarousness, duplicity, and unconstitutionality the President will drag us down to during the next four years.

Movies Will Be Better...(continued) and The Pity; McCabe and Mrs. Miller; and Ken Russell's The Devils.

Thursday's schedule includes: Gimme Shelter; Let It Be; Play Misty for Me; King of Hearts; and Bananas. The series will conclude with a group of Bogart films.

A bonanza for the movie-goer. Cheap, accessible, carefully-chosen films. Painless.

For at least one of the series producers, however, things are not quite so painless.

The group is the Amherst Film Cooperative, the only one of the four groups that cannot look to UMass for support.

An independent group, modelling itself after the Seattle Film Society, the A.F.C. presently counts only 88 members, and according to John Morrison, one of its directors, makes only about 50% of what each film costs them.

Still in its first year of existence, however, the A.F.C.'s current difficulties may turn out to be only growing pains.

"We started the cooperative in response to what we thought were lousy films being shown around town," Morrison said, "but the problem is that most people are afraid to pay to see a film they haven't heard about. And so the University can get people hanging off the rafters to see The Three Stooges."

"We have a small, devout following," Morrison said, "who trust us to show good films. I don't think we've hit a bad one yet."

One of the goals of the A.F.C. is to make their group representative of the area. So far, Morrison said, they've been unsuccessful involving people from town, one of the reasons they decided to show some of their films at the Amherst Folklore Center. There are presently two Hampshire College students on the 9-person board of directors, which includes Morrison, an instructor in film at Orchard Hill, and Ron Dibler, a UMass graduate student in art.

Despite the fact that audiences in town average only around 25, and slightly larger when films are shown at Hampden Dining Commons, the A.F.C. persists in its belief that there is an audience around for the type of film it is showing.

Currently, Morrison said, the cooperative is running a New American Film Series, which, he said, places them in "an educative role."

"Our feeling is that not too many people know what new American films are like," he said.

Their educative role was briefly abandoned some weeks ago when the A.F.C. brought Reefer Madness to UMass. "Not because we thought it was a great film," Morrison explained quickly, "but because it has a lot of appeal, and we needed the money." It helped, but the A.F.C. remains in debt.

Still, they strive on. For the new year, they plan a membership drive, offering the 33 films they have scheduled for $6. They have also booked the Student Union Ballroom, and the Campus Center Auditorium for a couple of Saturday night showings, which Morrison hopes will offer them an audience a little larger than they are used to seeing at their films.

For those film groups more closely aligned with the University, life is a bit more comfortable. It was not always that way for Butterfield Productions, however. According to Russell Mundy, who with "three or four others" selects the films for the Butterfield series, they have frequently, in the past, had to "bargain" with a distributor to get a film when they have had little or no money.

"We have always counted on the University to pull us out if we ever got into deep financial trouble," Mundy said.

Fortunately, for Butterfield Productions, it hasn't, and while Mundy said that they do not use their films as "a vehicle for making money", he acknowledged that their current '30's Series has shown them a profit.

With the money they've made in the past, Butterfield has been able to purchase two 16 mm. cameras, and hope this year to add a video tape machine.

"We've publicized that this equipment is available to Butterfield residents," Mundy said, "and we're hopeful that we'll be able to build up a core of 10-12 people so we can get into making our own films more regularly."

"Eventually," he said, "we would like to have a program of our own shorts in the Student Union."

For the Sunday Night Film Series, financial problems are pretty well taken care of by the group's budget, which is supplemented by the lab fees paid by students enrolled in Speech 225, "History and Development of the Motion Picture."

Asst. Professor Thomas Bohn, Director of the Series, said that films are chosen primarily with the content of the course in mind, and secondly, for viewing by the general public.

Like the other groups, Bohn attempts to select films that aren't normally shown on campus. Beyond that, films are chosen which are representative of a particular style or period. The group also schedules "classic" films (e.g. Rules of the Game), and Bohn said that the schedule for the spring will be "more classic oriented than this semester's."

For Professor Bohn, problems this semester came in the form of not receiving films on time. Specifically, there was (or wasn't) "Meet Me in St. Louis", which Bohn quickly replaced with "An American in Paris", which he had shipped directly from Boston for viewing that evening.

Finally, there is Bill Dotson, Director of the University's Program Council, whose biggest headache seems to be what to do with all his money. His council is budgeted to lose $10,000 (although it is probably safe to assume that such an occurance would not overly please the University.)

In his efforts, Bill is assisted by Russell Vierra, who is in charge of the Director's Series, Doreen Doyle, and a movie committee that he said has "six or seven active members."

Bill said that he was particularly pleased that he had been able to show "The Garden of Finzi-Continis" already this year, since it had been reported that the film would not be available for distribution until January.

Bill is proud of what he does for the film audience at UMass, perhaps no more or no less than John Morrison at the Amherst Film Cooperative, who financially, at least, represents the other end of the spectrum.

All of the film groups, regardless of budgets, or support strive to present quality films to their respective audiences. It's just that some get to strive a little harder than others.

A Work Of Deep Personal Significance

By Carl Greenberg

Spring Snow
by Yukio Mishima
Knopf
389 pages, $7.95

The chasm between East and West can be pointed up by noting a present phenomenon in literature. Oriental literature is not widely known to Westerners and though a trend is indicated towards a greater interest (witness Kawabata's recent Nobel Prize), there are still occasions which illustrate our ignorance.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn's newest novel, August, 1914, has received widespread acclaim and attention, and he is now always immediately translated. We can expect to read each of the next three books of his tetrology (August, 1914 is the first) in English just as soon as they are available in Russian.

The tetrology of Yukio Mishima, however, was finished two years ago, and only this summer was the first one, Spring Snow, available to the English speaking world. Were Mishima a lesser author than Solzhenitsyn, this would be understandable. But attempting to compare the two would be like comparing two types of art, and would only detract from each.

Mishima committed suicide the day he completed the last book of his tetrology as he said he would. The second book of the four, Runaway Horses, is said to be a literary preview of his own death. We are reminded in Spring Snow, that the suicide tradition of Japan stems from deeply felt convictions of honor and self-fulfillment (though that it far from the main theme of the book), and not out of depression.

The title of the tetralogy is The Sea of Fertility, referring to the plain on the moon by that name. Mishima suggests that it is a beautiful name for barenness, and, in a way, that is what Spring Snow is about.

Kiyoaki Matsugae can be roughly compared to Joyce's Stephan Dedalus as a young man. He is brought up as a member of a family of rising status and we watch his agonies during his college years less than a decade after the Russo-Japanese War just after the turn of the century. His prime agony is Satoko who has always loved him, but, it seems to him, taunts him.

Throughout the book, Mishima seems to say that there are cosmic influences within us and that some of us are affected more powerfully than others. We are told of an ancient tradition in which young men when they are thirteen, I believe, stand before a large tub of water outside on a night when there is to be a full moon. If clouds obscure the moon and the boy cannot see its reflection, he is doomed to evil luck for all his life.

It turns out that Koyoaki saw the reflection when it was his night, but it was only during a momentary break in the clouds, and the ceremony becomes bitterly ironic by the end of the book.

Mishima turns to images of the moon and water frequently in the book, and in such a way that they become part of our own psyche. Kiyoaki is impressed, for instance, by the border of sea and shore. It is an amazing thing that the ocean can come to a stop right there at his feet. We are instantly aware of all the tremendous things which we are able to border out or in, within ourselves.

Dreams are also an important element in Spring Snow. Much of Oriental religion has a dreamlike quality to it, (the myths and legends of re-incarnation, for example), and Koyoaki's dreams, much like religion, are not meant to be fully understood. We know that he is dreaming about his love, and so does he, but beyond that, the symbolism is not as powerful as we may be used to. Kioaki actually writes down all of his dreams in as much detail as possible, but he does it only as a sort of historical record. He makes no attempt to analyze, and we are not encouraged to, either. Instead, we get the feelings that the dreams invoke, and so a deeper insight into the dreamer.

One indication of the scope of this masterwork, is the importance of almost every character. While some are important only in that they are powerful political forces in the novel's plot, others are painted wph details of their own personalities and their effects on all that happens.

Tadeshina is Satoko's personal maid and is indispensible to the structure of Spring Snow. Her actions are the catalyst for much of the tragedy at the end of the book and her influences are often greater than those of her masters.

While there is much death and sorrow in Spring Snow, and while it is a story of deep seriousness, it would be wrong to describe it with words such as sombre. There is a great deal of life in the book, from the blossoming of the cherry trees to the spirited activities at various festivals. Two princely visitors from Siam personify summer sun and health, while at the same time foreshadow Kiyoaki's life.

Campus Press: Bad Vibes For The Future

By Steve Tripoli

When you first hear the title National Associated Collegiate Press Convention it sounds pretty impressive. When you then hear that it's going to be a meeting of college newspaper editors from around the country who will be there to talk about journalism in general and the campus press in particular you get even more excited, especially if you're an editor of a campus newspaper. Then comes the unattractive part: it's being held in New York City. But once you can put down your disgust at the thought of the convention being held in the nation's Swillbucket, things start to look good again.

I took part in this yearly ritual for the first time during the first weekend in November, and came out with quite a few impressions about that strange form of media that is for the most part known only by the 18 to 22 year old student in this country, the college newspaper. Herein is an analysis of what I saw, and what I think it says for the future of the campus press, the media in general (which is where many campus journalists go after college), and the country which will be run by these people and their friends some day.

The first thing that hit me when I walked into the lobby of the Statler Hilton was the little green stickers that everyone was wearing. I soon found out that I too was the proud owner of one of these things. It said Associated Collegiate Press on it, and left space for the delegate to write in his name and school. I could tell the convention had begun. On registering I noticed the large number of states that were on file at the registration desk, and thought to myself that this really was a national conference (I later discovered that there were people from about 40 states at the convention). The first night was spent in socializing, but I had high hopes for the next day. The convention was set up so that there were a number of seminars on an assortment of subjects going at the same time, and the delegate was free to go to any one he/she desired to go to. Being Executive (editorial) Editor of the Collegian, I picked out seminars concerned with the editorial aspect of the press, and went to bed with the intention of attending those the next day.

I was up on time the next day, and my schedule told me that the first seminar of interest was one called "How To Secure Independence For Your Newspaper -Or- "Put a Broompusher On Your Board". Editorial independence in the campus press is an interesting concept, one that I found of special interest being in charge of that department at the Collegian. I feel that the Collegian has editorial independence already, but I was anxious to see how other people did it, maybe I could even teach someone something. As for the "broompusher" part of the title, I had no idea what that meant, but I figured I'd soon find out.

One of the funny things that hit me about this particular seminar was the fact that it was being run by an adviser to student publications from the Oklahoma Daily in Norman, Oklahoma. If you're going to talk about independence, I thought to myself, why let your adviser do it? We have a publications adviser here at UMass, and he's one of the best I've seen, but he doesn't run the show, and he shouldn't. It's a student newspaper we're supposed to be running, by students and for students, and an adviser should only advise, as ours does.

With these doubts in my mind I walked in. The adviser (his name was Ron Stewart, for future reference) proceeded to tell us how they go about being independent in Oklahoma. Their formula is to have all interests represented on the newspaper's policy making board, including faculty, administration, "broompushers", and an envoy from the office of the President of the University. The Board comes down to having six students and six non-students on it. Don't forget, we're talking about a campus paper, where most of the people are students. The Collegian is by definition an undergraduate paper, but in Oklahoma they consider their paper all University oriented. That's fine with me, but remember that the school is mostly composed of students.

At any rate, Mr. Stewart went on to tell us that not only is the policy board only half students, but the board has the power to fire the editors of the newspaper over editorial policy! Then he goes on to say that this is the only way to get independence for your newspaper! If that's the only way, we'll stay enslaved here at primitive old UMass, thank you, and leave independence to the Oklahomans.

The next day I scheduled for myself another editorial oriented seminar, one called "Independence: The Only Way To Go." When I saw that this one was led by an adviser from the Kentucky Kernel, I immediately smelled a rat, remembering the experiences of the day before. But I thought this one just might be different. It wasn't.

This adviser, an attractive young lady by the name of Nancy Green, told us all about the Kentucky system for independence. This independence was mostly financial, but with that comes the other good things such as editorial independence. In their system things are a bit more democratic, we were told. Editorial policy is set entirely by students at regular meetings. But on questioning something fishy began to manifest itself; Ms. Green doubled as business manager at the Kernel, and she wasn't even a student.

(The Kernel is a student paper like ours, unlike Oklahoma's version.)

The Editor of the Kernel defended this, saying that the job of Business Manager needs a continuity that no student can provide. It just so happened that our own Business Manager, Bill Manburg, was sitting right next to me, and he took strong exception to that theory. The Collegian changes business managers every year. They are always students, and it always works out fine. The Kernel's credibility was sinking fast.

The conversation then led to editorial independence, and the question of whether Ms. Green had any say in editorial policy arose. The Editor was quick to assure us that she certainly did not, and we proceeded to a slide show on how the Kernel operates. A slide came up showing an editorial meeting. Guess who was sitting at the meeting? Ms. Adviser Herself. The Kernel's credibility was dead, and I was starting to feel that the Collegian was the only halfway decent paper at the whole conference.

Which brings us all to the interesting question, What does all this mean? I think it has some very important implications for college campuses today and the media as a whole tomorrow. If the Oklahoma Daily and the Kentucky Kernel are independent, and to most of the papers at the conference they were, what is the press coming to? Don't forget that the college journalist today is the professional of tomorrow. Most of these people take administration and special interest interference in their editorial integrity as a fact of life. The concept of such interference not even being objected to, and meekly accepted at that, is one I find so foreign that I can't conceive of anyone standing for it. If anyone tried that kind of nonsense at the Collegian I'd just as soon put a lock on the door and not publish. And yet this kind of repression is being taken for granted at colleges and universities all over the country.

To me this is particularly important today. Here we are in a country where freedom of the press is seriously threatened more than ever before. If the press of tomorrow is made up of the college journalists of today I can only feel pity for the American press. Not all colleges at the conference were like the ones above, but from what I saw MORE THAN HALF were. But then again maybe freedom of anything is anachronistic. Maybe only us loony people who live in Massachusetts and vote for George McGovern think it's valuable. If what I saw in New York the first weekend in November is a harbinger, 1984 will arrive on schedule, brought to you by the generation that was going to change the world.

Innovator For Tomorrow: Louis Falco

By Paula Meinetz Shapiro

(Editor's Note: Louis Falco and his company are on campus in residence tonight and tomorrow. See WEEKEND for details.)

A decade ago he was just another teeny-bopper on the Lower East Side of New York who studied photography and was interested in sports and acting. "The thing I always thought I'd wind up doing was acting; the dancing was something I always loved doing but I didn't really consider doing it seriously, since most of the dancing I have seen was typical TV-type work and I never thought of myself as an adult doing that," he says.

Now, at 28, Louis Falso has become an innovative force in the arts and a performer whom Clive Barnes has called, "...one of the most exciting male dancers in the world."

In 1960, his senior year at the High School of the Performing Arts in Manhattan, Falco auditioned for a South American tour with Jose Limon's company. When he learned that he had been chosen, Falco says, "I was shocked, I was going to South America, they were going to pay me, and I was going to dance."

Soon he was a featured dancer with the company, and since then he has moved from dancer to choreographer to director of his own company, to synthesizer of the arts and sciences. Two years ago he won a Guggenheim Fellowship, one of the most prestigious foundation grants in the arts. He is hoping it will be renewed so that he may continue his work with laser beams, infinity boxes and other expensive devices.

Falco's sensuous good looks and his grace fulfill both the classic Greek ideal of beauty and contemporary demands for a youthful, vigorous image. ("Get me an autographed picture, he's such a great pin-up," my mother-in-law said after seeing Falco.) His wiry body is topped off with a curly brown bonnet of hair, and wehther being interviewed, partying, or rehearsing, he is smooth, alert and articulate.

He is also attentive and responsive to his fellow dancers. Jennifer Muller emphasized this during a recent rehearsal break: "The great thing about Louis is that he works with the individual; that's what strikes me about being in his company. It isn't like everybody's doing a chorus-like thing. You do really feel like an individual and that's what his pieces are about – people. Huescape is my individual reaction as a down-to-earth unheroic person; it shows many sides of a person's character."

Falco first became interested in choreography when he worked with Limon on new pieces and actually saw movements develop from ideas. He was becoming tired of interpreting other choreographers' roles, Falco said, adding, "Once I started choreographing, it fed me enough to last 20 years in terms of my interest in the dance. It opened up so many areas and made me look at everything in a completely different way."

His process of creating dance can begin with any impulse, positive or negative, that he's reacted to during the day. Other times his dramatic situation develops out of one or two movements with which he begins. "I do a movement and then have a dancer do it to see the gist of the whole movement and see what kind of patterns it creates. Doing it may feel fantastic, and then when I see it, it may just be self-indulgent dancing. I try to see someone else in it so I make an artistic choice, not an emotional one," Falco says.

He feels his rehearsals are harder than most since he's constantly trying new things and putting the body through material that is remote from the usual kind of movement done in a dance class. In the long run, however, he thinks these efforts are rewarded by something new that hasn't been choreographed before.

"I'm trying to get away from the cliches. I could do an excellent ballet, a very concrete one in terms of using soloists, trios, a chorus, and manipulating them and building a climax, but that's what I want to get away from. I'm looking for new ideas and new materials." He continues, "Most dance training is conditioned to the point that we treat everything on a high level. For example, if we make a gesture toward someone, we try to encompass the whole world, in a sense, as the European ballets do. I'm trying to get dance on another level now."

Falco is not guided by reverence for the conventional or by formality. The company usually rehearses in assorted garb at Jennifer Muller's loft in the West 20s, under the playful eye of her cat Chico. Falco believes the nine-member company enables him to know his dancers and their abilities very well. A troupe of this size also allows for a continuous interchange as they dance and choreograph.

To demonstrate his choreographic effort Caviar, first performed at City Center on May 14, Falco's neighbor arrived with a film of the last 10 minutes of the dance. It was not the usual film showing. Four frames were shown at once, two upsidedown, unspliced, and at twice the regular speed. The dancers applauded occasionally, and Juan Antonio, dressed in yellow tights with blue plastic overalls, supplied the vocal accompaniment for the film with occasional "cha-cha-chas." Scattered among the dancers in the film's audience were the eight large white sturgeons created by the artist Marisol as props for Caviar.

As a choreographer and a dancer, Falco is trying to take away the decorations and get the dance to be naturalistic while still maintaining a high technical quality. He is seeking to make dance more immediate, like the spoken word, but isn't trying to set a particular dance style or technique: "I'm just interested in creating dance for dancers, in creating theater, and I don't feel that I want to put muself into an immediate mission. I'm mainly interested, in just developing."

And indeed he has developed. Argot was his first choreographic experiment in 1967. The piece, danced by Falco and Sarah Stackhouse to music by Bartok, was an appetizer that contained some delightful surprises. In 1968 Huescape premiered at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival to raves from critics. Walter Terry said, "The brand new work is an instant hit, the cleanest, clearest, brightest, and best wrought choreography Falco has done to date...With action came patterns as geometric yet as surprising as those made by a kaleidoscope, but also as free and as instinctive in quality as the lithe sinewy movements of an animal." That same year, Falso formed his own company, which included former students of Jose Limon, Martha Graham and Pearl Lang. (Most of the company now studies with Leon Danielian, Patricia Wilde and Michael Maule.)

Timewright was developed in 1969 with the aid of two artists, Robert Indiana and William Katz. And in Caviar Falco once more collaborated with these two, as well as with Marisol, the Chilian artist, and "Pot," a rock group.

This year Falco and two artists bought a co-op on East Second Street, about 20 blocks from where Louis grew up. He spends his free time renovating the building, which he'll use as a studio and living quarters. Located between the Lower East Side and the East Village, Falco felt the building was a good investment since property values couldn't get any lower in the area. He now has ideas for organizing block parties and getting the neighborhood kids dancing.

Meanwhile, Falco has his eye on another building on the Lower East Side to house his theatrical ideas for creating a totally different experience for the audience. For example, the theater's seating arrangements and the color of the auditorium would vary with each performance: Here he would continue chasing his vision of a new theater consisting of six actors, six musicians, and six dancers. If Falco can raise the money for the building, it will be called the New York Public Bath Theater, since the structure was originally a bath house.

In addition to his work with other artists, Falco has been collaborating with a group of scientists from the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, uniting their technical innovations with his dance artistry. Lloyd Cross, a physicist at the university, designed the first dance sets using laser beams for Falco's company. Lasers are highly concentrated beams of light.

In this kind of work, the dancers' bodies are illuminated by laser beams arrayed in specific patterns. Laser light is a record of the reflected light waves emitted by the object, differing from a photograph, which reproduces the image of the object itself. The light produces holograms, or negatives, on giant photographic plates. When the holograms are placed in a beam of intense light, a true three-dimensional image of the object is formed, and it is impossible to tell visually whether or not the object is actually there.

In addition to these "optical holograms," in which laser light illuminates the object, there are also "acoustical holograms" which are produced by "illuminating" the subject with pure sound. The object disturbs the sound waves and produces interferences similar to those of light waves in the optical process.

Currently, says Falco, "I'm working with a bstract patterns that the sound is creating. It makes you think very differently about the music. But eventually I want the dancer to create his own music by attaching devices to different parts of his body. The tempo of the sounds created would vary with the intensity of the energy expended by the dancers."

Beyond creating patterns of sound and visual effects that would make conventional sets unnecessary, the holograms would make it possible to give the appearance of a dancer when, in fact, there was none. Falco says he is now planning the ultimate in choreography, a work for a nonexistent dancer.

Last summer Falco let his creative juices loose on some new ideas for ballets, and he did some teaching at the Minnesota Dance Theater. Two projects that he plans to be working on shortly, if funds become available, include choreographing a ballet for video tape cassette players and producing an infinity box large enough to dance in. An infinity box is a device composed of mirrors and lights in which reflections seem to be infinite in number. Artist Stanley Landsman, who's had shows at the Whitney and Guggenheim Museums, would be working with Falco on the infinity boxes. Louis' ballet for the video tape would present the story of Little Red Riding Hood and a football game occurring simultaneously.

Falco combines his Flash Gordon technology with a personal warmth and a sincere desire to get his message across to people. He spends a third of each year on tour and particularly enjoys his extended visits to college campuses and communities where he can serve as an artist-in-residence and exchange ideas.

He likes a challenge, and he likes to affect people, whether it's in a positive or negative way. Falco thinks the worst thing that can possibly happen is for a person to come out of a performance and say it was "O.K.." A favorite collection of being on the road stems from a visit to Pittsburgh. There, while Falco danced, a man shouted, "Look where they're putting our taxes – for dirty dances."

Falco likes that sort of thing. He works hard on his art, but he says, "A reaction, a response, that's what makes it all worthwhile."

It Just Depends What You're Looking For

By Steve Feld

Tom Rapp and Pearls Before Swine at the Folklore Center, Sunday Night

I was chain-smoking joints with a guy and his old lady, both from California, during Tom Rapp's first set. He and I agreed that Rapp sounded a lot like Dylan at times and we both thought that he sounded good. He had three other men in Pearls Before Swine – one played the cello, one played a flute, one and Tom played acoustic guitars. They set a mellow tone to the already intimate atmosphere of the Folklore Center. Tom told some stories and the usual anecdotes concerning dope, politics and religion. And he and his group gave nearly a two-hour show. JointMan next to me started shaking – probably from either too little or too much dope – but it wasn't in time to the music, in any event.

Tom and his band arrived in Amherst at four o'clock. He had driven in from Boston, where he played a four-nighter at Zircon's ("The first two shows were noisy, but the other two were fine") in Somerville. They planned on driving back to old, old Woodstock right after the show at Amherst. Two days rest and then it will be to Ottawa, Pennsylvania, and god knows where else. Tom's tiny frame is now down to miniscule – he's lost fifteen pounds ("And I can't afford to lose another fifteen!") since the tour began and his biggest complaint so far,- naturally, was the food. "Have you eaten yet today?" I asked. "Umm, yea, I had some beef stew." "Was it any good?" "Not really."

Tom Rapp feels that he's his own best critic and he speaks openly about his songs, which, all things considered, he likes very much. "Does it urk you," I questioned, "to know that shit like Three Dog Night and Grand Funk are selling millions of records while your music, which is obviously better, is overlooked?" "No, no. All these people have something to offer, it just depends what you're looking for. Up till now, Pearls Before Swine have just about been breaking even, money-wise. I just want us to be heard by everybody and then, let people decide whether or not they like us. Not enough people have heard us yet. Hopefully Blue Thumb (Tom's new record label) will do something about that."

"Would like to make like George and play Madison Square Garden in a white jacket?"

"No, I like to play for a thousand people, tops."

Tom played to a packed house Sunday night; the group was getting a percentage of the gate instead of a straight salary, so they were pleased. He's performing to college audiences all over the country – UOhio, UPenn, Yale, BU and Michigan State – but he's still aiming for a wider audience. His new album, Stardancer, is to be released momentarily. It is, in his own words, a bit more commercial and recorded in Nashville. Optimism and enthusiasm permeated our discussion of it.

"What do you think is the best song you've ever written?"

"Right now I'd say "Stardancer", it's really incredible. But I tend to prefer songs I have just written over the older ones. I just wrote one yesterday (Saturday) morning in the Boston hotel. It's called "Massachusetts Dream", it has to do with Massachusetts being the only state for McGovern. I suddenly realized that I was in Massachusetts, the only liberal state in the country. So I played it last night and it got a three-minute ovation – so I like that one too."

"Let's talk about "The Jeweler". I love that song. How did you get the phrase, "the use of ashes"?

"Originally it was just a line from "The Jeweler", but the record company (Reprise) picked it for the name of the album. The line came easily – I actually saw someone polishing old coins with ashes, and they came out clean."

"Was he a jeweler, in small spectacles?"

Tom Rapp

"No. That whole metaphor came about a few days later when I wrote the song."

"Was it just a single stream of consciousness?"

"No, some are, though. This one took three or four days."

"O.K. Here comes that dreaded question – What come first, the music or the words?"

"Well actually, neither. I think of myself as a sculptor – I first get a mood and then chip away so that a melody or chord pattern and words come together."

"Do you ever think of writing that ultimate song that will knock everybody right out?"

"Yes, all the time. That's the frame of reference I have when I sit down and write."

I handed him a review I had written the week previously of his latest album, Familiar Songs. "I had a hell of a time trying to figure out if the album was called Tom Rapp or Familiar Songs."

"I still don't know what it is," he answered, "and it disturbed me that there were hardly no credits on the sleeve. It was recorded during the first of the year at Woodstock. It's mostly older songs of mine reworked. There are only two new ones – "Grace Street" and "Charley and the Lady". It's my last for Reprise."

"The Warners-Reprise publicity department said some wierd things about you. One was that you wouldn't allow your picture to be taken unless you were behind glass, or something...."

"Hah. That one came about because they had only one picture of me. It was behind a window. I'm not as mysterious or wierd as they wrote."

"I've noticed that there are never any pictures of you or Pearls Before Swine on the album jackets. Why?"

"I never liked the idea, really. The trend now is to get away from shoving a coverful of faces on albums. I think it might distract from the music, too. I prefer to have a painting or a drawing."

"Yet the cover of Familiar Songs is a giant closeup of your face...."

"I had nothing to do with that cover. I guess that the record company felt that they had to compensate, or something."

"Do you keep up with the music of others?"

"I'd like to, but who's got the time? You know who I really like – Randy Newman. Have you heard his latest album, Sail Away? It's a great record, really excellent. I have all of his albums, also Leonard Cohen, Joni Mitchell, John Prine and Judy Collins."

"I said that you were a lot like Newman in my review."

"Well...."

"But that you were more melancholic and less satiric."

"Ah, that's right."

"Have you ever written any happy songs? All you material is terribly depressing."

"I think of my music as happy music in a depressing framework. Contrary to belief, our biggest audiences aren't people with suicidal tendencies."

"You said that Familiar Songs was recorded in Woodstock. Did you get to know Dylan or the Band."

"Yea, will I recorded it in Bearsville Studios, and the Band own it – they built it. Occasionally one or two would come in with their kids to see what was happening. They didn't play on it, though. I heard Rock of Ages, really like it."

"You now have eight record albums out. How have you changed since the first few?"

"I'm getting into new things on my guitar, like open tuning and new patterns. While I was recording the new album, we had this guy come in to play and he said that a chord change I had written was physically impossible. I never understood that. I'm also starting to produce myself and do the mixes. We mixed Stardancer in one giant thirty-five hour marathon. You should have seen it – coffee cups, cigarette butts everywhere."

"How many songs are on the new record?"

"Um, ten."

"Aha. I'm from the old school of thought that says twelve to a record."

"Actually there were eleven, but one was a Jacques Brel number that I elaborated on. We had it recorded and ready to be pressed, but we had some copyright trouble and it had to be deleted from the tape."

"Ever think about recording live?"

"Yes. I know someone with a mammoth 32-track monstrosity that I'll be using soon to record live."

"That's quite a change from your first album."

"One Nation Underground and Balaklava (1967 and 8 respectively) were recorded on a four-track machine. The others (These Things Too, The Use of Ashes, City of Gold and Beautiful Lies You Could Live In, Familiar Songs and Stardancer) are all on a sixteen-track machine."

This whole conversation took place, by the way, before and during the opening performers, a charming and beautiful lady and her old man who call themselves Aragorn, after a character in Tolkien's Lord of the Rings. They played lovely folk songs on twelve-string guitar and were well received. Tom and I were told more than once to KEEP IT DOWN.

But I had one more question I had to ask him. "How often do people joke about rapping with Rapp?"

"Ever since I was nine years old, man. You wouldn't believe it." He laughed and five minutes later he and his group were accepting their opening applause.

In spite of his constant on-stage dope-joking, he swears he doesn't smoke the stuff anymore. He was just about the only person at the place who wasn't. Onstage, the repetoire of Pearls Before Swine consisted of half-half old and new. He opened with a song by Tom Lehrer, who's album on Poppy, Rapp told the audience, is called Heroin Does Not Lead To Harder Drugs. He ran through fine performances of "The Jeweler", "Snow Queen", "I Shall Not Care", "Sail Away" (not Newman's), all from Familiar Songs and encored with a song inspired by Ray Bradbury's science fiction tale, The Illustrated Man, a song called "Rocket Man" (not Elton's).

It was a good night for Pearls Before Swine. Rapp calls it a "jewel-like quality" that the group has and that accurately describes it. They actually performed the same number twice, the title tune of the new album, "Stardancer". "You hear a song for the first time, and it just passes you," Tom told the audience, and they did it again, proving his point exquisitely; it is a fabulous song. That ended the show; everybody left content.

I asked Tom if he had a favorite phrase or lyric that has endured over the years. Frankly, I was expecting "the use of ashes" or "I don't want to escape reality, I want reality to escape from me"; something deep and profound of his. No chance – it was a blurb of truism from "If You Don't Want to (I Don't Mind)", "...love lasts forever till it dies." It goes to show ya, Tom Rapp has come out from behind that closed window. Now, perhaps, you should come out from behind yours and start listening.

John Entwistle

By Mike Kostek

(Whistle Rymes/John Entwistle Decca-Track DL 79190 time 39:37)

John Alec Entwistle is one of the most idiosyncratic figures in rock, and he's back with another platter of Ox Rock that outdoes his first effort by a good margin. What Whistle Rymes does that Smash Your Head Against The Wall didn't is give a more accurate picture of just what John wanted to say.

John has always come up with loads of songs each year, and under The Who's production, one or two of them would come out very nice indeed. However, Smash Your Head (which is a great bargain in the cut-out bins now) just didn't get around to saying everything, lyrically, musically and cosmically, that it should have.

Who is this character with green skulls and nasty moles on his album covers? He's bass player extrodinare and stout naysayer in the English group of demon geniuses called The Who.

If you started buying Who singles about 1966 ("I Can't Explain", "Happy Jack") and you were the type who played both sides of your 45's, you then exposed yourself to a strange bit of English pop-howl-booze rock in such forms as "Doctor, Doctor", "Whiskey Man" and "Dr. Jeckell & Mr. Hyde". Entwistle's voice is huge and broad. It's deep-seated with a distinctive high edge to it. Townshend's songs are quite light in feeling compared to John's stuff. Entwistle is the perfect counterpoint, the beautiful bass anchor that The Who need. That's he singing the deep authority voice on "Summertime Blues". On the flip side of the single of "Summertime Blues" is a live version of a glorious song called "Heaven and Hell" which The Who used to open their show during their many Tommy tours. This is the same song which John recorded on Smash Your Head, but on the album he slowed it down to half-speed with disasterous results. If you want to hear the real "Heaven and Hell" you'll have to buy the single, and I've seen it in many drug stores, in the "Hits U Missed' rack, going for 39¢.

Of course Peter asked John to write the leching uncle's song on Tommy, and he came up with "Fiddle About". Who else in the world could have written and sung "Boris The Spy-derrr" with its "creepy crawly" chorus?

Entwistle is an accomplished musician who plays amazing bass, French horn, trumpet, piano, synthesizer and a few more I'm sure. He is responsible for The Who's unique sound on such cuts as "Cobwebs And Strange", "Waltz For A Pig" and "Someone's Coming". And yes, if you've ever seen The Who live, John's the odd one picking his bass over on the left, standing very still. He sings harmony on all tunes and gets to sing lead on one or two numbers a tour. Don't be fooled by his placid appearance. He is a nononsense guy who likes things done right. If The Who were not a super band, I'm sure he'd be somewhere else, in a super band. Last time I saw them, right after Who's Next came out, John stepped forward to sing his song, "My Wife". After the first verse, the mike went dead. John didn't even blink, he just swung his massive bass around, banged the mike stand to the stage and retreated back whe he had to be coaxed to sing after the mike was fixed.

No one plays a better rock bass than John Entwistle. Listen to the Live At Leeds "Magic Bus" in which John plays the same bass pattern about fourty times. How many times does he play it the same way? Zero. Once, Peter blew his amp on stage in the middle of a song and his guitar went dead. So, for several minutes while Pete was getting back in tune, Entwistle played both bass and guitar parts as he covered the bass parts while sounding and playing like a lead guitar.

"My Wife" is a good point to approach Whistle Rymes, for it's really very similar to the sound of things on the album. Since The Who release about one album a year, and since Townshend was writing a lot of excellent material, John was only able to get one or two of his songs on any Who album. After awhile John saw the only out to express himself fully was the solo album route. Smash Your Head came out last year, with Keith Moon the only other member of The Who in the supporting cast, and he on supplementary percussion for one cut. The result was a half-satisfying album; the songs weren't bad, but the arrangements weren't too good as the horns sounded tacked on besides being mixed far louder than any other instrument. The performances of the sidemen-friends Entwistle got to play on the album were adequate, but far from great.

Whistle Rymes is a much better album, but it's not quite there either. John has resisted putting in brass where it doesn't belong, and has arranged things much better. He's got most of the same people behind him again and they all do well, especially Peter Frampton on guitar. However, where "My Wife" is swept along by tremendous musical backing from The Who, Whistle Rymes neve takes off. Of course you can't just put a bunch of people in a studio and come out with The Who. No one comes up with the consistantly great performances that Peter, Keith, Roger and John do in the studio; it is The Who's backing that really gives John's songs the added dimension they lack on his solo albums. Like "My Wife" the overall sound is thick, chunky, solid. There's nothing wrong with this in itself, but it gets tedious after awhile, and dynamic backing performances are needed to take the full load off John. On John's solo albums the members of his pickup band play well individually, but they just don't play together that well.

The fact is, on most of the cuts on Whistle Rymers, there's nothing happening besides John's voice, lyrics and melody. That is unfortunate, because John can't sing all that well and his vocals and melodies are best when pushed and pushed by a driving band. His lyrics remain on a high level of lowdownness. When John's voice is one brick in a flying wall of sound, as in "My Wife", the effect is great. Here though, things are slightly out of whack.

Before I press too hard, let's take the good points of Whistle Rymes: "Apron Strings" is a fine sad lamenting bit of truth; "I Found Out" is a beautiful song with a nice chorus. "I Wonder" is a nice rocker with a great horn riff; "Nightmare (Please Wake Me Up)" is an effective mood setter and of course the cover, with its nasty little creatures, is a perfect personification of John's shady songs. The trouble with the other songs on the album is that they are forced and stiff, and seem written as mere vehicles for his words. However, John's playing has never sounded better. His piano playing is quite good; his bass playing is exceptional as usual. Listen to the bass in "Who Cares?", another fine rocker, and hear how the notes threaten to fly right off the platter.

There is enough fine material on Smash Your Head and Whistle Rymes to make a great, great album, and if Peter and Keith had sat in, who knows how good it might have been?

Nuggets/Original Artyfacts From The First Psychedelic Era (1965-1968)–Vaious Artists (Elektra Records)

From the time you get your first pimple to the time you get your first fuck, AM radio is one aspect of American culture that plays a crucial role in your day-to-day life. AM radio was the source of that noise that emanated from Junior's room while he was trying to do his algebra homework; AM radio was what was blasting when you got the car to go cruising for burgers; and AM radio was the music that covered the beaches in the summer while people worshipped the sun god. No two ways about it–AM radio was an absolute necessity during our budding years.

Then, in 1967-68, progressive rock stations started popping up on the FM band. Relying on album cuts (as opposed to singles) for their play list, these stations took advantage of FM capabilities to broadcast in stereo and introduced a new form of programming to the starving ears of the American Youth. Gone were the "ants-in-my-pants" talking deejays, demised were the offensive ads for skin cream and dishwashing soap, and annihilated were the insipid "yummy-yummy, goo-goo" songs. In short, FM progressive rock catered to the more intelligent, aware audience that always existed but was never recognized.

In spite of itself, however, AM still flourishes. Today, it seems more of a parody of FM than it does a separate band. But still, even the most devout FM listener has a voluminous appetite for those oldies-but-moldies that brought him solace during those tedious, sometimes difficult, growing years.

And that's what Nuggets is all about. Nuggets is a two-record, twenty-seven song trip down the proverbial Memory Lane. Within its grooves you'll find some of the great songs you wish you had never forgotten, some you wish you had never heard, and still others that are so bad that you love hating them! In any case, Nuggets is guaranteed to send you on zany flashbacks.

The record covers the years 1965 to 1968–four years that essentially showed the music industry reacting to the Beatles, who were the trend setters. (On side one we get a gem from 1965, "Lies" by the Knickerbockers, where the lead singer does a better John Lennon than Mr. Ono himself!) The market was flooded with groups, groups, and even more groups. Some of these groups became nationally famous (The Shadows of Knight, Nazz, The Blues Project); some became regionally famous (The Remains, The Leaves, The Premiers). By and large, it's the former of these two that provides the thrills on Nuggets.

The highlights includes the enticing "Sit Down I Think I Love You" as performed by The Mojo Men, a cover of the Stephen Stills-Buffalo Springfield song that is approximately one-hundred times better than the BS original. We get "Moulty" by the Barbarians–the true-to-life story as sung by Moulty himself of how he lost his hand in an accident and subsequently learned to play the drums. He drops such lines as "I've lived through it all" and "All I need is a girl, a real girl, and I'll be the Complete Man!!" Ecchhh! Hand or no hand, this guy Moulty must really be the biggest asshole that has ever lived!

Included are the scourges of the acid-rock garage-punk bands, The Electric Prunes and "I Had Too Much to Dream Last Night", plus Count Five with their three minute fireball, "Psychotic Reaction". Anybody who was anybody in neighborhood rock groups would have included these in their repetoire. And especially "Dirty Water" by the Standells–it's about the Charles River–had to be played.

It's a shame, though, that so much on this album is anonymous to me. Have you ever heard of The Chocolate Watch Band?, The Magic Mushrooms?, The Seeds? or The Thirteenth Floor Elevators? I haven't. Or what about The Vagrants?, Mouse? or The Magicians? Me neither. Seeing all these names on paper admittedly gives a clue to the insane madness going on with all these groups trying to be the ultimate freak-out, but on record it falls apart. Indeed, it's a matter of taste, and there are literally thousands of songs from which to pick. But the hallmark oldies album has yet been assembled for me. (I'm still waiting for The Best of the One-Shot Groups, too).

Santana

By Mike Kostek

Santana–CARAVANSERAI (Colukmbia KC 31610) time: 51:10

Who likes Santana? Who doesn't like Santana? Ralph J. Gleason does, Stevie Rolling Stones does, Stanley Led Zep does, Gary Traffic does, Rene Johnny Winter does, Mike Mothers of Invention does, Sam Chicago sure do and Jeffrey John Cage can dig it too. I'm leaving out Shelley Judy Collins and Gina Jethro Tull, but I'm sure you know they do too, and so does Billy Pig Iron. Even Dickie O'Jays goes for them.

What do these guys got? Well, they've got not only one backbeat you can't lose, they've got three different ones. Carlos on guitar has never played a lot of different notes, but he's more interested in the sound of it, the feel, if you weel. Ditto Gregg Rolie on organ. It has to be hard doing what they do, because no one's come close to imitating them in four years, and no business is more imitative than pop music. One thing you can't imitate is talent, and you can't deny Santana has talent. They continually come up with sparkling drum breaks, slick rhythm tricks and shifting song moods. However, on their last album, they ran into a lot of trouble as they came up with a lot of tricks they'd used before. So, instead of repeating their own tricks and borrowing from Tito Puente and Joe Cuba again, Carlos and the boys looked around and found some other sources of "inspiration". At this time I feel it proper that we should publically credit the real writers and musical predicessors of Caravanserai, Miles Davis and Mahavishnu John McLaughlin.

The first signs of a shift in Santana's tight musical direction appeared on the Fillmore: The Last Days album. Santana did a very uncharacterisitc set, including Miles' "In A Silent Way." On the Carlos Santana & Buddy Miles Live album is a rocking piece by John McLaughlin called "Marbles"; later, Carlos was reported to be recording with McLaughlin and the Mahavishnu Orchestra.

So what's the result of mixing a rocking Chicano/Latino rhythm band, well-versed in older Latin music, with middle period mellow Miles Davis and psychedelic John McLaughlin? A strange brew to be sure. These three different influences swirl in and out, and make for a more subtle, more mature Santana album than ever before. On the Fillmore album they play a hard driving version of "Incident At Neshabur" before slipping into "In A Silent Way". This contrast is a good example of what to expect on Caravanserai.

This is a long album (51 min.), and all of the time is needed to get all three bands on. The trouble with Caravanserai is that there is no real synthesis of the three styles. There'll be a Miles cut, an old-style hard/soft Santana cut with Carlos picking McLaughlin guitar lines all over the place, and then an attempted synthesis which succeeds in only sounding schizoid; a McLaughlin break here, a Santana soul chorus over hot rhythms and a quiet Miles melody sound in the middle just don't quite slip along together. These attempted synthesises are furthered impeded by the fact that there is little new here. What happens is the band will either steal a lick or play a very close variation of a phrase from Miles or McLaughlin. The result may sound very impressive to the naive listener, but to wiser heads it will sound quite fishy indeed. The trouble with all this borrowing is that both Miles and McLaughlin were creating new musical forms and expressions with their styles, while Santana is simply treading water, making a passable blend, but failing to even approach the creative level of Miles and John.

There is a lot of "Singing Winds, Crying Beasts" on here

("Eternal Caravan of Reincarnation", "Waves Within" and one Santana-Miles combination, "Future Primitive", a clumsy mix of some "Silent Way" electric quietness being run over by slap-slap frenetic bongos and "pico-pico's). The major piece on here is "All The Love Of The Universe". It begins in a swirl of giant chords, swishing cymbols and tape jerk reverse feedback, moving to a building bullfight caracas chorus, "ooo-hoo" before slopping into a Latino-soul chorus singing about all the love of the universe. The bullfight music comes back and a Latin Pop flavor comes in before the chorus hits–a long note, "meeeaaeeeaeee" that wavers up and down between sour and sweet. They run through this twice and have a very strange bridge with an electric piano and cymbols sluttering up the scale, almost not making it. When they finally do get up enough to start the chorus, you feel it's a major accomplishment as if it took all the love in the universe for these guys to make it and keep the song going. Carlos now solos, using some obvious McLaughlin stutterings, and they shift abruptly to Gregg Rolie on organ, then flip over to Neal Schon on guitar and fade out with the bullfight caracas theme. The middle part though, is the real meat here, because under the three solos the rhythm section is running wild, picking out beautiful counterpoints and building things along perfectly. "All The Love Of The Universe" is one of the ugliest pretty songs you'll ever hear, with the abrupt shifts that are just a little out of time, and the chorus that is a mere step away from cracking into pure sourness, but it all adds up to a great kind of wildness that is exhilarating to hear. You know they could have hired some idiot chorus to sing it perfectly, but instead they've got Carlos, Rico Reyes and James Mingo Lewis singing as if they were giving their all, doing the best they can, carried away by the flying music.

There are, of the ten titles, about three vintage Santana steaming rock workouts. There are the three Miles Davis quiet numbers, and the other four are more 'moody' Latino songs (Like "Evil Ways") or else combinations of all three. The intro of the last cut on the album, "Every Step Of The Way" is a blatant steal from McLaughlin's Devotion album. I mean, even the instruments sound the same, and Carlos plays the same guitar lines and the same types of lines that John uses on "Dragon Song". After the Devotion intro, they're off into another Santana rucher.

Santana is a tremendously commercial band, certainly the most of any of the San Francisco bands (they got top billing on Fillmore, not the Dead), and are one of the best-sellers in the world. For a band this commercial, Caravanserai is certainly a major change. While it does have a lot of good music on it, and won't wear out as quickly as their last three albums, Caravanserai doesn't do what it tries to do as well as Abraxas does. However, Santana's future holds a lot more promise now then it did after their last album.

Grand Funk

By Stephen Fine

While still immersed in an intense Legal battle with their ex-manager Terry Knight, Grand Funk Railroad has churned out a new album; "Phoenix".

Although the album is produced by all of Grand Funk, the credit here should go to Mark Farner, the group's lead guitarist, for composing all of its 10 songs.

What is most interesting about "Phoenix" is the insight Farner has given about his lifestyle as a member of Grand Funk, in the songs.

"Trying To Get Away" is a song that has the flavor of Farner's longing to move on past the chaos he's into from being the big hero in his niche of the rock world.

"Someone" is a simple love song that is instrumentally one of the clearest tracks Grand Funk has ever produced. Farner quite plainly asks "why should I care for someone who doesn't care for me, a basic yearning that he has quite nicely layed down musically and lyrically.

"She Got To Move Me" displays his humor in the form of a reassurance that he is really not taking himself too seriously. The song is a tale told by an outraged rock star who's found out that he's been duped by a 14 year old super groupie into going to bed.

The main area in which Farner has failed is his attempt at writing about the social and political ills that beset the country. The three political songs "I Just Gotta Know" (a poor boy's street "Fighting Man"), "So You Won't Have to Die" (an overpopulation song) and "Freedom is For Children" (self-explanatory) contain a deluge of non sequitar political messages that add up to a rock star trying to live up to true Dylanesque vision of "The Answer is Blowing in the Wind" and failing miserably out of naivetivity.

Aside from these faults "Phoenix" is a step forward for Grand Funk both musically and lyrically. Farner has shown he has the capability to produce songs which are sensitive, yet are still good rock 'n roll.

At The Folklore Centre

Whether you may know it or not the Amherst Folklore Centre is sitting right down there on Spring Street entertaining the area with some mighty fine talent. No, I'm sorry you'll not find ear-piercing rock and roll within these walls rather a mode of music of a gentler sense, folk music. Probably many of you have never actually heard of John Herald or Jeremy Steig or other performers that have played at the Centre yet these are the people that presently are on the incline, on the way up, as the saying goes. The Folklore Centre is giving groups of this caliber the exposure and at the same time bringing the very best of the business to our area.

This Friday and Saturday a group going by the name of New Breath & Spirit will be performing, beginning at 8 p.m. each evening. The assemblage boasts David Cohen, formerly of Country Joe and the Fish, along with his two other members. Their music is light and serene, salted with traces of country blues and New England sunshine.

Lady Sings The Blues
Written for the screen by Terence McCloy and Chris Clark and Suzanne de Passe, based upon the life of Billie Holiday. Directed by Sidney Furie. With Diana Ross, Billy Dee Williams, and Richard Pryor.

Lady Sings The Blues is no model of a great movie; it's sticky, long, often clumsy, and more about Diana Ross than Billie Holiday; but there wasn't one moment of it I didn't enjoy. The film is like so many others of the musical biography genre that one has the sneaking suspicision director Sidney Furie disciplined himself through late night screenings of The Helen Morgan Story or I'll Cry Tomorrow. Beyond the inclusion of certain four letter words, this film could have been made fifteen years ago. It wears its Hollywood product label proudly on its sleeve. The story of Billie Holiday has been receiving much play recently, an off--Broadway play recently opened and another film and Broadway play have been seriously discussed. It is doubtful that any of these projects will be aimed so clearly at the tear ducts of matinee ladies as this one. If you have ever wondered what has happened to the "woman's picture," it's here wallowing in its own glory, only Diana Ross has replaced Susan Hayward.

It is fitting that Lady Sings The Blues marks the screen debut of Diana Ross. There hasn't been a more carefully mounted debut of a singer-turned-moviestar since Barbra Striesand in Funny Girl. Unlike Striesand, Diana Ross only suggests her talents as both a comedianne and dramatic actress. This is because at the moments when Billie Holiday's artistry needs to be something extraordinary, Diana Ross sounds like a tinny echo. You find yourself wondering why audiences are so enthralled with this performer. She lacks the necessary intensity. Diana Ross is talented, but much of her success has come with slick packaging. Thankfully the packaging is gone and one is both delighted by the charming young actress making her screen debut and dismayed she isn't anything more than competent.

The film uses Billie Holiday's drug problems as its touchstone. It opens with her arrest for heroin possession then flashes back to trace what led her to this moment of extreme anguish in a padded cell. If any artist faced with more obstacles in the way of her success, it was Billie Holiday. She was born out-of-wedlock, her ailing great-grandmother died clutching her a death clasp that so traumatized her that she spent a month in a mental hospital recovering from shock, a man tried to rape her at age ten. She was placed in a catholic home and one night was locked in a room with a corpse for punishment. In her teens she became a prostitute. These events are skimmed over in Lady Sings The Blues, what is prevalent is the suggestion of Billie's subdued anger at a world which never treated her with any degree of humanity. Miss Ross is best at these moments of quirky intensity, you can feel the neurotic compulsions writhe in her psyche. You hope they will manifest themselves when she sings, as they must have when Billie Holiday mesmerized audiences, yet they never do. I was never not aware that it was Diana Ross singing; her voice is too distinctive in its soft harshness.

What Ms. Ross lacks in her vocal rendering she makes up for in her early scenes as a girl who becomes immediately enthralled with performing in a small Harlem dive. She auditions as a dancer to the cafe owner's amusement then, through the cajoling of the club's piano player, is given a chance to sing. She wows him in a scene that is so reminiscent of the-star-is-born sequences of other films that it's downright embarrassing. She adapts the name Billie Holiday and turns the raunchy and degrading atmosphere of Dean and Dean's into a somewhat respectable supper club. Billy is given the title of "lady" by McCay (Billy Dee Williams), a man she falls flat for when she sees him arrive at the club. He is probably the best groomed matinee idol in years. Mr. Dee Williams has all the potential of becoming a black Clark Gable, the director has gone out of his way to make him appear so. Whether he can act or not has yet to be determined. The part is written for him in Lady only allows him to be anything more than very nice looking. As his part in Billies' life becomes more and more important, the character becomes less and less real. It is an unintentional paradox, but one which doesn't diminish the emotional power of the film. He fits well in the gloss and sentiment of the melodrama.

Billie joins a touring band led by two white men and on their first tour South, the glib and suave member of the pair gets her hooked on junk. The remainder of the film chronicles her spiral downward ending on a moment of triumph, as ironic as it may seem, when she receives a standing ovation at Carnigie Hall. The most startling problem with the script is the convenient way it glosses over large sections of Billie Holiday's career. When other films do this, they self-consciously plod along; this one does it so unabashedly that the audience begins to believe it has been missing details that are never there. The clumsiness isn't nearly as irksome as it should be. Upon leaving the theater you find yourself trying to piece together a story with unnumerable missing links, but while in the dark, they remain in the back of your mind. The reason is the film works very well within each scene. Sidney Furie allows his actors a laxness which approaches impervisation. It isn't at all a tightly made film. Scenes go on too long in an attempt at naturalism which pretty much works. It has been especially useful in eliciting a good performance from Ms. Ross. She has never acted in a film before and worked twelve hours a day for 41 out of 42 days of shooting. Her ease in acting comes more with her reacting to the part rather than giving it a dimension clearly not her own. It was a chance that paid off; Diana Ross is not Billy Holiday, as the ads suggests, but Billie Holiday is groomed for the talents of Diana Ross and talented she is.

Diana Ross

Furie has wisely used a series of sepia-tohed stills to link together many of the story's loose end. They work well as an index, but even more importantly accent the singer's emotional descent. They are especially effective in the final moments when Billie stands on the Carnegie Hall stage singing "God Bless The Child" while cut outs of newspapers stories neatly finish telling the story. He is less successful in handling the romance. These are Ms. Ross's worst moments. She kisses Dee Williams with the same intensity she kissed Ed Sullivan after performing on his show. When the two of them are alone together it is the time when the acting is most forced. Even a worse intrusion is the Michel LeGrand music score which swells up behind the lovers as if a time warp sent a transistor radio back two decades and it was left tuned on a Muzak station.

It is difficult to take great exception with the film as being an innacurate rendering of the sad and brutal life of a great singer for in reducing the story to its lowest common emotional denominator, it deals with an unknown factor. A character we know only through her records. Yet here you clearly sense where the film falls down. Diana Ross lacks the brooding quality of Billy Holiday. The poet Frank O'Hara wrote of how he felt "while she whispered a song along the keyboard to Mal Waldron and everyone and I stopped breathing." Diana Ross only makes you want to yawn. Her film debut is a technical knock-out. One which makes you conscious that there are bigger things. more applicable roles in the future.

She isn't a dynamic actress; she's a natural charmer and the most enjoyable parts come early. When she needs the intensity of the later parts such as when she is writhing in the DT's, she relies more upon her make-up man's ability to make her appear a sick sow rather than her own acting ability. This uneasiness was also found in Richard Pryor's performance as the Piano Player; if Billy Dee Williams was wooden, than Pryor was all too conscious that he was being filmed. His performance bumps Ms. Ross's. He completely underplays his former role as a nightclub stand-up comic. You begin to believe he's afraid to address the camera directly.

Lady Sings The Blues is clearly a faulted film. Some of its bad points approach being offensive. Billie Holiday's relationship with her mother evokes memories of actress Susan Kohner's relationship to her screen mother in Imitation of Life. It is clearly an unnecessary melodramatic touch. Also you never do find out just how Louis keeps himself out of the red. He never works, he never does anything but make a poor conscience for Billi'e self-destructive ways. But the bad points are inconsequential when considering the wallop of some scenes and the final emotional impact. This is one of the most enjoyable films I've seen in quite some time. It's a reverant throwback to the melodramas Hollywood studies would pump out. They were glibly passed off as "tow-or-three handkerchief" dramas, but are often the sort of film people long for when they berate the current movie scene. When slickly made, they're bound to make you laugh or put a lump in your throat. If you're a sap for musical biographies, no matter how trashy, here's a beauty for you. Maybe some day an adventurous filmmaker will make a film about Billie Holiday which doesn't emphasize its star's manicured fingernails or her 43 costume changes, but till then I'll sit tight with this one.

Russell's Latest, Joyous and Exciting

By Brian Dailey

Savage Messiah
written for the screen by Christopher Logue, from the book by H.S. Ede. Directed by Kenn Russell. With Dorothy Tutin, Scott Antony, Helen Mirren, Lindsay Kemp, and Michael Gough.

From the past experience one almost learns to expect to be surprised and amazed by Ken Russell films but with his new film the only surprise that greets the audience is that Russell is simply telling the story of a French sculptor and he does it with such tenderness and care that I, for one, remained seated in the theater hoping for more when the film had ended.

With Savage Messiah, Russell seems to have forsaken the excessive sensuality and lusciousness which was always apparent in his earlier work (Women in Love, The Music Lovers, The Devils, and The Boyfriend) and gone back to the good old days of what he says is "two people in a room talking." As in much of his previous work this film contains Russell's theme of the artist at odds with society; creation versus subsistence; love and hate battling away in the soul of genius. But of Savage Messiah Russell says "it's more a film about art and various aspects of art and attitudes to it than anything I've made before, but the dialogue is all camouflage so that it all goes around it."

We first see Henri Gaudier (Scott Antony), the struggling young artist of about twenty, in a library as he draws the bone structure of his own hand. It is here where he first meets Sophie Brzeska (Dorothy Tutin), a Polish writer twice his age who has high hopes about writing a great novel of truth but at the same time fears to write and publish it. Gaudier's self-assured genius and great vitality captures the lonely Sophie, as well as the audience, and forces both to follow him. The two artists form an uncommon bond of friendship which eventually leads to their vows of mutual love. They love one another in a sexless relationship decreed by Sophie who continually calls Henri "boy" and is ready to settle for a brother and sister relationship, even though he isn't. Although continually putting off marriage until that day when Henri has his exhibition, the two lovers do decide to take each other's names and end up living together in a dirty little cellar apartment in a train station.

Russell immediately throws us into the dizzying world of the two artists. At first we are almost overcome by their effervescence but soon we adjust to the wild rhythm of the film and become completely involved in the life of this strange pair.

Early in the film Henri says "Art is alive!" and he goes on, with the help of Russell, to prove his words are true. Russell assaults our senses and lets us know that not only is the creative art of Henri Gaudier-Brzeska "alive" but that the vibrant and "alive" piece of film which we are watching is "art." In this same scene the two rebels go to an art museum where they proceed to disrupt everyone in sight exhibiting the carefree happiness in their hearts as well as bringing great joy to the audience.

Later on, in an extravagantly conceived and showily edited monologue, Sophie recounts for Henri's information her life story as she prepares a stew for dinner. While articulating about her impoverished background she symbolizes her resentment of it as she slices cabbage, chops up carrots and gouges out the eyes from the potatoes; yet with every slice of the knife, she cuts another emotion revealing another portion of her beauty and vulnerability.

When Henri brings Sophie to his parent's country home Russell's enchantment with color and the Baroque is most obvious. The stark and austere beauty of the countryside is filmed in cold muted colors which help to create the mood of the parents into which the lovers step. Russell films it all as realistically and truthfully as possible yet even the plainest objects appear beautiful under his direction. He isn't afraid to show someone's faults or scars on their skin because he knows this isn't where beauty lies. Henri says that Sophie is beautiful because "beauty is in her bones" and Russell makes a point of showing us that beauty. He manages to produce some of the most gorgeous color photography ever seen on the screen when he films Sophie in the old dark dairy house exploring the collections of junk inside with only the light from a lantern.

Scott Antony and Dorothy Tutin

In another scene, as much to the credit of Antony and Tutin as to Russell, the lovers sit beside a stream and Henri sketches the ducks on it and then sketches Sophie's face and touches her for the very first time. His fingers move softly across her cheek toward her ear, his thumb traces the line of her eyebrow and then her lip, while after a moment's hesitation she begins to smile. The care and tenderness which the lovers show each other is only equalled by that which Russell shows in his filming of the scene.

In the only scene that approaches the distortion present in The Music Lovers and The Devils, Russell shows us a wild night-club called the "Vortex" which resembles a 60's discotheque rather than a cabaret of the early 1900's. Before the walls covered with giant modern graphics, bizarre songs about woman's rights are sung by very real and juicy red lips which protrude from a painting of a reclining nude Odalisque. Later on in the same club we see what appears to be left over footage from The Boyfirend as a chorus of dancing girls with skimpy silver lame dresses with matching headpieces and silver sparkle eye make-up do a twenties song and dance routine.

Technically the most impressive thing in this film is Russell's use of montage. With what can only be termed a great achievement in cutting Russell shows Henri as he simultaneously packs away his statues and quarrels with Sophie. As each swing of the hammer pounds another nail into the crate, Sophie's enraged face flashes on the screen and the anger within each of the lovers is made obviously clear.

At another point in the film with a series of old-fashioned and elementary cutting techniques Russell manages to superbly produce suspense as Henri stops dangerously long on the railroad tracks to gather the flowers he dropped while a train approaches and threatens to kill him.

Russell also manages to show Henri's personal stamina and willpower as well as the sense of drama inherent in artistic creation in another fantastic scene by his use of intense cutting. Henri has told an art dealer that he has sculpted a classical nude torso out of marble and the dealer makes an appointment to see it the next morning. Henri, who hasn't really done any such statue, is forced to go out to steal the slab of marble and carve the nude torso out of it all within twelve hours. Scott Antony's vitality and freshness makes Henri's struggle to meet his deadline even more interesting.

The script by Christopher Logue from H.S. Ede's book is very verbose and at times trite but it really doesn't detract from your enjoyment of the film. At one point a retired military officer says to Henri, "They tell me some young men these days would rather go to jail than war... it's all that art, you know!" Logue seems to be really straining to make any similarity or comparison between the first World War and today's Viet Nam.

Near the end of the film a friend of Henri reads a letter by the artist while in the war and another person at the table says, "Whoever wrote that should be shot." To this Henri's friend replies, "He was, last Thursday!" From there Russell cuts to Sophie's tear-stained face and then to a photo of Henri with his army buddies before he died. It may be a little heavy-handed but it all works well in the context of the film.

The last sequence is a posthumous exhibition of Henri's sculptures, revolving at varying speeds, while passersby give glances of curiosity or an occasional chuckle and Sophie stands among it all crying in a daze. Russell's direction of the display of Henri's art is quiet and austere as he refuses to impose the will of one artist on another. I left the film, as I suspect most did, with the feeling that a great talent had been lost at the ridiculously young age of twenty three, even before his genius had the chance to mature.

Scott Antony gives a credible performance as the young energetic Henri Gaudier-Brzeska. Antony's performance conforms to Russell's idea of what an artist should be; the artist as worker. Russell seems to be showing than an artist's work is 90% hard slog and sweat and 10% inspiration. Antony is best showing Henri's exuberence and constant vitality.

But the triumph of the film is Dorothy Tutin, the British actress who portrays Sophie Brzeska-Gaudier. Ms. Tutin demands our sympathy right from the beginning of the film. Her small tight body and actions are reminiscent of that strange mixture of comedy and tragedy which Charlie Chaplin always succeeded conveying with his body. At one moment she trudges along a dark street after Henri in pathetic desperation and the next minute her funny little body is dancing with unseen elves. Ms. Tutin also has that great and rare ability to look like a beautiful young girl and at the same time a tired and worldly-wise woman. Her range of acting is incredible and she makes full use of it in the many dramatic monologues she has to deliver.

As a whole the film is no masterpiece but the good points far outway the bad, and besides it's all a very exciting and joyous cinematic experience.

Theater

A Journey Worth Taking

by Jim Lavrakas

The Journey of the Fifth Horse
By Ronald Ribman

If not totally profound, the UMass Theater's first performance of the year is certainly a completely entertaining experience. It succeeds in wrenching the viewer from the reality of Bartlett Hall into the realities – and there are three to contend with – of Journey.

It is a slick and smooth production with Harry Mahnken directing; it is an obviously well-thought out production with much planning and practice behind it. Jeff Fiala's interpretation of the stage setup strays from the conventional. He utilizes a revolving stage in scene changes. The sets are tilted towards the audience seats as if the reality of the play is about to fall into the audience's lap. These revolving transitions from scene to scene intensifies the viewer's concentration on the action. Fiala sticks to the most basic of props and the sets seem shrouded in khaki toner.

The revolving scenes are something like the turning of the pages of a book in a movie to suggest the passing of time. Here, this vehicle is less obvious and more practical because it helps to focus the viewers concentration on the development – the journey – of the central character, Zoditch.

Zoditch is the first reader of the Grubov publishing house. He is ordered to read a diary (authored by one, Nikolai Chulkaturin) by the supervising printer of the house, Pandalevski. It is at this point, at the beginning of the second scene of act one, that the play begins to delve in the mind of Zoditch. He begins to fantasize encounters and confrontations with the people with whom he coexists. An imaginary altercation between Zoditch and Pandalevski is acted out on the stage. Zoditch strives to prove that he is superior, or at least an equal, and succeeds in knocking him down twice.

An amorous confrontation between Zoditch and the owner of the printing house, Miss Grubov takes place immediately after. Zoditch slowly succeeds in making love to her in his clumsy, clutching way. Quickly Rubin, the apprentice reader, appears and literally pushes Zoditch off his bed, and continues to fend Zoditch off, and proceeds to make first casual, then passionate love to Miss Grubov.

Zoditch sits down to read Chulkaturin's diary. It is at this point that the play begins to delve into the mind of Chulkaturin. Chulkaturin appears and narrates. We begin to see action which no mere reading of any diary could elaborate on. It is frustrating action which manifests Chulkaturin's personality. Periodically, Zoditch makes an aside. These always carry an air of revolt, cynicism, and frustration. We begin to see that although these two men are not alike in stature, they have lived and thought similarly.

In this scene in act one Chulkaturin's lawyer, Levinov, describes his coach ride to Chulkaturin's house. "I find myself hard put to even describe the coach ride over. The driver, a lunatic of a fellow, was absolutely insensitive to anything other than meeting his schedule. Although the four horses we had were good and we were flying along, the madman insisted on adding a fifth horse. This poor horse was completely out of place, completely superfluous..."

Chulkaturin sees his existence as completely useless. He describes himself as an "interruption", a "pause", in other people's lives. At the end of the play, after he fights with an army captain, Capt. Ivan Narvinsky, over a coy landowner's daughter, Liza Ozhogin, he is outcast. She becomes pregnant by the Captain. When Chulkaturin comes back to her with forgiveness (the Capt. has moved on) he is, even then, denied by her. He dies leaving his house to his housekeeper, and his clothes to her grandson, a strangely old little boy. Chulkaturin leaves no family or friends. His existence has been only something cerebral, not physical.

The conflict in the play comes in the development of Zoditch as he reads about his own life from the diary. The viewer is capable of comparing the two men, yet Zoditch is not. He really is a blind man, although he senses something from the beginning. All through his life he has denied the reality of his existence; he is also a superfluous man. As the play moves on he slowly comes to that realization. As he realises that he is "a fifth horse fastened uselessly to the carriage of Life" it cuts him down. Zoditch slowly sees the parallels in his life and the life about which he is reading.

Zoditch is also a man without friends. We see Chulkaturin, at one point, on his death bed. His old family "friend", Doctor Korvin, symbolically drains his life's blood from him. Zoditch's neighbors suck the life from him in a different way. His neighbor, Gregory, admits to him that noone knows anything about Zoditch's life, yet he comes to Zoditch to ask him to plea to the landlady for his freezing family. Zoditch is known only as an expert in the Russian language. We see the similarities.

By the end of the play the episodes in each man's life parallels the other so closely, both in time and in circumstance, that the viewer can't help but assume that Zoditch is fully aware of his nameless existence.

The action in the diary shows the engagement of Liza to Biznionkov, a friend of the family's. Chulkaturin is an onlooker to the engagement, as Zoditch imagines it all. Zoditch suddenly cries, "No Miss Grubov! Not Pandalevski." This is the moment of his crushing realization. To Chulkaturin he screams in anger, "This is a story of lies. You are a liar. You distort. ...I reject your manuscript. I reject you." Still in anger, "I am the one that is loved." Then in anguish, "I am loved. There is no other ending." But he knows the real ending.

To make the parallels stand out more vividly the play calls for certain characters in both Zoditch's and Chulkaturin's life to be portrayed by the same actors.

Accolades go to P.A. Smart as Rubin and Captain Narvinsky. He makes a fine usurper and home wrecker. As both characters he is quintessentially arrogant, superior, irritating, devious, conniving, and swaggering.

More praise go to Susan Heuck as Miss Grubov and Liza Ozhogin. Both characters are quite similar down underneath. However, Miss Grubov has succeeded far enough in the world to throw off the facade, while Liza is in the process of finishing the mold for her mask. The women are looked at very pessimistically in Journey. Landlady Prolomnaya is heartless and repressive. Anna, Liza's mother, is a stereotyped dumby, Terentievna, Chulkaturin's housekeeper, is a greedy graverobber type, and Tania, "an unmarried girl", is a social-climbing floozie. It is quite a lineup.

Lewis Louraine as Pandalevski and Bizmionkov, again, deserves much praise for his portrayal of basically similar men with different fronts. Pandalevski is an ambitious man, condescending and tyranical. He is the devil who always has enough resources at hand to deny the need to be patronizing. He is sneaky and frustratingly resilient. Bizmionkov is a man with whom people confide. He is also an ambitious man yet is smart enough to stay on the fringe of the action until he can step in to his own advantage. Mr. Louraine aptly portrays him as a person who always comes out smelling like a rose.

Ellen Jorgenson as Volobrina and Feathers, both servant characters, has a smaller part, yet she turns in a fine complementary performance. She is the "inferior" servant type who ends up being superior in the eyes of both Zoditch and Chulkaturin.

As the loping, ape-like Zoditch, Richard Birdsall is really fine in his force and suggestiveness. He continually impregnates the drama with an air of frustration and stubborn denial. He is like the monkey which begins the play. "In Samarkand I saw a monkey, yellow-splotched and dying in a cage, and as I made to hasten by, he grasped my sleeve as if there might be something more to the matter." Everybody in his life "hastens by" and he vainly tries to deny this.

Jeffrey Ryan calmly and subtly portrays the sad, artist-type, Nikolai Chulkaturin. His sadness is infectuous. He aptly portrays the invisible man, ignored and run down. He is a faceless friend.

Other good performances include David Miller's clothes-haunted Sergey, Judity Keyes' sickly; insistent Terentievna, and Janis Cheney's brutal, criminal landlady Prolomnaya. Larry Breitbord as the father stereotype, Kirilla Ozhogan, Liza's father, is a showstopper. From the absent-minded brusqueness to the irritable tapping of his finers, Mr. Breitbord succeeded in not only punching the action with comic relief, but also portrayed the shifting, hypocritical social values of that time, of any time.

It is a quick two and a half hours of thorough enjoyment. Support your local theater company.

SATURDAY'S FILMS
The Green Berets (1968). John Wayne directed this appalling apology for our Vietnam expenditure. It is such a trashy film that in its final moments, while Wayne comforts a poor Vietnamese orphan explaining to him that Americans will never abandon the cause of freedom in Southeast Asia, the sun sets in the South China Sea (which is in the east). It was filmed in the swamps of Georgia and Alabama which appear more like the Everglades than the Mekong Delta. As if it wasn't bad enough that Wayne insults your intelligence with this polemic, his fantastic visions of America's position in the world are completely tasteless. With Wayne, David Jansenn, and Aldo Ray. Channels 22 and 30.

Mabel Mercer and Bobby Short
Our pick for the best hour of television this week. Mabel Mercer, although she isn't widely known, is perhaps the most respected of American singers. Her admirers and students cover the gamut from Frank Sinatra to the late Billie Holiday. She only performs in select elite New York supper clubs where her intimate song styling can hold court. Her voice, by her own admission, isn't remarkable. "I used to have a soprano," she once said. "Now it's just noise." Bobby Short is quickly becoming one of the most discussed singers on the popular scene, although for more than a decade, he has held sway over the New York supper club scene. His raspy, mellow voice has been heard most recently in his fine collection of Cole Porter songs on Atlantic (Bobby Short Loves Cole Porter). When Mercer and he have performed at Carnegie Hall together it is one of New York's most memorable evenings. Tonight they will sing, together and singley, a repertoire of their best songs Channel 57.

West Side Story (1961). When this film was originally released it won nearly every conceivable award and was heralded as the greatest film musical ever produced. This praise seems ludicrous upon reseeing as the original Sondheim-Bernstein-Laurent-Robbins stage musical seems woefully haggard. The only distinguishing asset is the breathtaking choreography and the well-performed score, otherwise the musical seems stagey and pretentious. Channels 22 and 30.

LOUIS FALCO DANCE COMPANY
The Louis Falco Dance Company, described by Clive Barnes of the New York Times as "the most exciting new modern dance company to emerge during the last decade," will be in-residence at UMass Nov. 16-18 under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council.

The engagement is part of the 1972/73 Massachusetts Coordinated Dance Residency Project supported by grants from the National Endowment for the Arts and the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities, and features the rock group Vertical Burn.

During its half-week visit to UMass, The Louis Falco Dance Company will offer two different evening programs in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Friday, Nov. 17, the Company will offer "Argot", "The Sleepers", and "Caviar". Saturday, Nov. 18, the residency will conclude with a program including "Huescape", "Nostalgia", and "Caviar". Reserved tickets to both performances are available at $1.50 to full-time UMass undergraduates and $3 to the general public and may be obtained by contacting the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst, telephone (413) 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour prior to each performance.

SMITH-AMHERST ORCHESTRA
The Smith-Amherst Orchestra under the direction of Conductor William Wittig will open its new season with a performance of two works by Beethoven, the Fidelio Overture, and the Ninth Symphony. The program will be on Friday, November 17, in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College.

The Ninth Symphony, perhaps Beethoven's crowning achievement, is a massive work scored for chorus, solo voices, and orchestra. Completed in 1824, the work contains a magnificent setting of Schiller's "Ode to Jov."

The Overture to Fidelio, completed in 1814, was the fourth written for the opera. Brief and lively, it suits the tone of the opening scene very well, in spite of the fact that it is in a different key, and contains no thematic material from the opera itself.

Tonight's performance is scheduled to begin at 8:15 p.m., and will be open to the public at no charge.

BED AND BOARD (1971)
The third and final Truffaut film concerning itself with Antoine Doinel, the autobiographical character Truffaut introduced a decade ago as the troubled adolescent in The Four Hundred Blows. This is the happiest and most affectionate of the three. Doinel is now married, happily, and the film concerns itself with various incidents which fill his life. The plot doesn't seem to go anywhere; it becomes enmeshed in the wonderful array of characters Truffaut emphasizes. With Jean-Pierre Leaud, the actor who originally played the boy in Four Hundred Blows. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 11/18, 7:30 and 9:30.

CASINO ROYALE (1967)
This was meant to be the James Bond film to end all James Bond films. With a cast of thousands and almost as many directors James Bond seems to get lost in the shuffle. In fact there are more than one James Bond: Peter Sellers, Ursulla Andress, David Niven, Woody Allen, and Terence Cooper all play Agent 007. With nine screenwriters, seven directors, and millions of dollars, the film became a bit too much for all concerned. The plot has something to do with Bond's retirement but only someone with Bond's native intuition could follow it. No one will take the blame for this flat attempt at absurdity, but the directors listed include John Huston, Val Guest (listed twice), Ken Hughes, and Robert Parrish. Student Center Ballroom, Saturday 11/18, 6:30, 8:15, 10

COOL HAND LUKE (1967)

An entertaining, if a bit overly symbolic drama about a misfit in a Southern penal colony during the Thirties and his struggle with his sadistic authorities. The humor is deftly underplayed, and the leisurely style blends well with the whole. The only dissonance is the heavy handed Christian symbolism towards the end, which attempts to turn his affalable victim of self-neglect into an existential martyr. Fortunately the philosophical thickness only slightly mars this otherwise enjoyable and disturbing story of prison life. Paul Newman's Luke is one of his most likeable performances and he is finely supported from Arthur Kennedy, who won an Oscar, and Jo Van Fleet. Hampden Dining Commons, Friday 11/17, 7 and 9:30.

DIARY OF A MAD HOUSEWIFE (1970)

The harried urban housewife becomes the brunt of Frank Perry's sarcastic attack on the fashionable Upper West Side millieu. It is occasionally droll and funny with a sympathetic performance from Carrie Snodgrass in the title role, but the tone is patronizing and completely elusive of any depth or compassion. The film finally is unconvincing having sacrificed any value for a number of cheap jokes. This sorely shows in the supporting performances, mainly Richard Benjamin's nasty husband who is played in such a strident tone as to be completely unbelievable. Frank Langella fares better as the young woman's lover, but finally he becomes too vaguely drawn in the unbelievable conclusion. The script by Eleanor Perry proved to be the last collaboration of this husband and wife team. (Note: the band in the discotheque sequence is Alice Cooper). Student Union Ballroom, Friday, 11/17, 7 and 9:30.

EASY RIDER (1969)

Dennis Hopper's freeflowing motorcycle opera about two freaks who attempt to tour the Southwest and South. The Rednecks get the most intelligent lines. The two freaks, one a mystic (Peter Fonda) the other a cocky, whiny con artist (Dennis Hopper) begin their motorcycle odyssey after smuggling heroin over the border and end it splattered by a highway somewhere in the deep South. Between these points they visit a commune, befriend a down and out lawyer (Jack Nicholson, the film's saving grace) visit a New Orlean's brother, and take an extended LSD trip. The improvisational dialogue (it seems) shamlessly strings counter culture cliches and remarks. Hopper's direction is simple, lyrical, and at times quite nice. Laslo Kovaks' camera captures a sense of wonder about the American Southwest and the movement of the journey. But to witness the hip snobbishness of this film is offensive and beyond Nicholson, the acting is rank. The soundtrack blasts forth with Stepenwolf and an odd assortment of other popular songs, including a number by Dylan. An exercise in intellectual elitism leads its audience to believe the death of two "flower children" at the hands of trigger-happy rednecks is a believable modern tragedy.

FANTASIA (1940)

When this full length cartoon was first released it was the most costly and ambitious ever made. It is Walt Disney's visual interpretation of eight famous musical themes: Bach's "Toccata and Fugue in D minor," Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite," Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," Stravinsky's "The Rite Of Spring," Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours," Mussorgsky's "Night On Bald Mountain," and Schubert's "Ave Maria." When Disney was shown rushes of the "Pastoral Symphony" sequence he exclaimed "This will make Beethoven!" The French critic Georges Sadont has written "Disney imagined he was Goethe but mainly succeeds in achieving only something at the level of the German turn-of-the-century chrosmo." A work of middle-brow vulgarity, often ponderous, such as the creation and evolution of the world to "The Rite Of Spring"; others are offensive, such as the Beethoven and Schubert. The film works best at its unpretentious moments: Mickey Mouse as the Sorcerer's Apprentice and the ghoulish "Night On Bald Mountain." The film was the first produced with stereophonic sound, a technical innovation in 1940 and used only in limited release. Received well by some critics, after its opening Bosley Crowther wrote in The New York Times "Motion picture history was made last night."

Audiences didn't warm quickly to Disney's vision and it lost money during the initial release. Disney became disillusioned and never again attempted a project on such a huge scale. The musical selections are by Leopold Stowkowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra. Amherst Cinema, Amherst, Calvin Theater, Northampton.

FAT CITY

John Huston (The Treasure Of The Sierra Madre, The Maltese Falcon, The African Queen) has made his first decent, hard-edged film in more than a decade. This is a story of people who live in their dreams and on the far side of success. It is the story of a failed boxer, played by Stacey Keach, who tries to make a comeback. His comeback story is patterned against that of an up-and-coming boxer, played by Jeff Bridges. Somehow you know how similar their lives are. Filmed in a small Californian city, the film captures much of the essence of those living on the periphery of their opes. Beautifully shot and acted, Hustion use of subdued color is especially effective. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Academy of Music, Northampton.

EVIL KNEIVAL (1971)

This 1971 film biography of the motorcycle daredevil of the same name has plenty of chills, thrills and spills. George Hamilton is convincing as the egomaniac who starts out as a hood and makes it big as a motorcycle daredevil. The film is a better than average drive-in feature, but you should not be looking for any profound meaning just clean entertainment. The supporting cast is very good, although Sue Lyon, as Mrs. Knieval, would be oether seen and not heard, especially considering the dialogue she is given. Mahar, Sunday, 11/19, 7 and 9

THE GANG THAT COULDN'T SHOOT STRAIGHT

Jimmy Breslin amazingly readable and funny novel has been made into a surprisingly flat and dull film. The joke about two two-bit gangs is bungled and the humor moves from occasionally funny to boring repetition all too quickly, and some of the ethnic humor and various routines are tasteless. Satire is a difficult art and it's obvious that director James Goldstone and scriptwriter Hugo Wait are novices at its execution. The cast, comprised mostly of Mafia caricatures, is headed by Jerry Orbach and Jo Van Fleet. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, 11/21, 7 and 9.

GEORGY GIRL (1966)

The dying fall of Britain's 'new wave', this eccentric comedy cast Lynn Redgrave as a plain Jane who envies her glamorous but selfish girl friend; she finally settles for adopting the friend's unwanted baby and marriage to a lecherous businessman. Touches of zany black comedy did not give the wanted illusion of freshness. With James Mason and Charlotte Rampling; directed by Silvio Narizzano from Peter Nichols' rather desperate screenplay. Campus Center Auditorium, Sunday, 11/19, 7 and 9:15.

LADY SINGS THE BLUES

This musical bio of Billie Holiday oozes all over the screen with typical Hollywood razzle-dazzleness. Contrary to what the ads say Diana Ross is not Billie Holiday, but she makes a decent movie debut. The film lacks direction: it can't decide whether to be a depiction of the degeration of a musical great or a super spectacular vehicle for Miss Ross. Some award should go to this film for its audacity of having Miss Ross singing "My Man" near the film's close, a la Streisand in Funny Girl. Billy Dee Williams is commendable as the unidentified man in Billie's life. Reviewed in Issue. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE MAGIC CHRISTIAN (1970)

An inept and piggish film of Terry Southern's short novella. It is meant as a fantasy to highlight the comic talents of Peter Sellers and Ringo Starr but its only memorable memory is a perversely comic vision of Racquel Welch as what appears to be an Amazon kitten with a whip. Thompson 104, Saturday, 11/18, 7:15, 8:45, and 11:15.

THE NEW CENTURIONS

The policeman as superstar. Rome had its centuroins to guard the frontiers from invading huns, we have the police ours to protect us from...Better acted than it probably deserved but only marginally entertaining. The plot moves in small bursts and doesn't seem to go anywhere, except into the bedroom of the worried wife of a cop where she faithfully awaits her husband's return each night. The film could have best been a public service spot. With George C. Scott, our best film actor, and Stacey Keach, who may well become our best new actor. Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton.

ON THE WATERFRONT (1954)

When people speak of great American films and great performances by American actors they cannot evade this powerful drama about life amongst New York longshoremen. Elia Kazan's anti-union stance has tarnished the film's central thesis some, however the film contains a number of extraordinary performances and sequences. Marlon Brando as Terry Malloy, the strong-armed boy of a group of gangsters who control a docker's union, gives his most polished and intense performance. He won an Oscar. Rod Steiger is remarkable as his older brother. The scene between these two in the back seat of a taxi is among the greatest in film. Two unforgettable love scenes with Brando and Eve Marie Saint (also an Oscar) and a climax of overpowering emotional impact. The use of naturalistic settings, the performance of Karl Malden, and the pounding Leonard Bernstein score are distractions, but not enough not to make this one of the most memorable of American films. See ad for time and place.

PLAY IT AS IT LAYS

Frank Perry's new film (David and Lisa, Last Summer, Diary of a Mad Housewife) deals with a woman on the brink of a nervous breakdown, as did Diary, but this time without the assistance of his wife on the screenplay. He badly needs her. Adapted from the novel by Joan Didion, the film never captures the terse spirit of Ms. Dideon's story of a Hollywood actress at a desperate point of her life. Despite Frank Perry, Tuesday Weld and Anthony Perkins give their typically faultless performances of two people who are slightly crazed. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

A SEPARATE PEACE

John Knowles classic story of the relationship between two boys at a New England prep school during the Second World War is filled with dialogue lifted from the book and spoken all over the lovely grounds of Philip Exeter Academy. Fine if you enjoy tours. Director Larry Peerce's attempt at naturalism eliminates the story's dramatic value. It unfolds in a series of lyrical scenes which lead nowhere. The non-professional actors do well enough. One of the year's major disappointments. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE SERVANT (1963)

This Joseph Losey-Harold Pinter collaboration deals with the relationship of an upper class indolent young man (Dirk Bogarde) and his servant (James Fox). Losey's brilliant socio-psychological drama is both a study in the ultimate sterility of an outdated class warfare and an exploration of fear and guilt in human relationships. The servility-domination theme of the two men is echoed in other relationships throughout the film and is most clearly seen in the brilliant restaurant scene in which three couples are revealted in relationships lacking real contact. The Servant is one of Losey's most assured films, a total integration of acting, fluid camerawork and design. Thompson 104, Sunday, 11/19, 7 and 9.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE-FIVE

Kurt Vonnegut Jr.'s college classic was obediently transformed by George Roy Hill into a sleek, lifeless, and shallow film which time trips decades with ease, but never approaches the interesting implications about time and space. The story concerns an Army medic who jumps from the bombing of Dresden to Babbitt-like life in a Midwestern city to conjugal splendor in an interstellar penthouse. Bonnegut's point, it seems, is life but a random sampling of events and one should emphasize the good and ignore the bad. The film emphasizes the silly sort of satire about Middle America that young people would feel manic toward if it were aimed at them. Here they laugh. Worse is the power-of-positive-believing which is at the center of Bonnegut's argument. The film is admirably edited yet cold in its maching-like precision. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

STOLEN KISSES (1969)

The further adventures of Truffaut's youthful hero Antoine Doinel, who first appeared in Truffaut's The Four Hundred Blows. The time is ten years later; he has just been discharged from the army and seeks, at first unsuccessfully, a girl whom he loves. A most delightful comedy, filled with the passion that says somewhere the illusion of love exists, if only a bit tarnished. It is one of the few recent movies which charms all audiences; Truffaut directs this film effortlessly. It literally sings. Some have said he has compromised himself for a bit of exportable French cuisine, but this sort of badmouthing cannot deny what an efficient and entertaining romance this film is. With Jean-Pierre Leaud, the young actor who played the troubled child in Blows. Mahar, Friday, 11/17, 7, 8:45, and 10:30

SWEET SWEETBACK'S BADASS SONG (1971)

Melvin Van Peeple's comedy-drama tour-de-force is probably the most influential and discussed of all the recent black films. It is one of the few which leave whites uptight. Van Peeples did everything with this film (wrote, produced, directed, starred, wrote music score, etc.) and although the results aren't altogether satisfying, and sometimes frightening, it remains one of the most memorable American films of recent years. Mahar, Sunday, 11/19, 7 and 9:15.

TAKE THE MONEY AND RUN (1969)

Some consider this to be the best Woody Allen comedy. In some ways they're not far from the truth. It is clearly his most vibrant and absurd. Simply, it's concerned with a bank robbery, or as much as a Woody Allen film could concern anything more than his perverse comic visions. The scene where his parents attempt to disguise themselves for a press interview is a gem. Student Union Ballroom, Tuesday, 11/21, 7 and 9:15.

TRASH (1970)

Paul Morrisey's first major success; his recent Heat is placing him among the most talked about new talent in years. A wildly funny comic vision of a man, Joe D'Allescandro, who is impotent and a junkie and married to Holly Woodlawn. Probably the first essential film to come out of Andy Warhol's Factory in the late Sixties. Filled with dazzling performances from the ouevre of Warhol superstars. Brash in concept and richly comic in execution. Mahar, Saturday, 11/18, 7, 9, and 11

HC Alumnus Defends Withdrawal

To The Editor:

As a 1971 Holy Cross graduate in graduate school here, I must take exception to the November 16 article about Holy Cross leaving the Yankee Conference. I am sure that if Coaches Jack Leaman and Dick MacPherson were in the shoes of new H.C. Athletic Director Ron Perry, faced with declining male enrollment (less than 20% of the male enrollment here) and the financial problems of a private school, they would have to do the same thing. Perhaps Holy Cross should never have joined the Yankee Conference, but that is past history now.

As far as Jack Leaman's statement that "they haven't beaten UMass in anything" (emphasis mine) "in three years up until Saturday's football victory," is concerned, I have first-hand knowledge of a contradiction. Being a former H.C. cross-country captain, I have great respect for Coach O'Brien and his track teams. But he would have to agree with me that on May 13, 1970, his team lost to a surprisingly strong effort by the Holy Cross team on the Fitton Field sandpit (track). I think that Mr. Leaman is a fine coach, but not a totally accomplished historian.

In conclusion, I must say that Ed (fire from the ashes) Doherty is no longer the best football coach in the Yankee Conference, but he is still the best gridiron coach in New England.

Stop Rape

To The Editor:

Have you ever heard of anyone getting raped on a bus? Yet, the numerous cases of rapes and assaults in the Amherst areas has steadily increased. Last year's suggested improvements of the Five College Bus System sounded encouraging. The enthusiasm generated by these reports has waned, however, due to the failure of the improvements to materialize. Improved bus service would have an effect on the assault figures since in the majority of the incidents hitchhiking has been a major factor. A few suggested improvements:

1. Well lit, sheltered (from the elements) waiting stations. And more of them.
2. Large, posted bus schedules in areas frequented by the student body (i.e. library, union, hatch, etc.).
3. Wallet sized schedules made available.
4. Debarkation anywhere along the bus route where convenient (i.e. red lights, corners, stop signs).
5. Color coded buses (i.e. red circle-Smith, blue circle-Holyoke).
6. A more reliable bus system (i.e. improved maintenance, and more punctual buses).

These improvements if instituted would generate an increase in bus usage by female members of the student body which would conversely decrease the numerous cases of assaults attributed to hitchhiking.

More On Rashed

To The Editor:

The style employed by Richie Rashed in "It's a Bitch" caused many to doubt his ability to intelligently express himself. All doubt was removed by his sequel, "Rhetoric 'Injustice'?"

Indeed, "there are injustices at UMass and in this world...which are slightly more paramount than a rhetoric requirement." However, if your style distracts the public's viewpoint from those issues at hand, what does it profit?

Briefly, criticism should be accepted with an open mind, not an open mouth. "Rhetoric 'Injustice'?" merely served to confirm the views of Richard Perkins.

James R. Beltz

Rhetoric's Value

To The Editor:

As we are all considering the usefulness of the Rhetoric requirement, we should look at the validity given it by another part of the academic community.

As an undergraduate of this institution I fulfilled the English and Rhetoric requirements with an average grade of "A". Upon finishing the degree requirements, I became a grad student at SBA. They too have an English requirement–the student must prove his ability to write or take such courses at UMass.

Since I had already proven my proficiency at this school I attempted to obtain a waver. It was then I discovered that the graduate Business School did not feel that the maximum score in writing at UMass was valid proof that one (anyone) could write.

This leaves me with only one question: What good is the UMass Rhetoric requirement if it is not recognized by UMass?

CIDA

To The Editor:

Monday night the Central Area Council founded a new organization in the area, the Committee on Inter-Dorm Activities, (C.I.D.A.). The aim of the C.I.D.A. is to sponsor inter-dorm competitions in pool, ping-pong, bridge, chess, checkers, or any other activity that is of interest to residents of the area. The competitions will be played to an Area Championship, but the basic purpose of the tournaments is for the competitors to have a good time and get to know some new people, so anyone can join; in fact, the more so the better.

If you want to play and/or help run a competition (this means post sign-up sheets and help draw up the schedules), or if you have an activity that is of general interest (this includes practically anything), contact Tim O'Brien, 434 Baker. (6-6165).

Editorial Points

In a political year, everyone runs around trying to convince everyone else that his candidate is the good guy. Both sides get lathered up by November, at which time someone is elected. What happens to all that energy? Or to all those people whose candidates lost?

But what about the people who really believed in their candidate, and he or she won? They wake up the next day, and things really haven't changed much.

That is not to imply that the political process is without merit, however; it keeps Daniel Yankelovich in steady work.

Phil Bengston

To The Editor:

When will you people learn that the New England Patriots' new coach is named Phil Bengtson, not Bengston? How would you like to be called Camel or Blooie? I shouldn't think you'd like that.

As far as his selection as interim coach, why not? The assistants who are already there were hired by Clive Rush and John Mazur. Does this recommend them as future head coaches? The Patriots are atrocious; they are perhaps the worst team in football. Why not allow an unprejudiced eye to observe them for five weeks, before determining where the club hurts most. There is a draft coming up; if Bengtson can help Bell decide what his draft will be, he will have helped. Don McCafferty can come coach next year.

Amherst Might Fly UN Flag Permanently

By MARK VOGLER

AMHERST--A housewife is circulating a petition here asking that the United Nations flag be permanently flown on the town common.

Mrs. Robert McGarrah of 17 Elm St. said the formal petition, signed by at least 100 persons, will be presented to selectmen at a town meeting Dec. 4. If it is approved by the town, Amherst would become the first town in the United States to fly the UN flag permanently.

Mrs. McGarrah said she had telephoned the United Nations in New York and had inquired about other towns or cities that have made it a practice to have the UN flag accompany the Stars and Stripes on the flagstaff.

She said that UN sources knew of only two cities that fly the flag permanently--New York and Los Angeles. As far as they are concerned, there are no towns in the country that do this.

Mrs. McGarrah is the instigator of the move to have the UN flag wave in Amherst. She said she had been inspired on United Nations day after viewing the UN flag underneath the American flag.

"It looked so beautiful to be waving on the staff that day," she remarked. "So I thought it would be a wonderful idea to have the flag flown all the time."

Mrs. McGarrah is a member of the United Nations Association of Amherst and the United Nations Association of the United States. She was UN Day chairman in October. She said she expects overwhelming support.

Quad Plans To See 'Godspell'

By STEVE RUGGLES

The Northeast Area Government, Tuesday night, voted to allocate $378.70 for the area paper, "The Vicious Voice."

Also discussed at the meeting was the Thatcher Education Program, a racism colloquium, an area trip to Godspell, and the procedure to be used in evaluating programs sponsored by the government.

The area council passed a proposal which calls for paying the editor of the "Vicious Voice" $200, the assistant staff member $75, and a cartoonist $50. These salaries are retroactive to the beginning of this semester, and cover only the remainder of this semester.

Other money allocations include $125 to pay an assistant to Jack Richardson, Head of Residence of Thatcher House, for the Thatcher Ed. Program for freshmen. A sum of $200 was granted to Lee Johnson for teaching the area racism colloquium, and assisting with counseling research.

An area trip to Godspell in Boston is being planned for a weekend between Thanksgiving and the end of the semester. The government has provided $150 for the rental of two University buses. The two buses will make room for about 80 people. Tickets for Godspell are priced between four and nine dollars.

The area council has expressed the opinion to a Health Services representative that a Cold Self-Care Center for the Quad is not needed.

The council discussed at great length the procedure to be used in evaluating programs running on area monies. For the remainder of this semester, area government members have been assigned different programs to investigate, and report to the government body. Sponsors of several programs will be asked to come before the board to explain their progress.

Beginning next semester, proposal sponsors will be asked to come before the board at least twice during the semester to explain progress. The purpose of this evaluation procedure, states council president Dana Marchant, "...is not to try to take back money we've already committed, but to see that it is being put to use according to the contract".

In other business, a subcommittee on the Northeast council is now interviewing for the Northeast Area position on the Student Union-Campus Center Board of Governors. Any area resident interested in being on this board should contact Marchant in Crabtree House as soon as possible.

This Saturday evening, beginning at 8, the Northeast Area will sponsor another "Country Comfort Coffee House" in Crabtree basement.

This is an open and free chance for all types of entertainers and groups. There will be absolutely no pressure on performers by the management, and there are no auditions; just show up ready to perform. All kinds of performers are welcomed; there are no restrictions.

The Coffeehouses are held in a room which will hold about 125 people. Tables and chairs, and sofas are provided. Lighting is condusive to a relaxed atmosphere.

There is no admission charged, and as the management puts it,..."there is no hassling of anyone".

The area sponsors these Coffeehouses throughout the year; usually every other Saturday night.

These coffeehouses provide an opportunity to those who would like to sell refreshments as a private endeavor.

Clearinghouse Useful To Communities

By GILBERT J. SALK

Three things today: a project, a rap on intentional communities, and some book reviews.

First, the project. Last year, I proposed a clearinghouse which would gather and disseminate information on local resources which would be useful to those interested in alternative lifestyles, or in simply gaining more control of their own lives.

This would involve locating people who have skills, knowledge, ideas, or other tools which they would be willing to share with others who need those resources. It would mean compiling a list of people who are interested in various kinds of alternatives so that people who share similar interests can find each other and get together.

The project has been adopted by the Peace Action Task Force of the United Christian Foundation. The initial planning meeting will be Monday, Nov. 20 at 7:30 p.m. in 804 C.C. If you're interested, please come. We need some people who are willing to work if this is going to get off the ground.

Now, for intentional communities. I want to talk a bit about communities as support groups. They can take the form of communes, co-ops, or other forms of living-and-sharing arrangements. The important fact is that they can bring people of somewhat common interests together in ways which will enable them to create some type of synergetic relationship which will feed all of them.

Some explanation of all that is needed. All people have emotional and physical needs which must be met, and a major portion of their energy is spent seeking ways of satisfying those needs. This reduces the amount of energy available for performing "productive" work. (Please read "productive" to mean what you would like to do, not necessarily what our culture calls productive.)

Let me deal with a specific example, and you can generalize from it in any way you wish. Suppose that you are into crafts. You need money for a place to live, food, and other life-support needs. You also need time for people, and time to be alone. So you go get a job you only marginally like, and when you have some spare time you do your jewelry-making or leatherwork or whatever as a hobby.

Change. You get together with ten other people who are also into crafts, and you rent a small farm. You share time raising vegetables for food, greatly reducing that expense, and at the same time you can buy things like meat in quantity, further reducing the cost. Because you are living with people who share your interests, much of your working time can also be meeting your needs for companionship. Together you could rent a small store and open a crafts outlet, selling the items you make and perhaps also selling work done by other craftsmen on consignment. You could take turns staffing the store. All of a sudden, you have a great amount of time available for your primary interest, which is producing your own handiwork.

Obviously, this is a greatly simplified picture of what could be done. There's a lot of work which has to go into the planning of any intentional community if it is to survive long enough to benefit any of its members substantially. Before entering any commitment like this, the participants should spend some time clarifying their expectations to be sure that they understand what kind of unspoken or unwritten contract they are agreeing to.

Decisions must be made about how workloads and decision-making get shared, how sexuality gets dealt with, what is common property and what is kept private, what will be done if money gets tighter than expected, how surplus funds get handled (assuming that there are any), what happens if members leave or new people want to come in, and other potential problems.

The possible ways of arranging a working (and workable) intentional community are probably infinite. The limits are only what you're willing to create and put up with combined with what the people you're working with are willing to do. They can be free sex or no sex or anything inbetween; they can be total community property and income or completely personal property and income or any combination; they can be secular or spiritual; they can have a strong central charismatic leader or totally shared leadership; they can be country or city; they can be basically for shared work or for shared pleasure.

The important thing is that they can make you less dependent upon the more standard means of providing life-support. They can provide a major avenue to actualizing alternatives which might otherwise have to be forgotten entirely, or at least postponed for an extended period of time. Think about what you'd really like to do with your life if you had absolutely no restrictions, and then think about whether that might be a more real possibility if you tried to do it with a group of other people.

The CULTURNATIVES Clearinghouse will hopefully be compiling resource information which will be useful to communities, and a list of names of people who are interested in starting a community of some kind or other. Check it out. Also, if you just want to rap about the idea, I'm usually available in the Draft Counseling office in 923 CC. If I'm not busy counseling, I'd be glad to share ideas.

Marauders Plague State Hospital

BELMONT, Mass. (AP) - The superintendent of Boston State Hospital says he has to keep the doors locked at night-not to keep patients in, but to keep people out.

Dr. Jonathan Cole told a statewide conference on psychiatric-hospital security Wednesday that outside marauders, rock-throwing children and thieves plague the patients and staff at the hospital.

The complex of 40 buildings in Boston's Mattapan section is surrounded by a fence "with lots of holes in it," Cole said.

The superintendent said he would like to have the area covered by Boston police because "the same people causing trouble on our grounds are causing trouble in the community," but the state police have jurisdiction over the hospital grounds.

In addition to assaults on the hospital grounds, Cole complained of vandalism to the hospital greenhouse. "The greenhouse is next door to an elementary school where kids throw rocks every day when they get out of class," he said.

Book Reviews: Cooperative, Joyful Communities

By GILBERT J. SALK
BOOK REVIEWS

The books today are about intentional communities. Cooperative Communities--How to Start Them, and Why, by Kriyananda $1.50, Ananda Publ., Nevada City, Calif.) is an excellent small book on what cooperatives can offer (and what they can't) and a good discussion for some of the ways to go about dealing with some of the problems involved in starting and living in one. The book is uncomplicated, and offers a good outline from which to begin discussing what you might want in your community.

I haven't read Total Loss Farm by Ray Mungo ($1.65, Bantam, NYC) yet, but I'll tentatively suggest that you take a look at it anyway. A quick glance through it intrigued me, and Mungo comes out of an interesting background (he was editor of Liberation News Service) and it's a book about what life in/on one commune was like.

The Joyful Community by Benjamin Zablocki ($1.95, Penguin Books, Baltimore, Md.) is about the Bruderhof, one of the longest-lived and most successful communes in America (it is 52 years old, and is extremely prosperous.) It talks about the history of the Bruderhof, which is an explicitly Christian community, and about it's organization, which may provide guidelines for your group.

Schocken Books of NYC publishes two good books on intentional communities. Kibbutz, by Melford Spiro ($2.45) is an authoritative work on the collective in Israel. The vision of the life, the day-to-day activities, the tensions and the challenges will give you good ideas (and reasons to hesitate) which might be relevant to your own decision.

The Communistic Societies of the U.S. by Charles Nordhoff ($2.45) covers some 15 intentional communities. Obviously, none of them are discussed in considerable depth, but enough attention is given to some of them to give you a good picture of a variety of solutions and problems of intentional communities.

If I may plug a couple of my general favorites, I'd like to strongly recommend The Mother Earth News and and The Last Whole Earth Catalog. Mother is a bimonthly magazine of alternative lifestyles. The articles are generally written by folks who are successfully doing the stuff they're writing about. It's a hopeful glimpse at what might be. Whole Earth is sort of a catalog of catalogs. It will tell you where to find information about almost everything, with some sort of capsule review attached to each item. The best bathroom book I've ever seen, and I promise that it will kick your imagination into high gear. Both are available in the Draft Counseling office in 923 CC.

PEACE.

Parent-Run Day School Is Possible

The University Day School, located at Bowditch Lodge on University Drive, has a waiting list of 45 children for the spring semester, and says it is impossible to admit any more children.

The demand for low-cost preschool care in the area is great, and the University Day School is providing an alternative for UMass student/- parents of children under age 5. What the school is willing to do is help parents set up their own parent-run pre-school programs. They will provide materials, workshops. Possibly aides, and a liaison with the State licensing agencies.

If you are interested in such a program and would like to know more about it, call Janie Rewak or Betsy Pelz at the University Day School at 545-2466 or Janice at 253-9670.

ELECTION NOV. 30

DEADLINE NOV. 29 at 5 p.m.

If Martians attacked the Russians, whose side would we be on?

There's only one answer:

We're all on this thing together.

Even if we don't get along with some nations, we've got to deal with the great problems that affect all nations: not Martians but pollution, population, trade barriers, restricted freedoms to travel, war.

They're just too big and too urgent for even the strongest nations to solve alone.

One way to develop solutions is by getting together with nations we are friendly with... some of our European allies and other autonomous democracies.

In the next session of Congress, a resolution will be introduced calling for a convention of delegates from the most experienced democracies.

This Atlantic Union Convention will explore the possibilities of forming a workable federation of democracies, geared to finding and implementing practical solutions to our mutual troubles.

By utilizing the individual strengths and talents of each free nation, we can begin to set things straight on the only world we've got.

We can pull the peoples of the world together by solving the difficulties we face together.

The concept of a federation of autonomous democracies is not new. Beginning in 1939 with Clarence K. Streit's non-fiction best-seller, Union Now, it has won the support of such diverse leaders as Robert Kennedy, Barry Goldwater, Hubert Humphrey, Richard Nixon and George McGovern among others.

President Kennedy described it this way:

"Acting on our own by ourselves, we cannot establish justice throughout the world. We cannot insure its domestic tranquility, or provide for its common defense or promote its general welfare, or secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity. But, joined with other free nations, we can do all of this and more..."

Unfortunately there are people in this country who are against our simply participating in the Atlantic Union discussions.

So we need your support.

By filling out and mailing this coupon, you'll simply be saying "Why not? Let's talk."

My planet, right or wrong.

☐ I'm interested in knowing more about the history and concept of federal union. Please send me more information.

☐ I'm interested in joining TOGETHER, to help unite all peoples against our common problems. Enclosed is $5.00 which entitles me to your newsletter and educational materials.

Correction

In yesterday's story on the student senate, it was incorrectly reported that the student senate had approved funding of the marching band.

The motion which was passed expressed support of a marching band on campus, but did not mention funding. It also did not mention any other student programs, or the issues of student fees, as reported in the Collegian story.

The Collegian regrets the error.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Aries is most apt to accept facts as they exist. These natives may not be pleased with what they see and discover but they adjust, at least for the time being. Aries eventually takes action to change what is undesirable, but this is done in a practical, realistic manner. Aries talks money with Taurus, reviews career goals with Capricorn, plans menus with Cancer, has romance with Leo, attempts to discern mystery of Pisces and could marry Libra. Some famous persons born under Aries include Debbie Reynolds, Marlon Brando and Tennessee Williams.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Forces are scattered. Opportunity does not lie in any one direction. Be willing to use alternatives. Cycle is high but confusion exists. Look in various directions. Answer comes from unexpected source.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Labyrinth of claims, assertions dominate. Exercise powers of discrimination. Take nothing for granted. Thorough approach is necessary. What appears a minor detail could assume important proportions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Change, travel, variety are featured. Virgo plays key role. You make discoveries involving opposite sex. Friends tend to disagree. Don't argue at social affair. Someone is trying to bail you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Tests, challenges work out in your favor. Refuse to be dismayed by apparent opposition. Be diplomatic. You gain through easygoing approach. Taurus, Libra persons figure in prominent roles.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You learn and teach. One who played role in your past makes reappearance. Pisces could be in picture. Avoid wishful thinking. Check source material. Read, write and embark on long range project.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Nothing occurs halfway. Emotions are intense. People take you seriously. Older individual bestows meaningful compliment--and responsibility. You earn more but hours probably will be longer.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lie low. Finish rather than begin project. Get lay of land. Size up one who makes promises. Mate, partner is apt to confide problem. Don't cast first stone. Be receptive to suggestions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may not be able to exactly identify what you need. However, cycle indicates a discarding of the old and a new beginning. This will take confidence. Show that you do have courage of convictions. Then you get backing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You could be recipient of windfall. Public responds to your offerings. Personal magnetism soars. Maintain balance. Means don't be extravagant in spending--or claims. Cancer and Capricorn persons are in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may be drawn in two directions. One dictates a practical course while the other is free and easy. Key is to reconcile differences. Rise above the petty. You move toward goal by being a self-starter. You will comprehend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Steer clear of traffic jams, crowds. Give yourself time with yourself. Listen to what you have to say. Get together with yourself. Create order out of welter of confusion. Special call, message is on agenda.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Guard valuables. Protect assets. Tendency now is to be careless and to cause loss. Prevent this by being realistic, especially in financial affairs. Analyze propositions. Don't give something for nothing.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can strike a hard bargain, no one pulls wool over your eyes, but you can do a good job of fooling yourself. Life will be happier for you in 1973, with May indicated as an outstanding month. You draw to you persons born under Capricorn.

UMass Soccer Cheer: "Elevator, Elevator-We Got the Shaft"

By DOUG FIDLER

I always thought that UNH got the raw end of the rating deals. It seemed time and time again during my four years there that ONLY the Wildcats got the proverbial "shaft." I know differently now. It seems that UMass also gets the same deal.

The UMass varsity soccer team, which finished its last four games 2-0-2 on way to a fine 5-3-2 record, was not only denied a tourney berth, but also a "top ten" rating.

First the "top ten" business. Many of you sports fans are quite familiar with the beating the Aggies have received from Joe Morrone and his gang on the rating board. Well it happened again.

Just to put the record straight, why don't I list those on the board. The twelve members are Irvin Schmid of Springfield, Roy Sigler of BU, Morrone of UConn, Peter Gooding of Amherst, Bruce Munro of Harvard, Roy Dath of Trinity, John Kurty of Westfield St., George Beim of Dartmouth, Alan King of Worcester Poly, Hubert Vogelsinger of Yale, Fran Bacon of Bridgeport, and Herb Erickson of Tufts.

Why give you such a rambling list? Well, I just want to point out a few interesting facts and the list will illustrate the points very well. But remember first, I'm not suggesting anything REALLY dishonest is happening.

First, isn't is a coincidence that six of the "top ten" teams in New England are represented on the board by their respective coaches? Coincidental, isn't it, that two of the Little Three schools (Amherst and Williams) are rated and that Amherst and Trinity (the third member of the league) are on the board? Funny, how the Ivy League, represented by three seats on the board (Dartmouth, Yale, and Harvard), have managed to get two of their league, Harvard and Brown, on the "top ten." In case you aren't counting, soccer fans, that leaves only two of the "top ten" who seem to be there for just that good old reason of "being a good team."

Secondly, I get a chuckle (it isn't really funny--I just have a sick sense of humor) over the teams that were chosen for the NCAA regional tournament. Yeah, okay, I'd have to agree that Harvard and Brown deserve their positions as number one and two seeds, respectively. Afterall, the Johns are 7-0-1 and the Bruins are a respectable 8-4. Remember, the Ivy League does play a good soccer.

But, sports fans, get a look at the records of Connecticut and Rhode Island, the third and fourth seeds! The Huskies are 8-5-1 (.604) and the Rams are 5-4-1 (.550). Our own UMies just happen to have a 5-3-2 record, or a .600 won-loss percentage. UMass put down the UConns decisively to the tune of 3-1, so there goes the Huskies' berth. Even though the Minutemen lost 4-2 to URI, this loss came in the last ten minutes. "Just one of those games." UMass still has a better record, so there goes URI's berth.

But wait! sports fans. I don't want both berths. I just want one of them for UMass.

Looking at this whole situation in detail, certain things can be seen. First, we must take a look at the rating board. This is a board that is self-perpetuating. The members of it are there by invitation only. I think Coach Redmond, who has done such a fine job with his young squad in his first year of college coaching, has a legitimate complaint relative to the board.

"As this is the biggest institution of its type in New England," he said, "it would be nice to feel that we could obtain some sort of representation on it sometime."

But Coach Redmond is not seeking representation so that UMass can dictate to the other schools the way in which those on the board are doing now--he is just NOT that kind of guy. He prefers a democratic system in which all the schools get an equal chance to serve.

I agree with him completely. The way the system is now, it is a case of "you scratch my back, and I'll scratch yours." Since they are not replaced from year to year, the coaches need not worry about other schools threatening their teams adversely in the future.

But, if there was a rotating system, each coach on the board would be held accountable for his selections that year, because the next year he would be desiring equal treatment for his team.

The Yankee Conference play a good brand of soccer, and it is represented by teams of fairly equal strength. With just four games left in its season, there were four teams which could possibly finish first.

I would recommend that the winner of the YanCon be given an automatic berth in the NCAA regionals. "This year," commented Redmond, "the winner and runner-up in the conference are going through the playoffs. I understand, though, that two years ago. when UMass was the champion and rated number four, they did not go through them."

"If we could have a hard and fast rule," he continued, "that the champion automatically qualified, it would seem to be a step toward democracy. Otherwise, it seems as though the University of Massachusetts will continue to suffer as it has in the past. There is little incentive to do well at all at the present."

UMass has been on the wrong end of the stick all season, except for a twentieth rating on the pre-season poll, the Minutemen have not made the ratings once this year.

Look at the scores. UMass defeated fifth-ranked Springfield 4-3, and seventh-ranked Connecticut during the season. The Redmondmen whipped ninth-ranked Amherst 4-1 in a pre-season scrimmage. It would seem that UMass should be recognized.

If you looked at the won-lost record against teams whose coaches are on the rating board, you would find that our boys have a 5-1 mark against them. 5-1! What more do they want? The team should have five votes right there!

Many of you must be thinking that this rambling of mine is uttered in vain. You know, I guess I would probably have to agree with you. Afterall, what coach is going to listen to a college newspaper reporter? What does a writer know about soccer?

I'd be the first to agree with him that I don't know that much about soccer. But, I DO know what's fair. My words are said specifically against the injustice that I think has been committed against Gerry Redmond and his fine team. But what about all the other teams that have had good seasons and have received little recognition? I want justice for them too.

I don't want the bigwigs in the NEISL to say, "There, there, Gerry. Calm down. We'll let you sit on one of the committees, if that's what you want," and I know the coach wouldn't either. I just want a democratic system of selecting committees. Everyone should get his chance to serve. Rotate all the coaches on all the committees EVERY year. Let's have no more schools that hold positions on two or three committees.

Until this democratic way is used, the whole business is just going to be a rotten deal. For years sport has been said to exemplify all that's good in life--it builds character and promotes honesty and fair play. Character and honesty, where have you gone?

Raps Namath

MIAMI (AP)—Earl Morrall, who hasn't quarterbacked against Joe Namath since Super Bowl III, says the New York Jets star he'll face this weekend is a good quarterback, but "I don't respect him."

Morrall, who has led the Miami Dolphins since Bob Griese suffered a leg injury earlier in the season, spoke of the swinging bachelor in an interview with Al Levine of the Miami News.

"He's a good quarterback, he's got talent," said Morrall, 37, but personally, "I don't have any respect for him, that's for sure."

The veteran crew cut quarterback said he was speaking of Namath's "lifestyle, his actions."

He added: "I wouldn't want to follow in his footsteps. I don't want to be like him. And I hope my kids, and the younger generation, don't grow up to be like him."

Tyma, Syer Elected '73 Soccer Co-capts.

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMass varsity soccer team officially ended its season yesterday afternoon with the election of its 1973 co-captains and the selection of the Most Valuable Player and Most Improved Player.

Halfback Mark Tyma and fullback Kurt Syer have been chosen to lead the Minutemen next fall. Both played key roles in this season's fine 5-3-2 performance. Tyma contributed two goals and an assist to the attack while Syer was outstanding on defense.

Senior Co-captain Dave Ouelette was named the 1972 Most Valuable Player for his outstanding leadership and stellar work at the all-important position of sweeper-back. Tom Coburn, who tallied 11 goals and one assist, was runnerup in the voting, getting just one vote less than Ouelette.

Steady improvement throughout the season earned Jim Vollinger the Most Improved Player award. He assisted on three scores during the year.

Coach Gerry Redmond was quite pleased with all of the selections. "Dave Ouelette and Ed Doherty will be leaving a difficult gap to fill, but the team has voted wisely in their replacements. Mark Tyma and Kurt Syer will do a good job. Mike Nugent was another strong candidate for co-captain, and all these three players are capable of providing the necessary leadership."

"I think," continued Redmond, "that the voting for MVP reflected the high regard that the team had for both Ouelette and Coburn, one an outstanding defenseman and the other an outstanding attacker."

"I also agree with the team's choice of Vollinger for the Most Improved Player. His play this season has been tremendous and he has great potential for the future."

Ouelette was named the Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week and was cited for his play that "was brilliant in the New Hampshire tie and the upset win over Springfield last week. Ouelette smothered three shots in the New Hampshire game when the UMass goalie was caught out of place."

Coburn and Ron Fedus of Connecticut were the Co-Linemen of the Week. Coburn was awarded his laurel for a three goal, one assist performance against Springfield.

Not Just Another Gridder

By BOB ESTELLE

Clarence Brooks feels that there is more to life than just football. But it hasn't prevented him from what is probably the greatest honor that can be bestowed on a UMass football player: being elected team captain for his senior year. "I think Clarence gives all he has and the team elected him captain because of how hard he works," states Minutemen head coach Dick MacPherson.

But being the captain of what still may be the No. 1 team in New England hasn't gone to Clarence's head. "I feel that getting an education is the most important aspect of being in college and that's one of the main reasons I chose to come here," says Clarence.

Clarence is one athlete though, that did not come to UMass on an athletic scholarship. He came here on the CEEBS program which he feels was a long time coming. He states, "It's working out pretty good as it gives blacks a chance for getting a college education by providing financial aid for those who can't afford it."

Clarence has been making the most of this opportunity. His major is sociology and he says, "I want to use my education to help other blacks get the chance I got."

As far as being associated with UMass football, Clarence has several comments: "My teammates are good competitors. We all work together for a common goal-to win!" His praise for the Minutemen coaching staff is also high. "The football staff here is the best I've been associated with. Coach MacPherson treats each one of us as a man."

The respect is mutual. Offensive Coach Bob Lord states, "It has indeed been a pleasure for me to be in the position of being able to work with a young man of Clarence's caliber. He gives his all and is done what is asked of him. He works to the best of his ability on every play. He leads by example."

As far as what else UMass has done for him, Clarence feels that being here has helped him handle different situations and work with different people. As Coach MacPherson states, "I definitely feel that Clarence has matured in the two years we have worked with him. He has been able to control his emotions and he is a very loyal person."

As far as getting a chance to play pro ball, Clarence says, "I'm not looking towards it, but if someone wants to give me a chance, I'd like to give it a try. Right now I'm concerned with the rest of this season. There's no doubt about it-- WE WANT BOTH GAMES LEFT."

From the Tundra-Rudolf, the guy who's stuck pulling Santa once a year, may stop into Amherst early this winter. All the signs point to an early Christmas in this village surrounded by winter's best. And although gloves haven't gone on sale at Zayre's yet, Coach Rick MacPherson won't ask for a pair for the holiday nor will he request a conventional tie. He'll ask old Rudolf for something that shines, reeks of gold plating and is well deserved? Rudolf, do you have one?

"Well Mac," said the ageless reindeer, "I didnt know you wanted the Beanpot? By the way, what the hell is a Beanpot?"

"Well, you old taxi," said Mac sarcastically, "the Beanpot is what we've been striving for since we got hammered at BC last season. You see we had to share the damn ornament with Connecticut last season and this year I want it all to myself."

"But Mac," countered the Reindeer, "that isn't the true Christmas spirit. I mean life isn't all taking, you've got to give of yourself. Think of those who can't help themselves."

"But I've given so much of my time and energy to the accomplishment of this goal and so have my players. I mean really, Rudolf, this title is not only for myself, it's for the students at the University of Massachusetts, the alumni, the faculty, the program, and most of all, it's for the players."

"Yeah," said the quivering nomad, "I heard that you've been having bad luck. I mean this guy Jones and Cummings and having to play my cousins (the Bisons) really didn't help. And I wish you had Cummings to help the offensive line against the Crusaders. Is that what they call themselves?"

"Well anyway, coach, I think that you've done a tremendous job but why are you playing this kid Metallo and Yogi's son both ways? I don't understand. But of course I'm not paid to think, just to guide. And believe me, Santa, that old stuffed shirt gets heavier every year."

"But let me tell you about those Wildcats, coach. You see they're from my kind of country, where it's cold and you have to fight to stay alive. Up here in the North Country we only know that survival depends upon the fittest. Didn't a guy by the name of Darwin say that?"

"But back to those Wildcats, Mac. They'll fight you for that victory. I tell you, they don't want you to win it. Didn't you destroy them last year at Durham for the title? They've got this halfback by the name of Eddie Whalen, and he's a sophomore who gained 201 yards when they decked Springfield, 26-16 last week. Those Wildcats are 4-4 and need a win for a winning season. This kid Whalen has gone over the hundred yard mark the last three games. And aren't you supposed to have team that has problems against the run up the middle. I mean really, Buchanan and Wilson?"

"Don't let him get away with that Mac. Fight back. Okay, just because you're the definition of a public servant and I subscribe to your department stores, I will.

"We're going to move Paul St. Onge to middle linebacker with Winslow and have Tommy Price in the line. In the defensive backfield we'll use Metallo and Berra although Healy will be back. And I know you'll ask me whether Peil will come alive, but I remind you he's a great athlete. We've got to win it."

"Well Mac, nice talking to you. We've got to get to the Poles. We've got a lot of ground to cover. But I will check our mail order catalogue for Yankee Conference Championship trophies. Although I'd go out of my way for it, I kinda think it's up to you to get it for yourself."

Bruins Blank St. Louis, 4-0

BOSTON (AP)-The Boston Bruins struck for three first period goals and veteran goalie Eddie Johnston turned in a spectacular performance in his first shutout of the season Thursday in a 4-0 National Hockey League victory over the St. Louis Blues.

Johnston kicked out 27 shots, including many from close range, in holding off the Blues. St. Louis goalie Jacques Caron had 30 saves.

Ken Hodge scored the first Boston goal in the opening minute, sweeping in a passout from the corner by Wayne Cashman.

Mike Walton scored his sixth goal on a 10-footer at 9:38, with Johnny Bucyk collecting an assist, the 598th of his NHL career.

Don Awrey was credited with his first goal of the season at 17:14 when his long slap shot deflected off a St. Louis defenseman.

Phil Esposito scored his 11th goal for Boston's final tally in the second period, which was enlivened by a fight between Terry O'Reilly of the Bruins and Steve Durbano of the Blues.

Carl Garrett Suspended

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)-Halfback Carl Garrett was suspended without pay for the remainder of the season Thursday by the New England Patriots of the National Football League.

Garrett, the team's leading ground gainer this year with 418 yards in nine games, was suspended by interim head coach Phil Bengston and general manager Upton Bell after Garrett missed Thursday's practice.

Earlier in the season Garrett was fined by head coach John Mazur when he missed two practices and offered no excuse. Mazur resigned on Monday and was replaced for the remainder of the season by Bengston.

A Different Kind Of Garden

"A funny thing happened on the way to the forum."

If you're not a Boston Garden pro hockey fan, this might all seem terribly dull. But, if you've spent a good part of your spare time in recent winters trying desperately to be a part of the Bruin-Brave mob scene at North Station - hang on. This trip to the Boston Garden might sound like a fantasy.

It all began to seem a bit unreal when we changed to the orange line three stops before the Garden. Instead of the usual wall-to-wall humanity, the subway cars were relatively empty. Wasn't it always easier to get going on Keith Magnuson if you'd just been sandwiched between the fumes of one guy's whiskey and another guy's beer?

The next miracle was a mere five-minute wait for same-night tickets. And with the opening face-off only minutes away.

The real shock came a few moments later when we got our first look at the crowd. The place wasn't half full. Especially noticeable. were the balconies. They were virtually empty. Betting that a weekend Braves' crowd would be less than half the Garden's capacity last season would have been like betting that a Kennedy couldn't win in Boston.

Somehow I managed to adjust to this, and I actually began to enjoy myself. Not having to stand in long between-period restroom lines was a relief to my relief. I wasn't much up for a beer, but, had I been, they weren't piled four deep at the concession stands.

After the first period, we put on our best air of nonchalance and walked boldly to "our" seats just a few rows up from the ice. We'd been spying them since midway through the period. The Boston Garden ushers lose another one!

Sadly enough, the Braves also lost, 8-3.

But sadder yet is the moral to this story. The real losers were professional hockey. When a team that was getting capacity or near-capacity crowds falls to these depths in a single year, aren't the real losers all the teams in professional hockey? And what can be blamed but expansion?

Oath Injunction Continued Until Wednesday

By MARK VOGLER

A preliminary injunction sought Friday against the University of Massachusetts-Amherst personnel director in a case brought by 18 UMass faculty members was continued by Judge Samuel Tisdale in Hampshire Superior Court until Wednesday.

The suit filed by Marvin Swartz of the UMass faculty seeks to stop university Personnel Director John DeNyse from forcing university employees--including faculty members--to sign the Massachusetts Loyalty Oath which has been required as part of acceptance of employment.

Judge Tisdale further ordered that completion of the pleadings be effected on or before Wednesday.

In the meantime, several other developments pertaining to the loyalty oath transpired.

--In Friday's court session in Northampton a motion was suggested by the judge to merge the case of the UMass-Amherst plaintiffs with two others presently pending litigation.

--A question has been raised as to whether the class action suit filed in Cambridge last Wednesday actually protects everyone who has not signed the loyalty oath. A spokesman for the Amherst group said that there is a possibility that those who entered their employment for the Commonwealth during the fall may not be protected.

--The possibility that a foreign student employee will file a class action suit on behalf of all foreign nationals has added another dimension to the issue at hand.

--The personnel office has made no indication of pressuring employees who haven't signed the oath. Office sources say that they are taking no side of the oath argument.

Att. William A. Norris of Cummington, who is serving as legal counsel for the UMass-Amherst and the Berkshire Community College plaintiffs, said he disapproved of merging these two cases along with the class action suit which was filed by UMass faculty from the Boston based campus last Wednesday in Middlesex County Superior Cpurt.

"I might look into some way of contesting it. This is the first time that I knew of their doing this," Att. Norris said.

The attorney said the cases should be kept separate to insure equal representation for the three groups.

James Matlack, an English professor at the university and a spokesman for the Amherst group, said combining the cases is a logical move on the part of the court rather than having them heard individually.

"It saves them a little trouble and it won't tie up the court docket. The reasons why the judges want to put them together is so they don't cross cut each other," Matlack said.

Cross cutting, according to Matlack, is one judge making one ruling and a second and possibly a third making another ruling, all of which would not necessarily be the same.

A hearing for the three UMass-Boston faculty members who filed a class action suit earlier in the week is scheduled for Wednesday in Middlesex County Superior Court.

That suit, in which Judge John W. Coddaire Jr. made the ruling, prevents the personnel officers of all three university campuses from terminating employees for failure to swear to the Massachusetts Employees Oath.

Matlack said after the court session Friday that it was very unclear as to whether the class action suit filed by the UMass-Boston group included these employees who began their jobs this fall after the three-year period of adjudication.

The adjudication terminated last spring when the Supreme Court voted by a 4-3 decision to uphold the loyalty oath. Matlack said he was unsure as to whether those who have not signed the oath in the time following the Supreme Court's decision are not subject to punitive action by the state and possible dismissal from their jobs.

"The state should have properly had the oath administered before the employees got on the payroll," Matlack pointed out. "If the state, by its own negligence, has failed to do this, then the suit should apply to those who are employed this fall."

A foreign student from the university, and also a member of the Amherst plaintiffs in opposition to the loyalty oath, is exploring the possibilities to bring a suit against the oath on behalf of all foreign nationals. If the suit in Cambridge fails Wednesday, Att. Norris expects court action to be taken against the oath by all foreign students.

"He may strongly feel to bring on action right now. But it depends upon what he wants to do. I do think it would make a certain amount of sense to bring this suit and our suit together as one," Norris said.

Roy Bender, Assistant Director of the Personnel Affairs, said late last week that the office wanted to stay out of the loyalty oath issue.

"The office is not taking any stance on the matter," he said. "Whatever the attorney general decides and asks, the personnel office will do. Nothing is happening while litigation is pending."

UMass undergraduates who find no difficulty in passing by Salvation Army maidens and in turning down charity requests might be in for a surprise. They, and all undergraduates, are "foster parents" to over thirty-five student organizations, from Action Lab to Yahoo magazine.

Students support these groups through payment of the Student Activities Tax (SAT), which is included in the Activities Fee.

The SAT per student for 1972-73 is $33.50, a decrease of two dollars from 1971-72 and a decrease of three dollars from 1970-71. This tax decrease was made possible by a continuous increase in undergraduate enrollment, which offset a rise in Student Senate appropriations to organizations.

The Senate appropriated a combined total of $642,616 for organizations in 1972-73.

The largest funds for 1972-73 went to the following organizations: The Collegian, Area Governments, WMUA radio, Index, and Recognized Student Organization (RSO) Office.

The funding of Free University and University Mobilization was discontinued for 1972-73 while newly funded organizations include Amateur Radio, Juvenile Opportunity Extension, the Motorcycle Club, Outing Club, and the Science Fiction Club.

Paul Doran, chairman of the Senate Budgets Committee, said he hopes the Student Activities Tax for 1973-74 will decrease but said "it may go up if we take over some functions of the Campus Center."

The Budgets Committee is scheduled to hear its first 1973-74 rationale - the Collegian's - Tuesday night. Each organization is required to submit to the Budgets Committee a written rationale stating why it should be funded.

"Some of the groups funded last year have not contacted the Committee for funding this year," Doran said.

When asked to make a prediction concerning appropriations by the Senate for 1973-74, Doran declined, saying "I know better."

Of the approved funds for 1972-73, the Daily Collegian received the largest slice, $88,710. However, this figure represents a $1,055 decline from the previous year.

Collegian expenses, meanwhile, rose to $190,760, an increase of $17,695 from the year before. Increased subscriptions and advertising helped offset higher expenses.

Collegian expenses included office supplies and equipment, photographic and darkroom supplies, and the purchase or rental of services, such as wire service, and syndicated programs.

Index, the UMass yearbook, received 1972-73 appropriations totaling $49,560, approximately a $11,000 decrease from the year before. The Index stated in its rationale that funding "should not be totally dependent upon the reactions of a certain few." Recently, Index '72 received a mixed reaction from students, some of whom called for its demise.

Index expenses included office supplies and services, photo services, and the printing of the publication.

An example of a newly funded organization is the Outing Club, devoted to outdoor activities as canoeing, skiing, camping, hiking and climbing. The club was alloted $5,369 for equipment which included skiis, sleeping bags, canoe paddles, compasses, and 32 pairs of "Mickey Mouse" boots.

WMUA radio was appropriated $54,767 for fiscal 1972-73. The station's main expenses were the purchase or rental of services and radio station equipment, which included amplifier systems, turntables, a tape machine, console control board accessories, and transmitting and receiving equipment.

Area governments, which received $72,626 for 1972-73, supported programs that included dances, concerts, a newspaper, and a Day Care center (Commuter). Other expenses were office supplies and services and house support.

The area government budget breakdowns for 1972-73 are as follows:

Southwest	$19,942.
Commuters	$15,376.
Central	$8,916.
Orchard Hill	$4,731.
Northeast	$4,490.
Sylvan Area	$4,337.
Greeks	$3,939.

SWAP Ends; Most Participants Pleased

By STEVE TRIPOLI

The 1972 SWAP conference ended yesterday amid a general feeling among its participants that the conference had been worthwhile experience. The conference was held over Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Oak 'n Spruce Lodge in South Lee and was attended by approximately 250 people.

Stressing the role of the university in the community and various possibilities for community action projects as a major theme this year, the conference got off to a lively start, with Dr. Seymour Shapiro, former acting Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and the keynote speaker of the conference, addressing the conference after dinner Friday night on the community action topic. A controversial, at times almost heated question and answer period ensued with many of the conferees adding to the conversation at Shapiro's request.

The general climate of the conference was one of bluntness on the part of most of the conferees, but also a sense of group unity. Attending the conference were such diverse members of the community as Vice Chancellors Robert Gage and Thomas Campion, UMass President Robert Wood, State legislators John Olver, James Collins, Edward McColgan, and Mike Daly, Student Government President Larry Ladd, and many others.

The only notable absence was that of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who sent his best wishes to the conference, adding that he could not attend because of previous committments.

The setup of the conference was broken down into six workshop periods, each featuring anywhere from six to twelve different sections, allowing the conferees to pick the one they wanted to attend. The topics of each section ranged from The Role Of The University to such things as Media And Communications, Student Government, and The Political Care And Feeding Of UMass. The average workshop had an attendance of between twenty and thirty people.

The tone of the workshops was generally one of serious discussion, with participation coming from many of those in attendance. The conversation generally showed a good deal of disagreement, but most people felt that on the whole the conversation had been healthy and the convention as a whole a good experience because it offered an open exchange of thoughts between the participants.

Grinnan Explains $300,000 CC Deficit

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

The Board of Governors of the Campus Center met last Thursday night to discuss a three hundred thousand dollar deficit in the budget for fiscal 1972.

According to the "Campus Center Trust Funds Operating Budget," the three areas which fell over one hundred thousand dollars short of each's budgeted revenue account were the University Store, Food Services, and Accommodations Services. The Continuing Education Services, meanwhile showed a deficit of ten thousand dollars.

Terry Grinnan, manager of the Campus Center, offered an explanation that "University is in the throws of converting from a hand to a computer operated system."

Grinnan also attributed some of the loss to rip-offs from the Campus Center store, and announced that a study of the situation is underway. Grinnan also cited President Nixon's price freeze as having had an unpredicted effect on the store's profits last year.

Vice Chancellor of Administrative Services, Thomas Campion said that a study which would cost student Campus Center taxpayers ten thousand dollars, and possibly as much as thirty five thousand dollars was presently being considered. This study would employ the services of a business consulting firm to outline ways in which to make better use of the Campus Center facilities.

Richard Nelson, Chairperson of the Interim Board of Governors, meanwhile "deplored the abysmal fiscal condition of the Campus Center", and urged that students awareness of the situation be raised, "because deficits are made up from the student tax."

Nelson stated, "Food Services made for profit three thousand dollars. It's a 1.6 million dollar operation."

Also discussed at Thursday's meeting was the use of the Campus Center Crafts Area by colloquia. According to Student Union policies, no room in the building may be used for academic credit.

Colloquia also tend to use up much of the material and space during regular hours. Proposals included holding the colloquia after eight pm when the center would ordinarily be used, and having the teachers of these colloquia get their own materials.

The Board also voted to try putting a television set in the music room and determining, by use of a questionnaire, how the room is used by students.

Also approved were expenditures for video recorder, an audio equalizer for the Campus Center Auditorium, calculators and five cash registers.

Commuter Assembly's Gripe: How To Spend $17,000

By GAURI BHATIA

$17,000 to spend. And no where to spend it. Not a common problem.

But that's the Commuter Assembly's major gripe. They've got $17,000 allocated to them from University funds and a total lack of concerned commuters.

"There are 6,000 commuters within a thirty mile radius of campus, all of whom are members of the assembly just by being commuters," said Tom Merluzzi, Executive Committee member, "and we can barely get a quorum of thirty-five commuters." "Lack of interest is our biggest problem."

The Commuter Assembly is an attempt by student government to air the griefs and problems of this minority.

The Assembly has various motions on its agenda–all waiting to be passed. Some of these include a commuter lounge, a locker room (at this time commuters are forced to use RSO lockers of which there is a great shortage) and the printing of a "Housing & Tenant Guide."

This guide will assist commuters and potential commuters in choosing a home. It will outline health and safety regulations, rent controls and various other laws regarding housing.

Personal comments from students living in such nearby apartment complexes as Puffton, Rolling Green and Brandywine will also be included, so as to aid the potential commuter in making his housing choice.

The Commuter Assembly hopes to make this guide available by the 1972-73 spring semester.

Area Blacks Call For Inquest

Black students and faculty at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Hampshire Colleges called today for Congressional and Federal investigations of the deaths of two Black students at the Baton Rouge campus of Southern University last Thursday.

The representatives of the five college Black community decided to send messages to President Nixon, Senators Brooke and Kennedy, and to the Congressional Black Caucus, calling for full and complete investigations of the Louisiana killings. The message to President Nixon read:

Mr. President:

The Black faculty and students of Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire, Amherst Colleges and the University of Massachusetts deplore the senseless murder to two unarmed, Black students at Southern University. We call upon you to order a full investigation by the Justice Department. As Chief Executive, we call upon you to bring to bear, the moral authority of your high office and recent electoral mandate in publicly condemning this gratuitous and unrestrained use of lethal violence against unarmed Black students.

Coming at this time, such a statement will undoubtedly set the tone of the posture of local law-enforcement agencies towards Black and ethnic minorities during the next four years.

For the Five-College Black Community, Professor Michael Thelwell, Chairman, Department of Afro-American Studies University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts

"It is the very strong feeling of the Black community here," Professor M. Thelwell, Chairman of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Hampshire Colleges, said "that there can be no excuse or justification for the use of fire-arms against unarmed students. We also feel that there must be strong and unequivocal condemnation of this action from the highest levels of the Federal Government if this kind of action is not to become standard procedure by local police agencies across the country."

It was decided that all Black studies classes in the five colleges will be cancelled between 11:00 a.m. and 1:00 p.m. on Monday, November 20th, "as an expression of the community's sorrow and outrage."

A rally will be held at 11:00 in the Student Union Ballroom of the University to discuss possible responses from the University community to this event.

Antiwar Protests Draw Few People

Antiwar protesters marched through the streets of midtown Manhattan and 19 other cities across the country yesterday, calling for an immediate end to the war in Indochina.

Unlike the massive antiwar protests of recent years, yesterday's march here drew a crowd that stretched only four blocks marching 20 abreast. Demonstrations in other cities were smaller still.

The turnout was apparently kept down by post-election apathy and the assurances of the Nixon Administration that "peace is at hand."

But yesterday's demonstrators still found it difficult to believe the Administration's assurances.

"We place no reliance whatever on Nixon's promises," said Katherine Sojourner, national coordinator of the National Peace Action Coalition, which staged the protests.

"He and his Presidential predecessors have repeatedly lied to and deceived the American people about the Vietnam war."

The group, along with the Student Mobilization Committee, called last month for the protests "regardless of who wins the election."

In Washington, where the largest antiwar demonstration in the nation's history took place on Nov. 15, 1969, only a few hundred demonstrators turned out. The earlier demonstration was estimated by the Washington police to have drawn 250,000 demonstrators.

Demonstrators in New York yesterday gathered in brisk, clear weather in Bryant Park between 42nd and 40th Streets behind the New York Public Library, and then marched to Times Square and up Seventh Avenue to the Bandshell in Central Park.

The police cleared two traffic lanes for the marchers.

Democrats To Revive Nixon-Vetoed Bills

WASHINGTON (AP)--Democrats in the new Congress are laying plans to revive quickly many of the dozen bills pocket-vetoed by President Nixon.

Measures that will be re-introduced soon after the 93rd Congress meets Jan. 3 and pushed hard would benefit the elderly, veterans, the chronically handicapped, and the unemployed.

Others involve spending for airports and other popular public-works projects.

Democratic sponsors of the bills point to the wide majorities by which most of them passed and insist that the President can be overridden if he vetoes them again.

The Democrats will control both branches of the 93rd Congress as they did the 92nd but they will fall well short of the two-thirds margin needed to reject a veto.

However, they say that Republicans will join them in voting to override if the legislation is important enough.

They point to the GOP votes which helped pile up the necessary margins to enact a $24.8-billion water-pollution-control measure after the President had vetoed it just before Congress adjourned.

Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr., D-N.J., said Democrats do not interpret Nixon's overwhelming re-election victory an endorsement of a "stand-still philosophy of government."

"We cannot afford to give in to advocates of the status quo," he said.

Williams is chairman of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee which originated some of the vetoed bills.

The President said in announcing his rejection of the bills that his action would save about $750 million in his fight to hold spending in the current financial year to $250 billion.

Democrats answer that nearly all of the bills were authorizations and that, even had they been signed, it would have been up to the President to decide in his budget how much to spend for them.

Two bills which the Democrats have assigned high priority for revival would extend present grant programs to help the elderly and also provide new services for them.

One of these would authorize $850 million not only to continue present services for the aged but to set up a new program of public-service jobs for low-income persons 55 and over and to finance model projects in housing, recreation, transportation, education and pre-retirement training.

The other would establish a National Institute on Aging to conduct biological and behavioral research into the aging process and set up a new program of health services for the elderly.

Chicago School To Reopen

CHICAGO (AP)--A Southwest side high school, closed when racial tension broke into violence last week, reopens Monday under a plan that will virtually seal off the campus from the surrounding neighborhood.

Black and white community leaders hope it will be the first step in easing tension that began last April when white parents, disturbed because a gradually changing neighborhood was bringing more blacks into the district, called a meeting which they billed as a "white militants rally." Gage Park High School is located in a white, working-class neighborhood of brick bungalows and two family homes. It has 3,100 students, about 38 per cent of whom are black.

The white parents say the school is overcrowded-a fact the Board of Education admits-and say they want the board to redraw district boundaries to cut black enrollment to about 25 per cent.

White parents led a 67-day boycott that kept an estimated 1,000 white students out of class. The boycott ended last week and the violence broke out between black and white students.

More than 50 persons-most of them students-were arrested Wednesday and Thursday. Two persons required hospital treatment for injuries received in individual scuffles inside the building and confrontations outside.

Kissinger Sees Quick Peace

PARIS (AP)--Henry A. Kissinger flew into Paris on Sunday night and said a quick end to the Vietnam was is "probable" if North Vietnam's negotiators show "understanding and flexibility."

President Nixon's chief foreign affairs adviser arrived from Washington to resume his secret talks Monday with the top North Vietnamese negotiators, Le Duc Tho and Xuan Thuy. The White House hopes for a cease- fire by mid-December.

Kissinger told newsmen he was under instructions from Nixon to remain in Paris "as long as is useful." He said he would be in constant touch throughout the negotiations with South Vietnamese negotiator Pham Dang Lam, who was among those waiting to meet him at Orly Airport.

South Vietnam and the Viet Cong are excluded from the secret talks.

Kissinger was accompanied by his chief aide, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., and William H. Sullivan, deputy assistant secretary of state for Southeast Asian affairs.

It was Kissinger's 21st trip to Paris for secret talks with the North Vietnamese since 1969, but the first time his arrival was announced in advance. Both sides issued simultaneous announcements last Friday that the talks would be resumed.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler told newsmen in Washington that Nixon had not met personally with Kissinger before his departure, but conferred with him by phone and provided notes on the U.S. negotiating position.

Soon after Kissinger's departure, Nixon returned to Camp David, Md., where he will be keeping in close touch with developments in the Paris talks.

Indications from White House sources last week were that the Paris sessions might last several days as the negotiators discuss the final form for the tentative nine-point agreement made public last month.

Following agreement between Kissinger and Tho, the pact presumably would be submitted to the Saigon regime of President Nguyen Van Thieu by Kissinger while Tho would be seeking final approval from his colleagues in Hanoi.

In addition, other governments, including those who would be charged with supervising a cease-fire, would have to be consulted before the peace package could be finally wrapped up, announced and signed.

La. Governor Denies Quote On Slayings

LOS ANGELES (AP)-Louisiana Gov. Edwin W. Edwards says he has no doubt that two young black students slain at Southern University were felled by buckshot fired by a deputy sheriff, the Los Angeles Times reported Sunday.

In Baton Rouge, Edwards called the story "irresponsible, inaccurate and unauthorized" and said his remarks had been taken out of context. The Times, however, said it was standing by the account.

In a dispatch from Baton Rouge, La., where the school's main campus is located, the Times said Edwards believes that "we'll probably never know which deputy sheriff fired the shot."

The newspaper quoted the governor as saying at a luncheon meeting, "I have no doubt it was a deputy sheriff who fired."

The two students were shot in the head Thursday as police and sheriff's deputies moved to break up a demonstration by students in front and inside of the university administration building.

Law enforcement officers say they fired only tear gas canisters. Edwards said Friday it was possible that they mistakenly fired buckshot. The school has been closed until after Thanksgiving.

The Times said Edwards also disclosed that:

—He will fire university President G. Leon Netterville, who he said is out of touch with the students, in July.

—He will accede to all of the demands of the students and welcomes their participation in the school administration, but will not agree to a complete student takeover of the campus.

In a statement issued Sunday, Edwards acccused the author of the article of showing "a gross lack of regard for the whole truth" and said the reporter had attended only 30 minutes of a two-hour meeting between Edwards and Justice Department officials, then wrote "an irresponsible, inaccurate and unauthorized two-minute summarization, out of context..."

Edwards denied he said he would fire Netterville, adding that in any event, that power rested with the state Board of Education. He noted he had commented in the past that many of the student demands had merit and could be implemented without delay, but added that he did not intend to agree to all demands.

The governor said he called the Times Saturday night to complain about the story. "The editor then killed the story, exhibiting momentary responsibility to the public interest and journalistic principles, but later yielded to baser instincts for one sensational story," Edwards said.

In Los Angeles, Times national desk editor Stan Burroway said the story was killed for a brief period on the paper's news service wire while the points the governor complained about were checked with reporter Nicholas Chriss. Burroway said the story was released after Chriss confirmed the facts in the story. The article appeared in all Sunday editions of the paper.

"Neither I, the President or the Pope could have got them to leave the occupied building," the Times quoted Edwards as saying. "They wanted a confrontation. Of course, they didn't want to get shot."

But he said, "I'm also not going to go on the radio or have a news conference calling them hoodlums or revolutionaries."

The Times said Edwards, who initially said that deputies could not have fired the fatal shots, changed his mind about the incident after watching films of the confrontation.

The two victims, Leonard D. Brown, 20, of Gilbert, La., and Denver A. Smith, 20, of New Roads, La., were struck by buckshot pellets.

The victim's 9-year-old sister also lured or forced to the roof but managed to escape, police said. A hospital examination determined she had not been sexually molested.

Chancellor Willy Brandt won a smashing re-election yesterday, defeating opposition candidate Rainer Barzel, in what was termed the greatest triumph of his political career. Computer projections showed Brandt's coalition winning a 48-seat majority in the 496-seat Bundestag. (AP)

Brandt Wins Re-election

BONN (AP) — Willy Brandt won re-election Sunday as West Germany's chancellor in the greatest triumph of his political career. Opposition candidate Rainer Barzel conceded defeat on the basis of computer projections about an hour after the polls closed.

"You have won the elections," the leader of the Christian Democrats messaged Brandt.

The victory gave Brandt a clear mandate to proceed with his policy of reducing tensions with the Soviet bloc.

Computer projections showed the ruling coalition of Brandt's Social Democrats and their partners, the Free Democrats, greatly increased its control of the Bundestag, the lower house of the parliament, which chooses the chancellor. The projections showed Brant's coalition winning a 48-seat majority in 496-seat Bundestag.

The computer projections also showed the ruling coalition winning 54.2 per cent of the total vote to 45.1 per cent for the opposition.

The Social Democrats won 46.2 per cent of the vote and the Free Democrats won 8 per cent. The Christian Democrats and their partners, the Christian Social Union, won 45.1 per cent according to the projections.

Herbert Wehner, deputy chief of the Social Democrats, said the newly elected Bundestag will convene Dec. 14 to formally re-elect Brandt as chancellor.

The dramatic outcome after a hard-fought campaign was also a prestige boost for the Free Democrats who had hovered close to the 5 per cent minimum vote needed to get into parliament in the 1969 elections.

Brandt's coalition had won control of the Bundestag in 1969 with a 12-seat majority. But defections caused the majority to disappear and forced Brandt to arrange for new elections a year early.

In 1969 Brandt's Social Democrats won 42.7 per cent of the votes and the Free Democrats, led by Foreign Minister Walter Scheel, won 5.8 per cent. The Christian Democrats and their partners the Christian Social Union won 46.1 per cent.

Socialist parliamentary whip Karl Wienand said the apparent victory was due mainly to the towering figure of the 58-year-old chancellor.

"The voters," Wienand said, "have recognized that a new note has been struck in the areas of security, foreign and peace policies."

S. Viet Advance Shelled

SAIGON (AP)--North Vietnamese forces fired nearly 3,000 shells at South Vietnamese troops trying to expand their northern frontier below the demilitarized zone prior to a cease-fire, the Saigon command said Sunday.

It was the heaviest resistance encountered by South Vietnamese forces since they recaptured Quant Tri city Sept. 16.

Despite the stiff resistance, field reports said fewer than 1,000 South Vietnamese marines, backed by an armored column and more than 100 U.S. air strikes, had advanced nearly two miles toward a coastal strip of land eight miles north-northeast of Quant Tri city Saturday and Sunday.

The Saigon command said at least 44 North Vietnamese troops were killed, while government losses were 8 men dead and 73 wounded.

"The marines are making a real strong drive along the coast," said one officer. "What they are trying to do is to push up from Quant Tri city."

While the marines recaptured Quant Tri city in September, they did not make a serious effort to push further north and regain much of the province which the North Vietnamese still hold.

But since it was disclosed Oct. 26 that the United States and Hanoi had agreed on a draft peace proposal calling for a cease-fire, both North and South Vietnam have been trying to grab up additional territory or maintain control of what they now hold.

The North Vietnamese invasion across the 17th parallel demarcation line last spring established a new demilitarized zone, in effect pushing it southward and giving the North Vietnamese control of much of Quang Tri Province.

Saigon has been demanding that a provision be written into the draft peace proposal re-establishing the DMZ under the Geneva accords of 1954 that divided Vietnam at the 17th parallel.

Since Thursday, North Vietnamese troops along the northern frontier have stepped up attacks with 130mm artillery, which has a range of 17 miles, and mortars.

IRA Mastermind Arrested

DUBLIN (AP)-Sean MacStiofain, the mastermind behind the Irish Republican Army's guerrilla campaign in Northern Ireland, was arrested here Sunday, police said.

MacStiofain, 40, is chief of staff of the nationalist Provisional wing of the IRA which has refused to follow the example of the IRA's Marxist Official Wing and agree to a cease-fire in the North.

He has been the chief architect of the IRA's bullet and bomb campaign to drive the British out of Northern Ireland and reunite the Island. As such, he was one of the most wanted fugitives in the Biritish Isles.

Police said MacStiofain was taken to the Bridewell police barracks in central Dublin where he was expected to be charged under the "offenses against the state act," the law used against IRA terrorists.

The Provisional wing's political outlet, the Sinn Fein, called for "a wave of protest" in the United States, Britain and Ireland against the arrest. A party statement accused the Irish government of an "act of collaboration" with the British army.

"Sean MacStiofain's arrest at this critical and most hopeful stage of the struggle for over 50 years is calculated to give aid and comfort to the forces of British imperialism in Ireland," the statement added.

British officials in Northern Ireland welcomed the arrest but one source there remarked that leading IRA men had been arrested in Ireland before only to be released shortly afterward.

MacStiofain joined the IRA in London in 1949, went to prison on arms charges, and later moved to Ireland.

Earlier this year he narrowly missed an assassination attempt by letter bomb and wore a patch over his eye for several weeks while facial wounds healed.

USSR Changes Emigration Laws

MOSCOW (AP)--The Soviet government has made a secret change in its emigration laws that could significantly affect the flow of Soviet Jews to Israel. The new law will be made public Dec. 1.

The specific change in the emigration rules was not known. But some Moscow Jews said Sunday they were told the policy shift would directly concern their efforts to leave this country.

The government revealed Saturday the new law had been formulated when it posted an announcement in the Moscow headquarters of OVIR, the Russian initials for the Department of Visas and Foreign Registrations.

The notice stated only that on Dec. 1 emigration procedures would be changed.

OVIR officials would not tell enquiring Jews what the changes would be.

News of the change spread rapidly throughout the Jewish community here and most Jews willing to discuss the situation were pessimistic.

They said rumors have been circulating in Moscow the past two weeks that authorities had decided only Jews with immediate family in Israel would be permitted to emigrate.

Such a law would drastically diminish the number of Soviet Jews now leaving for Israel, which has already accepted 25,000 to 30,000 Soviet immigrants this year.

At present, the authorities require only that would-be emigrants have a relation--no matter how distant--in Israel or merely possess an official invitation to settle in Israel.

Some Jews said they also heard the government might waive the necessity of character references required on all emigration applications.

Jewish emigrants must obtain the references from their employers. But most employers initially refuse to write them, either from fear of being officially associated with Jewish emigrants or because of direct orders from the authorities.

Few of the Jews questioned, however, had much hope for the abolition of the character references.

If the Dec. 1 law makes emigration even more difficult, it will be the second major obstacle the Soviet government has devised this year to thwart the Jewish exodus.

On Aug. 3, the Kremlin decreed that all emigrants would have to reimburse the state for their higher educations.

In many Jewish families here, both parents and child have university educations.

WHY PAY MORE?
You've heard it before, haven't you? It's one of those Old Yankee Expressions like "You get what you pay for", and "Penny wise, pound foolish". Until now it has been especially hard to respond to this kind of straight-forward and no nonsense fiscal austerity. Until now. Why pay more? It's simple. Because you get more. Where? At a Spaghetti Supper served on Saturday evenings from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. at the Berkshire North Commons and the Worcester Blue Room. It's 99¢. Sure, you pay more. But you get more.

Jean Westwood, Head of the Democratic Party, was criticized by Gov. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas, chairman of the National Democratic Governors Caucus for not providing "catalytic leadership". "Certainly this past election has demonstrated that the mood of this country is highly centrist," Bumpers said. "I think that the leadership of the Democratic Party should set a new tone." (AP)

Bumpers Want Westwood Out

NEW YORK (AP) — Gov. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas, chairman of the National Democratic Governors Caucus, said Sunday that party chairman Jean Westwood should be replaced with someone who can provide "catalytic leadership" and bring "all these disenchanted people back into the party."

"Mrs. Westwood as a person is really not the issue here," he said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," taped in Little Rock. "I have no choice of a person to succeed Mrs. Westwood."

"It needs to be somebody with great organization skills," the Arkansas governor remarked. He added that a new chairman should also be able to guide Democrats in "lowering our voices."

Bumpers and four other Democratic governors have called for Mrs. Westwood's resignation, saying she represents Sen. George McGovern's wing of the party. Mrs. Westwood says she will fight for her position.

While insisting that he had nothing against Mrs. Westwood personally, Bumpers warned that political change would have to be carefully structured if traditional Democrats who deserted to President Nixon are to be won back.

"Certainly this past election has demonstrated that the mood of this country is highly centrist," Bumpers declared. "I think that the leadership of the Democratic party should set a new tone."

He said he saw no great rush to replace Mrs. Westwood, but said that appointment of a charter commission to review the party structure and rules should be the responsibility of the new leadership. The governor also suggested four regional vice-chairmen might succeed Basil Paterson, the black New Yorker who is now vice-chairman.

The governors meet Dec. 3 to decide on how they will assert their influence in the party. The national committee meets Dec. 9, at which time Mrs. Westwood may face an ouster move.

The concern of Democrats should be to achieve the return of those who voted Republican for President this year, Bumpers said.

"You're not going to get them back into the Democratic party by simply inviting them back," he said, adding that the charter commission would have to decide the specifics on how to make the party more agreeable to labor and other "disenchanted" groups.

Blacks Accused Of Assault In CG Cutter Incident

BOSTON (AP) - An incident aboard the Coast Guard cutter Sherman in midocean has produced charges against five black crewmen accused of assault on two white shipmates, a spokesman said Saturday.

A spokesman for the Coast Guard said the alleged assault "appears to have been a personal incident" and was considered "not a racial incident per se."

The 378-foot cutter, based in Boston, was on station in the mid-Atlantic when the trouble broke out Nov. 1, midway in a month-long cruise, said Lt. j.g. James Brandt, a public information officer at First Coast Guard District headquarters here.

The incident was investigated by Capt. Walter F. Bartlett but details were being withheld pending disciplinary action, the Coast Guard said in a statement.

Neither of the victims were seriously injured, said Lt. Brandt.

Three of the men accused in the incident face assault charges and were ordered to stand special courts martial before a three-judge military court, he said. The other two were offered summary courts martial before a single judge on charges of being accessories.

The men charged with assault were locked in the ship's brig for the remainder of the cruise and transferred to a shore lockup in Boston when the ship docked Saturday, the spokesman said.

The crewmen charged with assault and the charges against them were listed by the Coast Guard as: Seaman Appren. Shawn T. Gooden, charged with unauthorized absence, unlawfully striking a crew member, and aggravated assault on a second crew member; PO 3.C. Alfonso Harris, charged with unlawfully striking one man and aggravated assault on another; and PO 3.C David F. Senegal, charged with unauthorized absence, disrespect to a superior commissioner officer, disobeying a lawful order, failure to obey a lawful order or regulation and aggravated assault.

Tax Revision Bill Proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A loophole-plugging tax revision bill designed to raise $9 billion annually has been drafted by Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., for introduction next January.

Reuss, a member of the Joint Economic Committee, said his "quick yield" proposal would make a general tax increase in 1973 unnecessary.

"The loopholes in the quick yield package are all eligible for immediate consideration, unlike more fundamental reforms which will obviously take more time," Reuss said in a statement.

Here are changes Reuss proposes.

—Repeal the alternate 26 per cent rate on the first $50,000 of capital gains. Reuss said this would yield $100 million.

—Extend the capital gains holding period from six months to one year to curb stock speculators and yield $300 million.

—Repeal the law allowing corporations to pay a lower maximum capital gains rate than individuals and raise the top rate to 35 per cent, the rate for individuals. Yield: $300 million.

—Apply to appreciated assets transferred at death the same tax paid by either the seller or donee when such assets are transferred by sale or gift. Yield: $2 billion.

—Provide federal subsidies for interest on optional taxable municipal bonds. This would give states and municipalities the option of issuing taxable, higher interest bonds on which the interest would be subsidized up to 40 per cent. Yield: $150 million.

—Repeal the asset depreciation range system which allows corporations to write off depreciation up to 20 per cent faster than present guidelines prescribe. Yield: $3 billion.

—Tax foreign income of U.S. subsidiaries on a current basis instead of deferring the tax until the income is returned to the United States. Yield: $250 million.

—Tighten tax provisions on certain types of preferential income now subject to reduced rates as low as 4 per cent on income over $100,000. Reuss claimed his proposal would yield $2 billion by raising the nominal rate from 10 to 20 per cent, lowering the income exemption from $30,000 to $12,000 and abolishing the deduction allowed for other federal taxes paid on regular income.

—Reduce the oil percentage depletion allowance to 15 per cent from the present rate of 22 per cent. Yield: $800 million.

—Reduce the excess farm loss tax deduction by limiting the amount of losses that could be written off against non-farm income to $15,000 instead of $25,000 now allowed in most cases. Yield: $100 million.

Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., has announced that the first order of business for the House Ways and Means Committee in 1973 will be tax reform.

Vanocur Proposes Newsmen's Fund

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Newscaster Sandor Vanocur proposed here Saturday night that journalists contribute a tenth of their salaries to found a First Amendment Institute to provide legal help for newsmen involved in legal wrangles over stories they write.

Vanocur made the proposal as he presented a special award from the American Civil Liberties Union of New Jersey to newsman Peter W. Bridge, who spent 21 days in jail for refusing to answer a grand jury's questions about a story he wrote.

Vanocur, who is senior correspondent at the National Public Affairs Center for Television, said the institute he envisioned would deal with various problems related to freedom of the press.

SWAP: Use It

Friday night, Saturday, and Sunday saw a diverse group of people from all walks of campus life gathered together at the SWAP conference. It was a weekend to let your hair down in a relaxed atmosphere, but most of all it was a weekend to talk, and the people who attended the conference should not forget this.

One of the more frequently heard opinions at the conference was that the workshops had done people a lot of good individually, but that they weren't sure the ideas heard at the conference would be brought back to campus and applied. It would be a real shame if the people involved in the conference, people whose places could have been taken by someone who was more willing to work but whose application was rejected, do not apply any good ideas that they may have picked up at the conference now that they're back. We remind the conferees that such things as the BDIC program and co-ed housing were ideas which had their beginning at previous SWAP conferences. The potential is there. It is up to the people who attended this year's SWAP to use that potential and fulfill their unwritten obligation to the community.

It IS Working

The 1972-73 Student Senate has been in session now for almost a month and a half, and despite rumors to the contrary, they have been doing a lot more than playing "railroad".

Every Senate has its share of "bumper-sticker" issues, but that doesn't mean that the Senate is dragging its feet. An issue doesn't have to be controversial for it to have important consequences for the University community.

The Student Senate has dealt with many substantive issues in the past six weeks. Among these has been the adoption of a new operating plan for the Student Union/Campus Center Board of Governors.

Under the old constitution, the SUG Board ran the Campus Center Complex with almost complete autonomy. Under the new Senate plan, students can review the actions of the Board through the Senate or by referendum. Students now have the power to recall any of their representatives to the Board.

To bring the Senate closer to the needs of the student, the Services Committee held a Bitch Day in the Campus Center on October 26th. Administrators from every service department on campus were on hand to answer questions, and nearly 1000 student complaints were received.

These are some of the actions taken by the Senate to bring the student's environment more directly under his control. These actions bring about some sort of immediate result that the student can feel.

The effect of other Senate action will not be felt on the campus for some time. This refers to the proposals endorsed by the Senate that in their broader sense allow for greater student participation in questions of academic policy.

On the conviction that requirements restrict learning, the Senate unanimously recommended that the Faculty Senate abolish both the Rhetoric and Foreign Language core requirements. With the same unanimity, the Senate asked the Board of Trustees, and the Faculty Senate to recognize the significance of student participation in personnel and tenure policy.

Most of the rest of the Senate's time was taken up in category changes and internal matters. Needless to say, these were not pressing issues, but it was necessary to tie up all loose ends before the budgeting process begins.

Granted, the Senate doesn't always make good front page news, but making headlines is not the Senate's primary responsibility. Serving the best interests of the students is.

I Am Your Captain

By MARK MAJESKI

I claim that our leader is crooked. He is trying to sabotage our mutinous party and our efforts to proliferate capitalism. His salary is being paid by IT&T and the milk industry. He is killing human beings all over the globe. He is immoral, despicable, deceitful. He is spying on you and me. The ship is sinking.

Let us not listen to the prophet of doom. I won't answer his ridiculous accusations. I won't give him credibility by responding. I won't acknowledge anyone's existence except mine, my friends and my bosses'. So I get involved in some illegal activities. So what. We all do. I'll get away with it. Fear not, the captain is at the helm.

I wonder who can be right? Something inside me says that I must cry out for justice, liberty, and truth. But, it can't be true. We can't be so close to the end. I'm free as long as I wear my tie topside every day. We cannot be murderers, bribetakers. At least, I am not. I have faith in the captain.

We are not at the brink of destruction. It's just talk from those who would tear down our flag. Spit on the gavel. Our only misdeed is that we try to make all heathens civilized, equal. Why, even here they can live together in the galley. Sellouts can wear their own tie on deck. Hoist the lifeboats.

Crew, followers and believers in me. Our great ship will prevail over the seven seas. We will take it off the rocky coast and sail to the east as we look at it. Perish the skull and crossbones that stand in our way. Walk the plank.

Now the captain and those who are silent unto him will sail into the sunset. Our mission of glory will be known for generations. We will weather the insular turbulence. Let them go their own way but, without our help. Fear not, for I am at the helm once again. My wrath will prevail. I, I am your captain.

The President's Purge

'THE AVERAGE AMERICAN IS JUST LIKE THE CHILD IN THE FAMILY. IF YOU PAMPER HIM AND CATER TO HIM TOO MUCH YOU ARE GOING TO MAKE HIM SOFT, SPOILED AND WEAK'
~PRESIDENT NIXON

WASHINGTON–It's been a grim week in the White House. After his landslide election, instead of getting even with the Democrats, President Nixon surprised everyone by announcing that he was purging the Republicans who helped him get elected. Everyone with a high Administration job has been asked to hand in his resignation.

Who goes and who stays is still very much up in the air, and it's very hard for one to do his job when the black cloud of unemployment hangs over his head.

One source in the White House told exactly what kind of week it's been:

Pat Nixon came into the President's office.

"Look what someone just gave me," she said angrily.

"What is it, Pat?" the President asked.

"It's a resignation form to fill out. Are you asking me to resign?"

"It's just a formality," President Nixon said. "I've asked everyone in the White House to resign so I can get rid of the people I don't want."

"But that's unfair," Pat protested. "I worked very hard for you during the campaign."

"Of course you did, Pat, and I told Haldeman and Ehrlichman to take that into consideration. I said, 'When we go over the list of the people we're dropping, keep in mind that Pat was at my side during the three times I left the White House to campaign.'"

Mrs. Nixon held the resignation in her hand and said tearfully, "You would think after all these years there would be no question about my serving with you for your second term."

"Now don't get upset, Pat," the President said. "I owe you a lot, but I have to do what's best for America. I can't give special favors to any group nor can I as President favor one person in the White House family over another. I assure you we will take a close look at your record before we make any definite decision."

"Dick don't you remember the Checkers speech, the stoning in South America, your defeats in 1960 and 1962? I was the only one who didn't turn her back on you. Doesn't that count for something?"

"It does, Pat. We've not only got all those facts but we have your FBI record as well. On the basis of all this I would guess you have a better than 50-50 chance of staying in the White House. But it isn't my decision alone. The purge staff has to look at the big picture. How much money is it costing us? Is the person doing more than his share of the work he is assigned? Was he involved in the Watergate bugging affair? And finally, is the job worth not eliminating altogether?"

"I went with you to China, I went with you to Russia, I went with you to Iran. Surely that must mean a lot to you."

"It does, Pat. The boys were very impressed with those trips and it's a big plus. At the same time, the next four years are going to be the most important in the history of the United States. I can't afford to make any mistakes if I want my rightful place in history. That is why I asked for everyone's resignation. There is too much deadwood in my Administration."

"Suppose I refuse to resign?"

"Pat, please don't put me in that position. You've meant a lot to me during all these years, and I would hate our relationship to end on a bitter note. I assure you that when your name comes up in the meeting, I'll be fighting for you to stay on, even if we have to change your job designation."

"Thank you, Dick," Pat said. "I appreciate that."

Just then the door flew open and Julie Nixon Eisenhower and Tricia Nixon Cox burst in.

"Daddy!" cried Tricia, "They've asked us to resign!"

"Good grief," the President said exasperatedly. "I can't save everybody."

The Genesis Of Richard Nixon

In the beginning, Lyndon created a vacancy in the White House.

And the presidency was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the Democrats. And the spirit of Richard Nixon moved upon the face of the television.

And Richard said, "I have a secret plan to end the war in Vietnam."

And the people believed him.

And Richard saw that his words divided the Democrats and the liberals, and he knew that his words were good.

And he rose in the Gallup polls, and was elected president.

And Richard kept the secret plan secret because he did not want to go down in history as the first American president to lose a war.

And Richard spoke from behind his presidential seal, and he said, "Let there be bombs." And bombs fell from the firmament of the heaven on North Vietnam. And sometimes on South Vietnam. More tons of bombs than were dropped on Europe and Asia during World War II.

They fell on soldiers and civilians, on men, women and children.

And Richard read the body counts, and saw that they were good. And he decided to celebrate. And he called upon one of Nader's Raiders to take his eldest daughter in marriage. And he said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the White House with little Republicans."

And the entire country was invited to the wedding. And the maid of honor was his second daughter, who had wed Howdy Doody.

And Washington became Camelot, and the news media reported bridal fashions.

And Richard rose in the polls. And he saw that it was good.

And Richard again looked at Vietnam, and he said, "Let us make that country in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon their land. But let us have dominion over their government."

And he dropped more bombs on their heads.

And Richard made two great trips. The greater to China, to open the East; the lesser to Russia, to soothe the West. And the president became Marco Polo, and the news media brought back picture postcards.

And Richard rose in the polls. And he saw that it was good.

And he looked at the calendar, and, behold, it was 1972. And he remembered that he had once said that a president who could not end the war in four years did not deserve re-election.

And Richard said, "Let the earth bring forth Henry Kissinger."

And the earth yielded Kissinger, and Richard sent him to Paris. And the talks produced a peace. And George McGovern was left without a platform.

And Richard saw that it was very good.

And he promised to welcome home the prisoners of war, and never to grant amnesty to the traitors who refused to kill or be killed; to maim or be maimed.

And Richard rose so high in the polls that he rested.

And Richard saw everything that he had done, and, behold, it was very good.

And the scheming and the stalling were the second term.

Politics, Politics

This picture, taken at the Board of Trustees luncheon of August 29th, 1972 may be the last time these three men were seen smiling at each other. (The three are: Chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees Joseph Healy, Governor Francis Sargent, and UMass President Robert Wood.)

Editorial Points

The Patriots proved yesterday that they really are good for something after all. They're the only team in the National Football League that can snatch defeat from the jaws of victory at the snap of a finger.

The SWAP conference of the weekend just past was held off campus, but the SWAP committee wanted people to feel at home, so they arranged to have people turn in a little ticket for every meal. That kind of hominess we don't need.

Southern University

To The Editor:

Once again we have seen yet another example of the government's continuing efforts to violently suppress the attempts of blacks and other oppressed groups to gain control of their own lives. The murder of two students at Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana is but another glaring instance of the repression and/or racism that has recently exhibited itself in this society in the form of the murders of George Jackson, Fred Hampton, Mark Clark, at Kent and Jackson State, and in the trials of Angela Davis, Ruchel Magee, Bobby Seale, the Harrisburg 8, John Line and others.

We would like to express our outrage at these most recent murders, as well as the continuing repressive measures used by the Nixon-Agnew regime, and their cohorts at the state and local level. Instead of making some attempt to respond to the needs of oppressed groups in this society, those in control of the political apparatus in this country have cracked down by illegal means which range from police harassment and intimidation to outright murder.

The legitimate grievances and demands of the students of Southern University are important as we try to analyze our position and role as students. Their demands should be our demands; courses that teach the true history of our people not the history of the ruling cliques, living conditions that are fit for human beings, and finally control over what our education should be and who it is to be for.

We must carry the struggle against racism and repression into our communities. Banishing the news of the murders to page four of the Collegian shows how indifferently the white community responds to the murder of black people. Our continuing silence, in the face of these most recent slayings in Louisiana, only serves to add more strength to the forces of reaction, repression, and racism in this country.

Therefore, we of the Committee for Solidarity with the students of Southern University and Young Workers' Liberation League urge all to attend the rally in the Student Union Ballroom today at 11 AM, sponsored by the Dept. of Afro-American Studies.

Commission Member Calls Indians 'Patriots'

TULSA, Okla. (AP) - The Indians who occupied the Bureau of Indian Affairs Building in Washington, D.C., should be called "patriots" instead of militants, a Tulsa member of the National Advisory Commission said Saturday night.

Owen Echohawk, who spent 10 days in the nation's capital as an observer for the commission, said a patriot is someone who loves his country, and that the Indians who went to Washington were in that category.

Echohawk made his remarks during a regional meeting of the Oklahoma Indian Education Association here.

Echohawk said the American Indian Movement AIM, which was responsible for the Washington activities, is succeeding in creating social change for the Indians where the tribal leaders are not.

"AIM is negotiating with White House aides right now while our tribal leaders would still be knocking on the door of the bureau," he said.

Truman Fought VP Nomination

NEW YORK (AP) - Harry S. Truman fought against his own nomination as vice president in 1944 because he knew President Franklin D. Roosevelt was a sick man, and Truman didn't want to go into the White House "through the back door," his daughter says.

In her forthcoming biography of her father, Margaret Truman Daniel says that after accepting the nomination at Roosevelt's telephoned insistence, Truman visited the president at the White House and was "appalled" at his physical condition.

"The president had just returned from a Pacific inspection trip," Margaret wrote in excerpts of the book in this week's Life magazine.

"It had been an exhausting ordeal for him, and he had suffered, we now know, at least one cardiac seizure during the journey.

"My father told close friends how the president's hands shook so badly at the luncheon that he could not get the cream from the pitcher into his coffee. He spilled most of it into the saucer.

"He talked with difficulty. 'It doesn't seem to be any mental lapse of any kind, but physically he's just going to pieces,' dad said. 'I'm very much concerned about him.'"

Roosevelt died of a stroke April 12, 1945. His doctor said later that Roosevelt suffered from congestive heart failure for the final year of his life. There have been reports that Roosevelt suffered a heart attack in June, 1944, but his sons denied it.

Dr. Howard G. Bruenn, who was Roosevelt's physician in 1944 and 1945, said Roosevelt suffered an attack of angina pectoris Aug. 8, 1944.

Bruenn said it was not a "heart attack," but a transient pain which does not damage the heart. He said he was with Roosevelt at the time, and the president told him of the attack, which lasted only a few minutes.

Several days before the days before the July Democratic convention in Chicago, her father had written her a letter which indicated that he knew Roosevelt was a sick man.

"Yes," Truman wrote, "They are plotting against your dad. Every columnist prognosticator is trying to make him VP against his will.

"It is funny how some people would give a fortune to be as close as I am to it, and I don't want it...

"Hope I can dodge it. 1600 Pennsylvania is a nice address, but I'd rather not move in through the back door-or any other door at 60."

Margaret says that Roosevelt's illness was on her father's mind when he remarked to a reporter: "Do you recall what happened to most vice presidents who succeeded to the presidency. Usually, they were ridiculed in office, had their hearts broken, lost any vestige of respect they had had before. I don't want that to happen to me."

Lazerowitz To Speak Tonight

The UMass undergraduate Philosophy Program wil will be hosting its first guest lecturer tonight at 8:00 P.M. Professor Morris Lazerowitz from Smith College will be speaking in Room 161-163 of the Campus Center on the topic of "Meta-Philosophy."

Professor Lazerowitz has been particularly interested in the nature of philosophical activity. He has explored considerably, the relationship between philosophy and psychoanalysis, maintaining that there are unconscious motivations of the Philosopher's concerns.

At 6:30, prior to the lecture there will be an informal gathering of those interested in speaking with Professor Lazerowitz. This meeting will be held in the Berkshire-Bristol room of the Student Union. Because of the casual nature of this early gathering, all are encouraged to bring their own sandwich, so as to accommodate the dinner hour. (Those wishing to bring potato chips, pickles, olives, etc. are encouraged to do so.)

Coffee and tea will be available. All interested students are urged to attend.

Concert

The UMass Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Ronald Steele, will present a concert Wednesday, Dec. 6, at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the Amherst campus.

Included in the program will be the "Hebrides Overture" by Mendelssohn, "Five Pieces for String Orchestra" by Paul Hindemith, and Dvorak's "Symphony No. 6 in D."

Students from Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College, and UMass, and residents of the Amherst-Springfield area comprise the personnel for the Symphony Orchestra. This year, for the first time, the Orchestra will perform away from the University campus. The Dec. 6 program will be repeated Dec. 10 at Mount Holyoke College and Dec. 11 at Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Meeting For French Study

Since 1969 UMass has been conducting a study program in Paris, France for qualified students from both campuses and from other schools. On November 30, Thursday, at 1:30 p.m. there will be an information meeting and interview session for interested students in the Third Floor Lounge at Herter Hall.

Professors MacCombie and Avendstirm from the UMass Boston campus will be here to speak about the program and answer any questions. General requirements for admission to this unique course of study are good academic standing and a modest command of spoken French.

The total cost for the full academic year in Paris, including transportation, should not exceed the expenses incurred by living on the Amherst campus for the same period of time.

Normally, students are lodged with French families, take almost half their courses in French schools, half with the resident UMass faculty members and are allowed to benefit from student privileges accorded under the French academic system. Any other questions should be addressed to Professor Frederick Busi, 321 Herter Hall, French Department.

WMUA 'Focus'

Tonight on WMUA's "Focus" program at 10 P.M., commentator Ken Mosakowski will moderate a discussion on the recent controversy created by opposition to the Massachusetts Loyalty Oath.

Participants on tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be Prof. James Matlack of the UMass English department, who is spokesman for the ad hoc committee opposing the loyalty oath; Prof. Robert Griffith of the UMass history department; and James and Patricia Brown, graduate teaching assistants at the university.

LAW CONFERENCE Campus Center, January 4-25, 1973
Modular Scheduling, up to 6 credits
Registration, December 5-8, 1972, 308 SBA
$5 Lab Fee

Legal Studies Conference

The UMass Legal Studies faculty announces a law conference, "Open Up in the Name of the Law." The Conference will take place between January 4-25 on campus. In the box to the left is a preliminary listing of events and courses.

In response to the present day dilemma of the law, the legal studies faculty of the University of Massachusetts and others from the five college area will offer an eclectic law conference.

From January 4 through January 25, "with a measure of humor and deadly seriousness," they hope to provoke some honest discussion about law, and thereby to suggest why the law is a serious and essential study for non-lawyers.

The law conference will be directed toward students of the five college area, who may receive credit for their participation; but it will also be open to the public. Enrollment will be limited to 90 persons, though some events, like movies, will be open to larger groups.

The format of the conference will be modular. There will be large numbers of short and long subjects which can be taken in any combination, so that the student will chart his or her own way through the maze.

Credit will be based on a journal-map you make of your experience. A number of subjects will be given more than once to allow the greatest flexibility for participants. The credit limit will be six, but there is no limit on the number of things in which you can participate. Any number of credits from 0 to 6 will be allowed.

The law conference, which will be held at the University of Massachusetts campus, will charge a lab fee of $5.00 to cover movies and materials; but it will otherwise be free whether you are taking credit or not.

Registration will take place from December 5-8 in Room 308, School of Business Administration. Information amplifying details of the conference will be available at that time. To register you must indicate which events you plan to participate in, how many credits you expect to take, and pay the lab fee. You can then think over the program and make whatever changes you wish as you go along in January.

Lebow Concert Next Week

The fifth annual Lebow Memorial Concert will be given Wednesday, Nov. 29, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at UMass.

The eighth in this year's Faculty Recital Series of the UMass music department, the concert will consist of two 20th Century works: Charles Fussell's "Voyages", on a poem of Hart Crane; and William Walton's "Facade", based on poems by Edith Sitwell.

"Voyages", which had its premiere in Amherst in May, 1970, will be performed, under the direction of Alan Harler, by Fernande Kaeser, pianist; Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; Charles Lehrer, obolst; Doris Abramson, speaker; and the University Women's Choir. Mr. Fussell, a member of the University's music faculty, will conduct nine department members in the Walton Work. Dorothy Ornest and John d'Armand will be the reciters.

The Lebow Memorial Scholarship fund was established in 1968 to honor pianist Howard Lebow of the University's music faculty, who was killed in an automobile accident early that year. This is the third year the scholarship will be awarded to an outstanding music student. Contributions to the scholarship fund may be sent to Mr. Robert Brand in the Treasurer's Office of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Contributions will also be accepted at the door. All Faculty Recitals are open to the public, without charge.

Effect Of New Life On Religion Questioned

BOSTON (AP) - Will contacting life on other worlds change man's image of himself for the better? Or will it destroy his initiative by allowing him to depend on a superior intelligence, and possibly change his very image of God?

These and other questions were considered by experts in the sciences, social sciences, theology and communications who met this weekend to consider the effects upon man if extraterrestrial life is contacted.

The symposium, sponsored by the national space agency and Boston University Department of Astronomy, focused on the social and philsophical implications of contacting other beings in space.

The experts agreed it was almost certain that human beings are not alone in the galaxy and certainly not in the universe. But there were varying views on when, if ever, contact might be made and what its implications may be.

Prof. Carl E. Sagan, director of Cornell University's Laboratory for Planetary Studies, said technology has reached a stage where man could detect another civilization as advanced as himself, although the search may be prolonged.

Sagan said man is at a unique evolutionary period "in which the old secure sense of where we are in the universe has eroded." He said contact with extraterrestrial life could help man re-establish his relation to other human beings and give mankind a new sense of where it fits into the universe.

New Vitamin E Myths Explained

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) - There's more myth than fact in the current popularity of Vitamin E, a St. Louis researcher suggests.

Ninety per cent of the money spent on Vitamin E is wasted, said Dr. Robert E. Olson, professor of biochemistry, medicine and surgery at St. Louis University.

He told newsmen at sessions of the American Heart Association meeting Sunday that wheat germ oil, other vegetable oils and plain vegetables are good natural sources of the vitamin.

He said there was a long list of conditions for which Vitamin E has been thought helpful, including menstrual disorders, abortion, burns, a number of heart and vascular ailments, rheumatic fever, ulcers, diabetes and kidney diseases.

Some people, he noted, also mistakenly believed that Vitamin E improved virility.

Actually, Olson said, the only type of disease found to benefit from large doses of Vitamin E is a cardiovascular ailment known as intermittent claudication.

In this disease, the circulation of arteries of the legs is impaired, making walking difficult and painful.

Olson said he was "pleading for a more scientific approach" to settling arguments over use of Vitamin E in large doses.

The major usefulness of the vitamin in therapy, Olson said, is in treating Vitamin E deficiency, a relatively rare disorder.

Giants Catch Cardinals 13-7

By BOB ESTELLE

The New York Giants, on a late one-yard touchdown run by Ron Johnson, came from behind to defeat the St. Louis Cardinals 13-7.

The first half was dominated by St. Louis' running backs Donny Anderson and Johnny Roland but they could only manage one score: a 13-yard screen pass from Gary Cuozzo to Roland.

The Giants managed to get one score in the first half. It came after a Giant drive was halted at the Cardinal 32. Pete Gogolak kicked a 40-yard field goal which not only put New York on the scoreboard but made the soccer-style kicker the all-time Giant scoring leader.

The second half seemed to be a complete reverse of the first half. True, it remained a defensive game but the Giants were able to move the ball downfield, although neither team could put any points on the scoreboard until midway through the fourth quarter.

Then the Giants came to life. A 22-yard field goal by Gogolak set the stage for what was truly a remarkable drive.

The next time the Giants got the ball, they moved 65 yards in 11 plays which ended with Johnson's one-yard plunge into the end zone. There were three key plays that kept this drive going. With third and 29 to go with the ball at midfield, Giant tight end Bob Tucker caught a pass from Norm Snead that came one-half yard away from the first down. On the following play, Johnson's two-yard gain gave the Giants a much needed first down. Two plays later, Tucker caught another long pass from Snead which put the ball at the one. From there, Johnson scored his touchdown with a little over four minutes left in the game.

The game ended rather traumatically. After the Cardinals took the kickoff, brought it back to the Giant 45 and their offense started moving. But with 1:07 left in the game, the Cards found themselves with a fourth and one situation on the Giant 23. Cardinal coach Bob Hollway had Don Anderson try the middle but a hard tackle by Giant rookie Larry Jacobson secured the win for the Giants.

Vikes Top Rams 45-41

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Minnesota's Fran Tarkenton threw touchdown bombs of 76, 70 and 66 yards Sunday to lead the Vikings to a 45-41 National Football League victory over Los Angeles.

The loss dropped the Rams out of first place in one division and kept the Vikings only one game behind in another.

The Vikings, 6-4-0, overcame a 20-10 halftime deficit to register their fourth consecutive victory, which they needed to stay in a second-place tie with Detroit. Both teams are one game back of Green Bay in the NFC Central Division.

Tarkenton threw four touchdown passes in the second half against the NFC's top-ranked pass defense as the Rams fell behind Atlanta in the NFC West with a 5-4-1 record. The race is a virtual three-way tie between the Rams, Falcons and San Francisco. Atlanta plays Monday night against Washington.

The Vikings struck quickly for two touchdowns early in the third quarter. Paul Krause scooped up Willie Ellison's fumble and ran 30 yards for a touchdown and Tarkenton put Minnesota ahead 24-20 with a 76-yard pass play to running back Bill Brown with 3:20 elapsed in the half.

The Rams drove 52 yards to regain the lead 27-24 before the third period ended as rookie Jim Bertelsen squirmed into the end zone for his second one-yard touchdown of the day.

Tarkenton cut loose with three touchdown passes in the fourth period, and the Rams made it close with a meaningless, last-play touchdown.

Tarkenton connected on 14 of 28 passes for 319 yards to offset Gabriel's finest passing game of the season, 25 of 33 for 240. Gabriel has been bothered all season by tendinities of his throwing elbow.

Chargers Upset Chiefs 27-17

KANSAS CITY (AP)— San Diego quarterback John Hadl and rushing star Cid Edwards collaborated Sunday for a 27-17 National Football League triumph over Kansas City that just about wrecked the Chiefs' championship chances in the American Conference West.

Hadl, with his deadly passing, and Edwards, often on the receiving end and grinding out ground gains at crucial points, broke the Chiefs' in the first half when the Chargers swept ahead 24-7.

Hadl's 61-yard pass play to Edwards set up San Diego's first touchdown in the first quarter. Mike Garrett, a former Chief, broke into the end zone from the three.

Larry Marshall returned the next kickoff 43 yards to the Chargers' 44, and seven plays later Len Dawson passed four yards to Wendell Hayes for a touchdown.

After that, it was nearly all San Diego until the last moments.

Before the half, Dennis Partee kicked a 46-yard field goal. Hadl smashed into the end zone for a touchdown from the one and flipped a 20-yard strike to Gary Garrison for a touchdown with 22 seconds left in the half.

The Chargers concluded their scoring with Partee's 24-yard field goal in the third quarter. That was matched by Jan Stenerud, who got off a 28-yarder in the same period.

Late in the game, Mike Livingston, relieving the ineffective Dawson at quarterback, fired a 36-yard end zone pass to Robert West.

Raiders Roll

DENVER (AP)—Oakland's Charlie Smith and Marv Hubbard combined for 185 yards rushing and a touchdown each Sunday and George Blanda kicked three field goals to carry the Raiders to a 37-20 National Football League victory over the Denver Broncos.

The victory, coupled with Kansas City's 27-17 loss to San Diego, increased Oakland's lead in the West Division of the American Conference to 1-1/2 games over the Chiefs.

Smith led the Raiders' ground assault against the Broncos with 101 yards while Blanda, who also kicked four extra points, became the all-time NFL leader in career conversions. He has 812 points after touchdowns, two more than previous record-holder Lou Groza.

Dolphins Win

MIAMI (AP)—Safety Dick Anderson set up two Miami touchdowns with a pass interception and a fumble recovery as the Dolphins clinched the American Conference East Division title with a 28-24 National Football League victory over the New York Jets Sunday.

The Dolphins, pro football's only unbeaten team, upped their mark to 10-0 with their second victory of the season over the Jets, who are second in the division with a 6-4 record.

Anderson intercepted Joe Namath's first pass of the game at the Jet 33 early in the first quarter. Earl Morrall passed nine yards to Howard Twilley for a 7-0 Miami lead seven plays later.

With the Jets leading 24-21 early in the fourth quarter, Anderson fell on a fumble by the Jets; Cliff McClain at the New York 27. Four plays later, Mercury Morris snaked 14 yards around the left side for the winning touchdown.

Morrall found his receivers covered and kept the ball for a 31-yard touchdown run which gave the Dolphins a 21-17 lead early in the third quarter.

The Jets, who led 17-14 at halftime, came right back with an 80-yard drive to go ahead 2421, with Namath throwing the final four yards to tight end Wayne Stewart.

The drive was kept alive when the Dolphins were called for roughing the kicker on a fourth-down punt, giving New York a first down.

College Football Roundup

Bowl Bound Teams Win

(AP)—Saturday night was anything but the loneliest night of the week for the 11 major bowl games as college football teams scrapped their way into 20 of the 22 available berths.

Top-rated Southern California nailed down the Pacific-8 title and the host role in the Rose Bowl with a 24-7 triumph over 14th-ranked UCLA. The Trojans will meet the winner of next weekend's Big Ten showdown between third-ranked Michigan, a late 9-6 winner over Purdue, and No. 9 Ohio State, which turned back Northwestern 27-14.

Although the invitations could not officially be extended until Saturday evening under NCAA regulations, many of the pairings were disclosed by The Associated Press last week and most ran true to form.

National runner-up Alabama mauled Virginia Tech 52-13 and accepted a bid to the Cotton Bowl against No. 7 Texas, which captured an unprecedented fifth consecutive Southwest Conference crown by blanking Texas Christian 27-0.

Oklahoma, ranked fourth, trounced Kansas 31-7 to set up Thursday's decisive Big Eight battle against defending two-time national champion Nebraska. The Sooners immediately okayed a return trip to the Sugar Bowl, this time against No. 6 Penn State, which wore down Boston College 45-26.

Nebraska, which clinched its two national titles in the Orange Bowl but is only rated fifth this year after one loss and one tie, walloped Kansas State 59-7 and will make a third straight trip to Miami. The opponent will be No. 10 Notre Dame, a hard-pressed 20-17 victor over the University of Miami.

Eighth-ranked Lousiana State scored twice in the final period to defeat Mississippi State 28-14 a couple of hours after the Tigers accepted a berth in the Astro-Bluebonnet Bowl.

There they will face Southeastern Conference rival and 13th-ranked Tennessee, which beat Mississippi 17-0 and ended the Rebels' string of 15 straight bowl appearances.

The Gator Bowl lined up 11th-ranked Auburn after the Cinderella team of the year drubbed Georgia 27-10. The Tigers' opponent will be No. 15 Colorado, which whipped Air Force 38-7.

No. 19 Missouri won a 6-5 battle from No. 12 Iowa State and both clubs wound up in bowls-the former against the Western Athletic Conference champ in the Fiesta Bowl and the latter against Georgia Tech in the Liberty Bowl. The Yellowjackets stung Navy 30-7.

A pair of fourth-quarter touchdown passes from Nick Vidovic to Ken Taylor gave No. 16 North Carolina a 14-0 victory over Duke and sent the Tar Heels into the Sun Bowl against Texas Tech, which shaded Baylor 13-7.

The Peach Bowl went for a pair of unranked but explosive teams after North Carolina State trounced Clemson 42-17 and West Virginia saddled Syracuse with its first losing campaign since 1949 by a 43-12 count. Florida State, which had been in the running, missed out by losing to South Carolina 24-21.

The only two berths open are the host spot in the Fiesta Bowl against Missouri and one vacancy in the Tangerine Bowl, where the opponent will be surprising Kent State, which rebounded from a 3-8 record a year ago and downed defending champion Toledo 27-9 for Mid-American honors.

IM Powderpuff Football Roundup

With the end of another powderpuff football season came another victory for the Independent league Mushrooms. The defending champs, led by Vicki Pagel, defeated Patterson's Packers 30-12, for their second consecutive campus victory.

The Packers, unbeaten going into this final game took first place in the residence hall division by defeating last year's winners the Melville Whalers. Paced by Kathy Lawson, the Packer's, all novice football players, tied the Chiotees for campus second place.

The Sorority division title was decided in what started out to be a close match between Chi Omega and Tri Sig. Led by the scoring powers of Kacey Cearnal and Barb Barry, Chi Omega broke loose to stun their opponents 20-0. This gave the Chiotees the first place sorority title and the right to play the Packers for the campus second place.

Due to a lack of time and decent playing conditions the two teams decided to accept a second place tie.

Bowl Hopes Still Alive

Minutemen Waltz To YC Crown

By EARLE BARROLL

It should come as no surprise on this Monday morning to read of UMass' 42-7 drubbing of New Hampshire at Alumni Stadium on Saturday that wrapped up the Yankee Conference title for the Minutemen this season.

After all, when a team dominates a league as UMass has in raking the opposition to the tune of 40-plus points a game, it then becomes just a simple matter of going through the motions before the official stamp of champ is placed on the king and the fans can holler "finally".

In the locker room after the game, head coach Dick MacPherson, who received the game ball, told his players, "We've achieved our first objective for the season, the Conference title. Now we can go after our second objective, number one in New England. And that means Boston College next week."

Outside of the fact that the opposing force was UNH there were a couple of other reasons why the Minutemen were not the same team that performed so poorly over the past two Saturdays against non-league foes Bucknell and Holy Cross.

First there was the return to action of defensive halfback John Healy to patch up a porous secondary and fullback Dick Cummings for much needed blocking on pass protection and the sweep. "When we're healthy," explained MacPherson, "we're a pretty good team."

And second there was Peil Pennington. The Peil Pennington and not the 6'5 quarterback who went something like 15 of 50 in the previous two games. "I was stepping into the throw in this game," the big guy said, "whereas in the past two games I was leaning back causing the bad passes."

With this victory also came a number of league and school records. The 42 points gave UMass 203 for five Conference games surpassing the mark of 194 set by the UMass team of 1969.

Paul Metallo's touchdown runs of 11 and five yards gives him nine league td's (14 overall) for 54 points breaking a 20-year record of 52 by Joe Betancourt of UConn. And marvelous Steve Schubert ("He should get a game ball every game."–Metallo) set a Conference mark of five touchdown receptions for a season and a school record of eight with a pair of strikes from Pennington and Mark Tripucka.

Enough of that.

It took the Minutemen nearly the entire first period to get untracked. A Doug Winslow interception of a Bob Osgood pass set Pennington and company up on the UNH 40. Three plays later Pennington found tight end Gary Mika all alone in the corner of the end zone from seven yards out. (Mika's knee was later injured and he was taken out of the game.)

Pennington and Tim Berra sparked the Minutemen to two second quarter scores. While Schubert was drawing his usual double and triple coverage, Berra shook himself clear to grab two Pennington bullets setting up a one-yard plunge by Peil and four more in a wild two-minute drill that culminated with a Metallo 11-yard burst.

The Wildcats could only counter this onslaught with a 39-yard scoring pass from Osgood to Mike Sides against the UMass reserves, but the Minutemen surrounded this score with three of their own to escalate the romp.

They scored twice within 26 seconds midway into the third quarter. Metallo carried three tacklers into the end zone on a five-yard scamper giving him the point record. On New Hampshire's next possession defensive end Ed McAleney pounced on an Osgood fumble at the UNH 31-yard line and all it took was one play–Pennington to Schubert cutting over the middle to get it in from there.

Tripucka engineered the final UMass score, a ten-yard toss to Schubert.

The victory was UMass' seventh in nine games (5-0 in the YC). UNH is 4-5 (2-3 in the YC).

And while two successive losses seemingly knocked the Minutemen out of a possible Bowl date with Delaware there has been much talk and fact–mostly fact–that UMass is the team Delaware wants for the Boardwalk Bowl.

By Wednesday of this week, UMass will know if it will have an eleventh game this season.

Bills Overcome Pats 27-24

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)–Dennis Shaw connected with Bob Chandler on a 42-yard touchdown play with 51 seconds remaining and John Leypoldt booted a 45-yard field goal with five seconds to go Sunday to catapult the Buffalo Bills to a 27-24 National Football League victory over the New England Patriots. The Patriots appeared to have wrapped up a victory for interim coach Phil Bengtson when Mike Walker booted a 36-yard field goal at 13:05 of the final period.

But the Bills struck back to snap a five-game losing streak and hand New England its seventh straight loss.

Linzy Cole returned the kickoff 51 yards to the New England 47 after Walker's field goal. Four plays later, Shaw passed to Chandler, who took the ball over his shoulder and stepped into the end zone.

Leypoldt added the conversion for a 24-24 tie.

The Patriots, electing to gamble, went to the air and the strategy backfired. Maurice Tyler picked off a pass by Jim Plunkett at the Buffalo 35 and sprinted 27 yards to the Patriots 38. Leypoldt then came off the bench and booted his game winning field goal.

Friday's sports head featured Phil Bengston, new coach of the New England Patriots.

Gillen and Thomas Run In Nationals

"We've proven ourselves in the New England's and the IC4A's. Our next logical step is the nationals," said Coach Ken O'Brien, as he prepared to lead his team to the N.C.A.A. Cross-country championships in Houston, Texas, today.

Of the team that finished second in the New Englands, and tenth in the IC4A's, only the frontrunning duo of Randy Thomas and Bill Gillen will run in the Nationals. The reasons for this are twofold. First of all, the trip to Houston is expensive. It is doubtful that school funds would have been available to finance the entire team's participation, so O'Brien opted to take only his top two runners.

On the practical side, there is the question of winning. The tenth place showing of the team in the IC4A's was respectable, but realistically, it precluded the Minutemen a chance of victory in the more competitive N.C.A.A.'s. UMass just isn't strong enough to compete successfully against Olympian-loaded teams like Washington State, Eastern Kentucky, and Manhattan.

But Gillen and Thomas won't be running for themselves alone. O'Brien sees this meet as an opportunity for the harriers to evaluate themselves against national competition. "The other individuals on the team know how they compare against Randy and Billy. From the performances of these two runners, their teammates should get some idea of where they stand against national competition," said O'Brien.

The last runners to compete in the national championships were Ron Wayne and Larry Paulson in 1970. Wayne took 43rd in that race, after finishing 23rd in the IC4A's. Gillen, who finished 21st in the IC4A's this year, is hoping to crack the top fifty. It won't be easy. "This isn't a vacation trip for us," said Randy Thomas. "We'll be pushing all the way, like we've been in all our Championship meets. I think we can finish in the top fifty, but with so many good runners in the field, we could finish as low as 75th."

Will a strong NCAA showing have a significant affect on the UMass cross-country program? "I doubt it", said O'Brien. "Only an outstanding team performance, or a top twenty showing by one of our individual runners would result in national attention. That isn't likely to happen, so I don't think our recruiting program stands to benefit much from this meet. I think the results should be encouraging to the team as a whole, though, and will serve as an added incentive for them next season."

Gillen and Thomas view the N.C.A.A.'s as the door to a higher level of competition. "Face it", said Gillen, "The Yankee Conference isn't nationally competitive. The conference has a few good teams, but there are good high school teams that could beat some of our opponents. We could compete successfully if we stayed in the conference, but we'd never rise above that level. On the other hand, if we ran against outstanding teams on a national level, we wouldn't win as much, but we'd be better runners. The only way we'll attract better runners to this school is by giving them the chance to compete on this higher level."

Will Commercialism Ever Stop?

Creeping commercialism is taking over sports. Bill Ballou cries that his first love-hockey–is being watered down by the numerous hockey leagues. Others have said similar things in the past concerning other sports such as baseball, football, and basketball.

Tennis and skiing have developed pro loops. Now, the International Track Association has been created. Jim Ryun, Bob Seagren, Lee Evans and Randy Matsen are the headliners in this new organization. Money is the answer as the winner in each event will receive $500, with $250 going for second, $100 for third, $50 for fourth and $0 for alsorans.

Commercialism is taking over all sports and is becoming more acceptable every day. Years ago, a man would be afraid to say that baseball was his occupation. Now, it is a much idolized profession. This idea is acceptable in a capitalist society, but its impact is being felt all around the amateur world.

Nowhere is the question of commercialism more pronounced than in the Olympics. Avery Brundage has throughout the years argued for amateurism, though he allowed the Communist countries to compete, which supposedly support their athletes financially. Many have wondered what our pros could do against the Russians or Czechs. For the first time, the Russians played members of the National Hockey League (Team Canada) and the competition was quite good. Maybe it is a forecast of the future, when all amateurism dies.

The pro league has got to hurt the Olympic competition. Right now it is composed mostly of Americans (at least four less Olympians), but if it becomes as its name implies–international–then, it is sure to take many of the glamor names out of the future Olympics. It is difficult to pass up any opportunity to make money doing something enjoyable. $500 per race is a better incentive, then trying to scrape up enough dollars to attend the Olympic tryouts.

Besides the pro leagues being formed, there are other factors which tend to tarnish the Olympic image. Recently the games at Munich were marred by the action of Arab guerrillas. The flag waving over the years had created an intense sense of nationalism, rather than emphasizing the competition. The Olympics are now seen as possible spotlight for righteous causes.

This has got to stop. The National Collegiate Athletic Association pulled out of the International Olympic Committee, complaining of the pettiness and other faults of the organization. On November 7th, Colorado and Denver residents voted to withdraw funding for the preparation of Denver as a site for the 1976 Winter Olympics.

People, especially in this country, are becoming concerned as to the purpose of the Olympics. They were meant to promote good will among nations in the past, but after the killings, one has to wonder as to whether this goal is being accomplished.

The Olympics, as is, should be drastically changed. The NCAA pull out illustrates the frustration of dealing with these gentlemen who plan the Games. The Colorado votes illustrates the growing commercialism.

A possible solution to the problem would be a de-emphasis on the flag-waving and the break-up of the Olympics. Each sport should have international competition, but the games need not be every four years at one spot. Rather, the spots and times of the competition should be varied. Pros and amateurs can compete together. While the pros would be paid for winning, it would be nice to set up some sort of support for the amateurs. Their expenses (housing and meals) could be paid for by the tournament committee.

So, there should be an international sports league. The primary aim should be competition not flag-waving. Commercialism is becoming a big part of American sports, but it must not be allowed to interfere with the competition. It can be used to promote sports and therewithin lies its value. A possible evil may be the answer to the amateur problem.

Two slain brothers at Southern University, Bros. Leonard A. Brown and Denver A. Smith.-

La. Student Gives 1st Hand Account

By JOHN PERKINS

The students at Southern University in Baton Rouge have had a number of long standing grievances against the school, the President of the school, and the state school board (which has jurisdiction over the school). Southern University is the largest black school in the country, and it has a total enrollment of about 8,300. The events that led to the killing of students started around October 20 of this year. On that day 3,000 students held a meeting to discuss the dismissal of Professor Charles Wydell, who was sympathetic to the demands of the students. They drew up a list of demands to present to the administration, this list included: (1) the rehiring of Professor Wydell; (2) the establishment of an Executive Council which would review the hiring and firing of both faculty and administration personnel, and for the students to have a 2 to 1 representation on this board; (3) more student power in the administration of the school in general; (4) a broader Black Studies Program; and (5) better housing and food. The students decided to boycott classes until these demands were met.

The boycott managed to keep large numbers of students away from classes, but the administration did not meet all of the demands. Wydell was not rehired. and the student representation on the Council has to be 1 to 1 instead of the asked for 2 to 1. When the students refused to compromise their position, Dr. Leon G. Netterville, Jr. decided to close the school for three days to see if things would quiet down. The National Guard was called out to enforce the closing, but students in Baton Rouge feel this was an unnecessary show of force.

On October 24 there was a march of about 2,500 students and community people from the campus to the State Board of Education. The Board of Education was not cooperative at all and gave the student representatives a run around.

The students at Southern University at New Orleans (SUNO) met with a little more success. On October 26 about 1,000 of the students attending SUNO held a meeting to discuss the events in Baton Rouge, and to draw up their own list of demands. Their demands were: (1) the President of SUNO, Dr. Emmit Bashful, resign; (2) That the official school flag be the Black Liberation Flag; (3) The right of the students to audit the financial records of the school; (4) The immediate revamping of freshmen Orientation; (5) contracted doctor and ambulance service; (6) bus service down Press Drive in New Orleans. Initially there was a two day boycott of classes in support of the students at Baton Rouge, and in support of their own demands. Around the first week in November, the administration building was taken over and before the students left all of their demands were met, including the resignation of Dr. Bashful. Last week the State Board of Education refused to accept the resignation.

Meanwhile, in Baton Rouge the boycott of classes continued; strengthened and supported by the student happenings in New Orleans. On Wednesday November 15 around 2,000 students were using the gym for a meeting to maintain their solidarity, and to map plans for additional action. The police came and asked if they had authorization to use the gym. They didn't, but they were allowed to have the meeting anyway.

On Thursday around 8:30 a.m. about 100 students began to occupy the administration building. Other students arrived, and after the building was filled students just milled around the front of the building. Apparently the police began to arrive between nine and ten o'clock. The police are not normally on the campus, but are summoned in 'special situations' where the campus security forces are insufficient.

At 10:00 the police began to ask that the building be cleared. However, the bull horns were drowned out by the noise of the helicopters that were flying over the heads of the students. The police then began to shoot tear gas toward the crowd. Some students picked up the canisters and threw them back towards the police. Many of the students began to run from the front of the building. The police fired another 'tear gas canister' directly into the crowd of people running from the front of the building. When the smoke cleared two students lay dead.

Both of the victims have been identified as being students at the school. Denver A. Smith came from New Roads, Louisiana, and the other victim, Leonard A. Brown, came from Gilbert, Louisiana.

The coroner for Baton Rouge, Dr. Hypolite Landry, reports that both of the students were killed with 3 pellets of #3 or #4 buckshot, which struck them on the left side of the head. These pellets are about the size of a .22 caliber bullet. It has not been reported whether or not the police use #3 or #4 buckshot in their guns, but presumably they do or it would have been denied by now.

Minutemen Invited To Boardwalk Bowl

By MARTY KELLEY

UMass officials have announced that early yesterday morning a bid for the University of Massachusetts football team had been extended to play in the Boardwalk Bowl, December 9th at Convention Hall in Atlantic City. Athletic Director Frank McInerney will have an official statement on whether the University has accepted or rejected the other this morning, in a press conference at the Boyden Building at 10 a.m.

Olav Kolleval, Athletic Director at Lafayette University and Chairman of the Boardwalk Bowl Committee, called McInerney's Office yesterday morning with the news that the Minutemen had been invited to the Bowl and had 24 hours to give the committee official confirmation.

According to Dean David Bischoff, from the School of Physical Education, certain closed steps had to be taken before UMass officials could decide whether to accept the Bowl offer or not.

Maung Ji, 'We Are All Too Serious'

By ROBERTA MARTONE

"We are all too serious. Meditation makes us see humor in all things. The questions to ask ourselves are: where are we? how are we? and, whither are we going?" This statement was made by U Maung Maung Ji, international lecturer of Buddhism and Meditation, last night, in a speech entitled "Psychia Healing and Spiritualism", at Hasbrouck.

After a brief introduction, Maung Ji began discussing his future goals. He hopes to open a Spiritual Foundation in London and San Francisco.

Maung Ji said, "America has got a special mission today; especially the younger people of America. California is the spiritual ground of all organization in America." He went on to stress the fact that the progress of Spiritualism is in the hands of the young.

Next, Maung Ji recited a Buddhist prayer for meditation. He said it was an invocation to the Spirit. In translation, Maung Ji said the prayer was concerned with "good will" and the "forces of Christ".

The lecture was then open to discussion. When asked what he thought of Hare Krishna Movement and how it compared to the other Buddhist Movements, Maung Ji said it was a wonderful organization by young people but, he didn't compare religions. He said, "Whatever you are doesn't matter. What is important is how you live."

Maung Ji was then asked to describe the differences between various cults of Buddhist Meditation. He said there were many different forms of Buddhism, according to what country they originated from. However, they were all basically the same. Maung Ji said, "They all control your mind. They make you aware of what you are thinking and doing. They make you aware of being aware."

In closing, Maung Ji said, "We belong to one family. There is no father land; there is no mother land; there is only brother land. We will be united there."

Editors Protest Ford Grant

By MARK VOGLER

The editor of the Massachusetts' Review--a literary quarterly at the University of Massachusetts, along with 72 other American and English writers and editors, released a statement of protest today against the Ford Foundation's subsidizing of a foreign magazine.

Jules Chametzky, MR editor said the protest was against a $50,000 grant by the Ford Foundation to the International Association for Cultural Freedom for the promotion in the United States of Encounter, the English monthly magazine.

The statement protests the fact that the Ford Foundation, which failed to support American literary magazines, has made this grant to Encounter for "emergency assistance."

The statement also argues that the grant places American literary magazines at a competitive disadvantage, since the grant was made to Encounter specifically to increase its circulation in the United States.

Another issue raised by the protest statement was the political implication of an effort to promote and expand Encounter's influence in America.

Chametzky said that reference has been made to exposure of the fact that Encounter had received money from the Central Intelligence Agency.

"This shook up certain elements of the intellectual community," Chametzky said. "The fact that money was being funneled by the CIA into Encounter's funds was quite a scandal.

"We don't relate it directly to the Ford Foundation. But given the history of the Encounter, it seems likely that the magazine will support American policy. It's definitely pro-American in certain aspects."

When asked to explain some of the implications that may have been on the minds of those who drafted the protest, Chametzky replied: "Many people explicitly referred to the CIA connection."

Chametzky along with editors Andrew Lytie of the Sewanee Review, Frederick Morgan of the Hudson Review, William Phillips of the Partisan Review, and Charles Newman of Tri-Quarterly were the five organizers of the protest which culminated shortly before the summer and came together during the fall.

Among the more notable signers of the protest are: Jules Feiffer, Allen Ginsberg, Robert L. Heilbroner, Alfred Kazin, Dwight Macdonald, Norman Mailer, Bernard Malamud, Mary McCarthy, Arthur Miller, Harold Rosenberg, Susan Sontag, William Styron, and Richard Wilbur.

The protest in its entirety: "We, the undersigned writers and editors, wish strongly to protest the Ford Foundation's recent $50,000 grant to the International Association for Cultural Freedom in Parks as "emergency assistance" for the publication costs of Encounter, published in England.

"This grant, by an organization that on many previous occasions has claimed a lack of funds for the support of American literary magazines, is grossly insulting to American editors and writers.

"It is also damaging to American literary magazines in putting them at a competitive disadvantage, since the grant will be used by Encounter, specifically to "seek increased circulation in the United States." We are made uneasy, as well, by the political implications of this effort to promote and expand Encounter's influence in this country."

Chametzky said that he hopes the protest achieves publicity of the issue and that the Ford Foundation realizes the development of American Cultural institutions are important.

As to the effect of the protest, Chametzky commented: "The effects suggest how sensitive an area this is and how responsive the Ford Foundation is to this. There may be some review of their policy in store. For all public intentions, though, the issue has been exposed."

See And Hear Live Concerts In Stereo (In The Privacy Of Your Own Home)

By BILL DENSMORE

Simultaneous broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Alice Cooper on television and radio have been scheduled for Wednesday and Friday night.

A "simulcast" involves the picture of a musical event on a television station, while an FM station in the area broadcasts a stereo version of the same concert. Occasionally stations have cooperated in the production of four-channel quadrasonic concerts using one TV station and two FM stereo channels.

The public broadcasting stations of Massachusetts will join in airing a live performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday evening. In western Massachusetts participants may tune Channel 57 on television for the video signal, and WFCR, 88.5 FM for the stereo audio portion of the classical concert.

Colin Davis will conduct the BSO in works of Elgar and Sibelius, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

Students travelling to the east part of the Commonwealth for Thanksgiving may hear/see the same broadcast over Channel 2 and WGBH, 89.7 FM, both located in Boston. The classical concert will begin at eight o'clock on all stations.

The Boston Symphony is regularly broadcast over Massachusetts stations. But what makes this week unusual for music lovers is the scheduling by ABC-TV of a rock concert on Friday night. Alice Cooper will be featured in this production, to run for an hour-and-a-half at 11:30 p.m. With Cooper will be the Seals & Crofts, Bo Didley & Curtis Mayfield.

In western Massachusetts, this second bonanza will be carried by Springfield's Channel 40 on Friday night at 11:30. As of now, no western Mass. FM station is planning to cooperate in broadcasting the stereo version of the concert. But in Boston the situation is different.

Viewers/listeners within a fifty mile radius of Boston on Friday night can head and see Alice Cooper over Channel 5 and WBCN. Facilities for the stereo audio broadcast on WBCN will reportedly cost at least $600 for the hour-and-a-half concert. WCVB (Channel 5) will put out the picture and a composite monophonic sound. WBCN (10.1 fm) will air the sound in stereo.

To take full advantage of either concert, place a television in between the two speakers of a stereo FM receiver. Then when the program begins, turn down the volume on the television and hear stereo reproduction over the FM station.

As of now, no FM station is planning to cooperate in broadcasting the stereo version of the concert. But in Boston the situation is different.

And one further note of confusion. In Boston another FM station will broadcast two more stereo channels of the Symphony Orchestra concert. WCRB (102.1 FM), a commercial classical outfit, will make up two channels of WGBH-FM as the other half.

If you can get through all the wiring, it should be quite an experience, or as one publication put it, "It's just that more channels are the merrier."

Suit Won't Protect All

By MARK VOGLER

BOSTON--A spokesman for the UMass-Boston group that filed a class action suit against the Massachusetts loyalty oath last Wednesday in Middlesex County told the Collegian last night that the suit did not protect everybody from the university who refused to sign the oath.

Kenneth Ford, UMass physics professor and spokesman for the three plaintiffs of Boston, said that the suit provided no protection for those employees who entered their jobs after September 21.

According to Ford, "That was the specific date at which time a letter was sent from our university personnel director. Although the Supreme Court had voted to uphold the oath during the spring, the oath was not actually reinstituted from April to September, and those people were not asked to sign the oath. "All those after the 21st should have been given the oath to sign on the spot. Our suit doesn't protect these people. If we win our suit, somebody in that category will have to bring a separate action."

The Class action suit which Judge John W. Coddaire, Jr. made the ruling, originally implied that personnel officers of all three university campuses were prevented from terminating employees for failure to swear to the Massachusetts Employees Oath.

The Boston group will have their case continued in Middlesex County Superior Court, Cambridge Wednesday morning at 9:30. The UMass-Amherst group is scheduled to have its pleadings completed in Hampshire County Court, Northampton Wednesday, also.

Campus Police Disarmament Demanded

By BOB SCHEIER

A group of black students and faculty members at UMass have called for the immediate disarmament of the campus police.

In a meeting yesterday which they said was prompted by the shooting of two black students at Southern University in Louisiana last week several students also complained of harrassment of black students by campus police.

The harrassment alleged by the students included being followed by Security Dept. cars while driving on campus, and being stopped excessively for license and automobile registration checks by the Security Dept.

About 20 persons, including Prof. Michael Thelwell, chairman of the Afro-American studies department, and Associate Professor Archie Shepp of the same department met with Saul Chafin, assistant director of the Security Dept.

Those meeting agreed to call for a meeting later this week with David Johnston, director of the Security Dept., and vice-chancellor for student affairs Robert W. Gage to discuss the demands.

The group also demanded a "student-dominated review board" designed to make the police more responsible to the University community and to set a firearms policy for the police, and for the recruitment of people from the University community to serve with the police.

Thelwell said "the presence of arms on campus presents a real possibility they would be used, and if they were it would probably involve black students."

Chafin said the police were allowed but not required to carry weapons under Massachusetts law.

He argued several times that it was necessary for police to carry guns, although he said no campus policeman has yet used his gun on campus.

Paul Chandler,, a student, suggested that the campus police boycott the carrying of guns for a year.

He also said the removal of guns from the campus police might spread to campuses across the country and to other communities in the state.

Assoc. Prof. Shepp said, "Don't many of the whites carrying guns still carry racist attitudes? How do you know one of them won't pop off at some point...?"

Chafin said he could arrange meetings of the group with the Security Dept., but added the removal of guns from the policy would probably have to come from the UMass administration or Board of Trustees.

He also said an advisory board of the sort sought by the group was already being organized by the administration.

When several students said the carrying of guns by the Security Dept. could result in shootings like at Kent State University in 1970 or the recent deaths at Southern University, Chafin said that in both cases any shooting was done by outside law enforcement agencies and not campus police.

Chafin said a precedent had been set at UMass during this spring's occupations of the building housing the ROTC program, when no outside agencies were called in.

Instead, he said, the Security Dept. had consulted both with the administration and those occupying the building. Those occupying the administration building left after several hours, and those in the building housing the ROTC program left after several days.

Prof. Thelwell said black persons on campus felt they were stopped "disproportionately", and Chafin said he knew of both blacks and whites being stopped for license checks.

In response to a question, Chafin said, there was no law prohibiting a policeman from stopping a driver to check if he had a valid license and registration.

Thelwell also charged that "Whenever anything happens in Southwest, the cops check on the blacks."

He also said a committee formed to report incidents of alleged harrassment to the Security Police "will make a difference."

"It would make them think twice about the way they deal with black people."

December 7 was also recommended by several speakers as a national day of solidarity with the Southern University students, and to call for the disarming of campus police all over the country.

Missing Belchertown Patient Found Dead

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

BELCHERTOWN--The body of a Belchertown State School resident was found dead Monday behind the school's nursery building on Rt. 202 following a 21-hour search by State and local police.

Miss Linda J. Buchanan, 25, was found at 8:40 a.m. and pronounced dead at the scene by Medical Examiner Kenneth L. Collard, who attributed the cause of death to over exposure.

State Police from the Hampshire County District Attorney's Office said there was no evidence of foul play involved in the case.

A State Police spokesman said Miss Buchanan, a nine-year resident at the school, apparently left her residence building without supervision, and wandered off into the surrounding dense woods.

Meanwhile, a spokesman at the Wesson Memorial Hospital, Springfield, said a 16-year-old resident was in satisfactory condition after suffering a broken leg Saturday when he fell 18-feet from a second floor building.

There are no screens on any of the windows in the building despite the fact that the Belchertown Friends Association have been pressing for screens since last May when a resident fell from a second floor window in D building and suffered a broken pelvis.

Benjamin Ricci, president of the Friends Association, said "The two recent tragedies point out once again that there is a complete lack of staff and money" for the institution.

He said the State Dept. of Mental Health only responds to crisis as seen by the fact that screens were placed in D building when a resident fell out of one of the windows.

But the parents, he said, were told that screens could not be placed in G building since there was no money in the budget for that purpose.

He said the parents will continue to utilize the courts to insure that screens are now placed in G building. The parents filed a suit last February in U.S. District Court in Boston charging that the state has been negligent in the care of residents at the school.

Study Recommends Area Cold Centers

By IMELDA ROJAK

At a meeting held last Thursday night, a student committee studying the problem of Cold Self Care Treatment Centers on campus recommended that each of the residential areas have the option of establishing cold centers supplying medicines to students, bought at cost from the infirmary. These recommendations came in the form of a letter sent to the infirmary.

The Southwest and Sylvan cold care centers were closed recently when a Food and Drug Administration law was passed requiring drugs to be kept in "chill-proof" containers. The cost factor with these containers will also be a major consideration before any cold care centers are re-opened.

At Thursday's meeting, the question of whether medicines distributed by the centers should be charged for was given considerable attention.

Committee members agreed that if the cold care medicines were not sold at a minimal cost, the health fee would go up.

The possibility that cold care be sold at the Infirmary to be consistent with the other areas was controversial. The commuters at the meeting felt it would be unfair to charge money at the Infirmary for cold care medicine.

"If the people in Southwest and Sylvan should have the convenience of the cold care centers, why shouldn't Puffton have it?" asked subcommittee member N. Haridasan. "Why should we have to go all the way to the Infirmary to pay for it?"

"The Commuter Assembly should have the option of choosing cold care," said one woman.

But, "Why should the people in Brett, who live right next to the infirmary, get the medicine free, if the people in Southwest have to pay for it?" queried one man.

A subcommittee member added, "I see the cold care centers in the residential areas as extensions of the one in the Infirmary. If I'm in Southwest I should be able to get pills there. Everyone should share the cost."

"The collecting of money will entail a lot of problems," someone suggested. The question of who would supervise the drug distribution and collect the money was raised.

The proposal was compiled with the aid of a survey of the area governments. It will be submitted to the pharmacy committee which will consider the recommendations. The proposal reads:

"This subcommittee feels that each area should have the option of establishing a Cold Care Center. Supplies for the Center are to be sold by the Infirmary at cost, or as close to cost as possible, to the areas. At this time the committee doesn't see any specific restrictions that should be imposed.

Each area should submit guidelines for distribution, to the Infirmary for review and approval. The Health Services may impose necessary restrictions if the need arises.

We want the pharmacy committee of the Health Services to explore the possibilities of expanding package size and selling.

We suggest that the pharmacy committee explore the possibility of selling cold care medication at the Infirmary to be consistent with the areas."

Man Charged With Murder

KENNETT SQUARE, Pa. (AP)--Ancell Hamm, a 28-year-old gun collector, was charged with two counts of murder Monday in the slayings of two policemen last week.

Hamm's arrest came a day after a rifle was found in a wooded area two miles from this rural community near Philadelphia. State Police Commissioner Rocco Urella said the motive for the ambush killings may have been revenge. He said, "The rifle was the murder weapon and this morning we linked it to the Hamm family."

Authorities said one of the dead policemen, William Davis, 27, had participated in cases involving Hamm.

Twenty-five policemen wearing bullet-proof vests and armed with high-powered rifles, surrounded the Hamm home here shortly after 11 a.m.

Barefoot and in dungarees, Hamm was led from the house in handcuffs and later was arraigned on the two murder counts. Bail was set at $250,000. His brother, James, was taken into custody as a material witness.

Urella said another person may have been involved in the shooting, but he refused to elaborate.

Negotiations Enter 'Crucial Last Phase'

Presidential advisor Henry Kissinger as he boarded a plane Sunday to take him to Paris for further negotiations with the North Vietnamese.

PARIS (AP) — Henry A. Kissinger met for more than five hours Monday with North Vietnamese negotiators in a secluded villa near Paris to begin what may be the crucial last phase of the search for peace in Vietnam.

President Nixon's security adviser met Hanoi's chief negotiator, Le Duc Tho in a closely guarded two-story villa at Gif-Sur-Yvette, a suburban residential community 15 miles southwest of Paris.

The secret meeting opened at 10:30 a.m., less than 12 hours after Kissinger arrived from Washington and told newsmen that Nixon had instructed him to pursue the new session "as long as is useful."

Kissinger, Tho and their advisers lunched in the village, presumably together. They left the villa to return to their respective residences at 4 p.m.

American and North Vietnamese officials declined all comment on the talks, which are intended to clarify the peace agreement Kissinger and Tho drafted here last month.

Informed sources said Kissinger and Tho would resume their session Tuesday afternoon. This wil presumably give them time to confer during the morning with their respective allies in South Vietnam, the Saigon government and the Viet Cong, who are excluded from the secret talks.

Kissinger conferred after the meeting with Pham Dang Lam, head of the Saigon delegation to the peace talks.

The Hanoi spokesman, Nguyen Thanh Le, said there would be similar close contact between Tho and the Viet Cong chief delegate, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh.

Kissinger was accompanied to the secret meeting by his chief military aide, Gen. Alexander M. Haig, Jr., and by the deputy assistant secretary of State for Southeast Asian affairs, William H. Sullivan.

It was Kissinger's 21st secret session with the North Vietnamese since 1969, on the sidelines of the four-sided peace conference comprising the United States, Hanoi, Saigon and the Viet Cong.

Kissinger's secret contacts with Hanoi led to a breakthrough last Oct. 8, when Hanoi for the first time agreed to separate the military issues of a cease-fire and release of prisoners from the political issues of South Vietnam's future government.

The government of President Nguyen Van Thieu has denounced the draft agreement as a sellout, while the Viet Cong has been distinctly lukewarm about some of its provisions.

Despite these conflicting public postures, American officials remained hopeful that the agreement would be accepted by all parties concerned before the end of the year.

Kissinger told a Washington news conference Oct. 26 that peace was "at hand" and only six or seven "very concrete issues" needed to be clarified in a final negotiating session with the North Vietnamese.

White House officials said later that there may be a need for still further talks with the Saigon government and perhaps with Hanoi.

Commission To Investigate La. Turmoil

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP)–Louisiana Atty. Gen. William Guste appointed a 12-member commission Monday to investigate the turmoil at Southern University that led to the deaths of two students.

Among those appointed to the panel were Revius Ortique, a black New Orleans attorney and former member of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest, and Turner Catledge, retired executive editor of the New York Times and a New Orleans resident.

Guste also named three other black officials and two students from Southern's New Orleans campus to the Commission of Inquiry.

Guste told a news conference the commission will initiate its investigation into last Thursday's violence at the University, the largest black college in the nation, beginning Nov. 27.

Two 20-year-old students, Denver A. Smith of New Roads, La., and Leonard D. Brown of Gilbert, La., were killed as sheriff's deputies and state police tried to break up a domonstration in front of the administration building. Autopsies showed they died of buckshot wounds in the head and shoulders.

The attorney general said the panel would meet in private, like a grand jury, because the evidence obtained may lead to criminal charges. He said he will use his office's subpoena powers and the witnesses will be under oath.

Blacks named to the commission, in addition to Ortique, were Judge Israel Augustine of New Orleans and Sidney Cates, former assistant superintendent of the New Orleans Police Department.

Others on the panel are President F. Jay Taylor of Louisiana Tech University, Dean Ray Blanco of the University of Southwestern Louisiana, Sheriff Bailey Grant of Ouachita Parish, Shreveport civic leader Jack Dykes and state Sen. Robert Jones of Lake Charles.

Guste said the two SUNO students would be named later.

Earlier, Guste announced he had appointed two lawyers–one white and one black–to head the inquiry.

About 200 state troopers patrolled the nearly deserted campus, closed after the shooting and not scheduled to reopen until after the Thanksgiving holiday. The last of 700 National Guardsmen who had been on duty left Sunday.

Gov. Edwin Edwards said last week that a law officer could mistakenly have fired buckshot instead of a tear gas cannister. Authorities said after the shooting that the police and deputies fired only tear gas. But East Baton Rouge Parish Sheriff Al Amiss acknowledged Sunday that the deaths may have been the result of a mistake.

Guste said at a news conference that he had named Kendell Vic, 42, a white, and Henry Julien Jr., 24, a black, to head the investigation.

Westwood Contemplates Future Of Dem. Party

WASHINGTON (AP) - The chairman of the Democratic National Committee opened the door Monday for her possible resignation but said she would resist efforts to roll back some party reforms.

Jean Westwood, who has served as party chief since Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern backed her for the post in July, said in a statement that her own future "is subordinate to considerations about the future of the party."

"I have until Dec. 9 to decide how my own future as chairman of the Democratic National Committee fits into these considerations," she said.

Mrs. Westwood, 48, has been under attack in recent days by some Democratic governors, officials of the AFL–CIO and others in the party who say she should step down in the wake of McGovern's defeat.

Her opponents within the party have said she is too closely associated with McGovern and party reforms initiated by the South Dakota senator to remain effective as party chairman.

Mrs Westwood's statement was issued amid speculation about possible successors as party chairman. It centered Monday on George Mitchell, 39, national committeeman from Maine and director of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie's campaign for presidential nomination.

Adm. Zumwalt Denies Navy Permissiveness

WASHINGTON (AP)–Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr., chief of naval operations, had quick and short answer Monday for a special House subcommittee's inquiry whether racial incidents on two aircraft carriers were sparked by permissiveness in the Navy.

"There is absolutely none," Zumwalt said.

The admiral told newsmen outside a closed-door session of the special House Armed Services investigating subcommittee that "it is a very fair group of congressman."

He said he had no problem with the opening statement of Chairman Floyd V. Hicks, D-Wash., that the subcommittee's aim is to determine if the racial incidents reflect a breakdown of Navy discipline as a result of permissiveness, because, he said, there is no permissiveness.

"The Navy will maintain order and discipline," Zumwalt said.

At the same time, he said, it will carry out Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird's policy of equal opportunity in the services without regard to race.

Zumwalt was asked if the two racial incidents aboard the aircraft carriers Constellation and Kitty Hawk might have been linked to an alleged permissiveness by senior Navy brass disgruntled by his reforms.

"I certainly would not think the admirals we have in the Navy would do anything like that," Zumwalt replied.

Hicks said his three-man subcommittee would fly to San Diego after an afternoon session Monday, but said he did not know what it would do when it got there.

Hicks said the three congressmen planned to work out an agenda during the five-hour flight to California.

The chairman said in an opening statement released publicly that his subcommittee's objectives are first, to gather facts on the two carrier incidents and second, "determine whether these incidents are symptomatic of a general decline in the traditionally high standard of conduct of U.S. Navy personnel."

The most recent incident being investigated by the sub-committee is the refusal of 123 sailors to return to the aircraft carrier Constellation at San Diego after complaining of racial discrimination.

"Captain's Mast" punishment, including extra duty and reduction of rank, has been meted out to 97 of the men. Three have been released from the Navy.

The subcommittee also is investigating a racial fight aboard the carrier Kitty Hawk off Vietnam Oct. 13 that the Navy says involved about 100 sailors and injured 46.

Nixon's Plans Include Major Shuffle Of Cabinet

THURMONT, Md. (AP) - Plunging deeper into the planning of a second-term shakeup, President Nixon signalled Monday a major shuffle of cabinet members before Inauguration Day.

As he began the second week of an extended stay at his Camp David retreat, Nixon paused in a series of mountain-top meetings with administration officials to receive reports from his Vietnam negotiator, Henry Kissinger.

The White House refused to discuss the content of Kissinger's new round of talks with the North Vietnamese in Paris, but said a second session would be held Tuesday.

Nixon spent the bulk of the day conferring on reorganization plans.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the President had not decided the makeup of his second-term cabinet, but said Nixon was holding the series of meetings to determine the personal wishes of each member.

Some Cabinet officials, Ziegler said, have "expressed the desire to take on different responsibilities" in government.

At least two of the cabinet level officials who conferred with Nixon Monday are reported interested in other government posts. They are Elliot Richardson, now secretary of Health Education and Welfare, mentioned as a possible secretary of State; and Cost of Living Council director Donald Rumsfeld, reportedly being considered as a successor to Housing Secretary George Romney.

Optimism Surrounds SALT II

GENEVA (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union launch SALT II on Tuesday and both seem optimistic that they will achieve a permanent curb on offensive nuclear weapons.

SALT stands for strategic arms limitations talks. Phase I of the talks opened Nov. 17, 1969 in Helsinki, Finland, and wound up last May while President Nixon was visiting Moscow.

Deputy Foreign Minister Vladimir Semenov, head of the Soviet delegation, arrived Monday for Phase II and told newsmen he is under instructions to do the utmost to make SALT II a success.

"Of course, we proceed from the premise that the American side will act in the same constructive and businesslike manner," he said.

The U.S. chief negotiator, Gerard C. Smith, struck an even more confident note when he flew into Geneva Friday. He said he was hopeful that the talks would come to a successful conclusion well before the 1977 deadline.

The optimistic tone contrasted with expert assessments forecasting tedious bilateral bargaining in trying to draft a comprehensive treaty limiting offensive nuclear weapons. These are now frozen for five years under an interim agreement signed by Nixon in Moscow last May along with a lasting curb on antiballistic missiles - ABMs.

The opening round of SALT II, likely to last until shortly before Christmas, is to lay the groundwork for the strategic talks that could last for the duration of the interim accord. Swiss authorities have been asked that they should prepare to host the delegations - numbering about 30 on each side - for a maximum of five years.

Priority in the initial discussions here is officially to go to the establishment of a Standing Consultative Commission provided for under the permanent treaty limiting the ABMs. The body is to consider the treaty's operations on a regular basis, including questions of compliance, and would also accept complaints.

Smith expects it will come into being sometime next year but has made plain there is no urgency about it. The comment, at a news conference, indicated that both sides thus far are satisfied with the existing machinery, with verification relying exclusively on national means, chiefly satellites.

While there are apparently no problems in ensuring compliance with the ABMs curbs - limiting each side to 200 ABMs located around the national capitals and around offensive missile complexes - verification is believed to prompt arduous discussions in SALT II.

Complex questions, for example, could be involved in limiting MIRVs, multiple warheads, that are difficult to monitor by satellite inspection. This could produce an issue that has long stalled the U.N. disarmament talks where the United States continues to insist on some kind of on-site inspection - something which the Soviet Union has made plain it will never accept.

Officials have emphasized that the same strict secrecy that has been rigidly followed in the 2-1/2 year SALT I negotiations also will be observed in Geneva.

Brandt Ready To Bargain

BONN (AP)–Chancellor Willy Brandt's triumphant Social Democrats prepared Monday for hard bargaining with their junior partners in the ruling coalition as the opposition Christian Democrats took stock of their crushing election defeat.

Chief government spokesman Conrad Ahlers announced that Brandt will meet Free Democrat leader Walter Scheel this week on forming a new government as soon as possible.

Brandt and Scheel are fully agreed on continuing the East-West reconciliation policies for which the Nobel Prize-winning chancellor won a resounding mandate in Sunday's election.

But observers said difficult negotiations on some domestic issues may lie ahead for the two parties before they can form a new government program.

The Free Democrats are moderately right wing and favor free enterprise without state interference.

Ahlers told a news conference that the newly elected Bundestag, the lower house of parliament, will meet Dec. 14 and formally elect Brandt chancellor the next day.

The Social Democrat leadership met to lay down guidelines for its negotiators in a joint commission which will soon work out details of a governing compromise.

Brandt's party appeared in a strong bargaining position as it received 45.9 per cent of the vote to 8.4 per cent for the Free Democrats.

But the Free Democrats could insist on a bigger say because their share of the coalition's Bundestag seats is bigger than before. They will occupy 42 of the 496 seats against 230 for the Christian Democrats. The Free Democrats had 30 seats after the 1969 election.

Hard Drugs Fading From Campuses...

Heroin has virtually disappeared and the popularity of most other hard drugs is fading rapidly this year on college campuses in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

But the sale and use of soft drugs - marijuana, hashish and pills - is common, casual and virtually institutionalized, with large numbers of students turning on and school authorities turning the other way.

And despite the slayings of an upstate coed and a student and a former student at New York University in drug-related incidents this month, there appears to be no trend toward violence on the tristate college drug scene, though drug-related campus thefts are up sharply.

These are the major conclusions drawn from interviews last week with hundreds of drug dealers, users, counselors, school officials, security personnel and policemen by campus correspondents of The New York Times at 26 colleges and universities in the tristate area.

The survey, supplemented by the correspondents' own observations of drug-related activities on their campuses, also pointed up these specific indications:

Soft-drug sellers are numerous, and almost all are male students who deal on a small scale among friends, more to pay for their own drugs than to make big profits. Many share their own supplies, give credit and free samples and see themselves as providers of a popular service with little risk or harassment.

Most colleges are virtual sanctuaries for soft-drug users. Despite stern antidrug policies and pronouncements, school officials are reluctant to call in the police and have adopted "motherly" attitudes toward soft-drug use, so pills are popped and marijuana is smoked openly in dormitories and lounges.

The campus market for heroin has virtually disappeared, and the demand for hallucinogenic drugs, such as LSD and mescaline, has dropped sharply at most schools, while "speed" and other amphetamines are also in declining favor. Bad experiences with these substances in high school was one reason for this trend.

The only hard drug still in moderate supply and demand is cocaine. It is generally sniffed, and is considered psychologically rather than physically addictive.

The most popular drugs on campus are marijuana, hashish and various barbiturates and depressant pills, particularly a prescriptive "downer" known as Quaalude, one of a group of hypnotic muscle relaxants called "sopers."

At a few schools, all drugs are in short supply, prices are higher than ever and there appears to be a spreading attitude that drugs are passe. Many students, in fact, are turning to beer, wine and liquor and there is increasing concern among college officials over student drinking.

Many schools have or are planning drug-counseling services, some with around-the-clock "crisis" hot lines. Most refer drug users to professional services and do not attempt long-term treatment. Others stress alternatives, such as yoga and other transcendental meditation.

Drugs Seen Declining

On campuses across the tristate area, with some exceptions, there is a general sense that drug problems, while still present, are diminishing.

This sense is reflected in the trend away from hard drugs, the rarity of drug-related violence, the absence of any sign of organized-crime involvement and the increasingly relaxed attitudes of school administrators. It is also suggested by the sort of low-key trafficking that a Yale senior described this way:

"I just deal a small quantity of drugs, mostly grass, but a little coke and speed, just enough to get my friends off.

"As long as my friends still want to get high, I guess I'll keep dealing. There's a little bit of money in it, but I do it mainly just to help out my friends. That's a good feeling."

At C. W. Post College at Greenvale, L.I., a campus security official, expressing a widely held view, said: "A dealer in pot or hashish or pills could be just about anybody. It is so widespread that there is apparently no pattern or distinctive profile of this type of dealer."

He added: "People don't even think it's dealing. The current thinking in the student culture indicates that the laws on drugs are wrong and that they (dealers) are simply providing a service to their fellow students."

Dorm Smokers Common

At Columbia University, sources said there were hundreds of soft-drug dealers operating on a small scale, buying a pound of marijuana and breaking it down into ounces to sell to friends. Most of these dealers tend to be serious about their studies and say they spend only as much time selling drugs as they have to for financial reasons.

If soft-drug dealers are relaxed about their trade, users at many campuses are even more relaxed. In the lounge at the Finley student center on the south campus of City College, students roll and smoke marijuana cigarettes openly.

At many schools, dormitory marijuana smoking is a nightly affair. "When you live in the dormitory, you feel safe - you even forget that grass is illegal," said a New York University student.

A student at Skidmore College at Saratoga Springs described his school as "vulnerable," and explained:

"People used to be really cautious, but now they smoke in the open. This school is cool because there haven't been any busts. The dean called me in once about drugs. They advised me to call my parents. The school is very image-conscious."

Image-conscious or not, administrators at many schools are taking a soft line on soft drugs.

Guy V. Martin, the dean of students at Colgate University in Hamilton, N.Y., said the use of marijuana among students was too common to warrant more than cursory control efforts.

"We try to deal with drug users educationally," he said. "The only time we call dealers into this office is when we hear about unusually large shipments of drugs or about students who are in very bad physical or mental shape becuse of their consumption of drugs."

The University of Connecticut at Storrs has a tough official policy against drugs, as have many schools. But, also typically, users and dealers in soft drugs call the school's working attitude "motherly."

Head and assistant residents at University of Connecticut dormitories are told privately not to bother students who smoke marijuana, and to notify the Office of Student Affairs - not the police - about sellers.

One assistant resident recently told the students on his floor that they could do anything they wanted, including smoking marijuana, as long as they kept the noise down. "I don't bust people," he said. "I'm not a cop."

A major reason for the increasingly relaxed attitudes of school officials is the virtual absence of hard drugs on campus and the problems that stem from them. Many correspondents reported no evidence of heroin use at all and quoted students as regarding hard drugs as an irrational excess of the nineteen-sixties.

Lynn Weikert, director of a Barnard College dormitory on West 116th Street, suggested the "age of experimentation" with hard drugs was over. She noted that many students agreed that there was little or no evidence of heroin use on campus this year.

An Unwelcome Status

At C. W. Post College, where three drug-related deaths were reported last year, security officials said a few hard-drug pushers were still trying to operate. They were described as nonstudents or former students who were easy to spot. The security officials also said that many students were inclined nowadays to provide tips on hard-drug pushers, another sign of their unwelcome status.

At St. Peter's College in Jersey City, an official said that "the students themselves made these people (hard-drug pushers) outcasts. The students realized they were kind of being used."

The absence or near-absence of hard drugs is viewed by most school officials and students as a main reason for the relative lack of violence in campus drug dealings.

Concern over such violence mounted this month after the slayings of three persons believed to have been campus drug dealers.

On Nov. 1, a 22-year-old New York University senior and a 24-year-old former student were found shot to death in their apartment near the University Heights campus in the Bronx. The police found cocaine in the apartment and theorized that they had been slain in a dispute over a transaction.

Two days later, a 20-year-old coed at Tompkins Cortland Community College at Dryden, N.Y., was shot to death when four men entered her apartment and seized 10 pounds of marijuana. Six young men have since been arrested in the slaying.

Despite these murders, violent drug-related incidents are not believed to be commonplace on tristate area campuses, though shakedowns of dealers for drugs or money are increasing and thefts of drugs of valuables to buy them are rising sharply.

At the State University of New York at Binghamton, drugs were stolen recently from several students; one robbery was at knifepoint, in the only such incident of its kind there this year.

Two cases of threatened violence have been reported at Colgate this year, both involving threats against dealers by drug thieves. And while violence in drug incidents is very rare at C. W. Post, the college security director, Eugene O'Brien, was beaten three weeks ago by a dormitory resident during a routing check for drugs.

The image of the "friendly campus dealer" is said to be one factor in the lack of violence. As a Hobart marijuana seller put it: "Everybody knows who they're dealing with. He's either someone you know personally or someone recommended by a friend, so you don't have to worry about getting ripped off."

"Moo," a recently retired dealer at Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., put it another way: "No one is going to rip off anyone who they have to see in class three times a week and who they meet at meals."

While violence is rare, thefts are not. There have been numerous thefts at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J., this year. Dormitories are the favorite targets on most campuses.

At Ithaca College and at Cornell University, there have been numerous reports of drug thefts by non-students posing as narcotics agents.

'Tip of Iceberg'

Bruce H. Marinet, a senior investigator for the State Police at Ithaca, said the reports of dealer-robberies are "only the tip of the iceberg."

"Most of these holdups are never reported to us," he said, adding: "Look at it this way. Who's going to call the police and report the theft of 10 pounds of marijuana?" Mr. Martinet said that only two such incidents have reached the Tompkins County courts in the last three years.

With reported campus violence at an ebb, the police in college communities are concentrating their efforts on hard drugs off-campus. There are few indications, other than recurrent rumors, of undercover agents at work on campuses.

Detective Charles Mittelstaedt of the Poughkeepsie police said: "We are not stressing the investigation of people selling grass and nonheavy drugs. They are not presenting us with the problems that the town fellows and addicts are. The type of dealers and pushers differ greatly between campus and town and those on campus prefer to remain there where there is greater personal safety."

It is much the same story in the city. Lieut. James Trainor of the 46th Precinct Narcotics Squad, which covers Fordham University in the Bronx, said: "It's not our cup of tea to come on campus and arrest a few students smoking marijuana."

Even in Geneva, N.Y., where a narcotics agent dubbed "Tommy the Traveler" became notorious as an agent-provocateur on the Hobart campus last year, the police have relaxed somewhat.

Police Chief Herman Garrow, in an interview, said the best long-term answer to drugs was education, and added that his department has sponsored over 200 lectures and distributed more than 25,000 pieces of anti-drug literature in the last few years.

Shortages Are Reported

While drug supplies have been relatively constant at most schools surveyed, shortages of some drugs, particularly marijuana were reported on a half-dozen campuses.

"Lots of people go up to New York City to buy either marijuana or hash, which are easily the most popular drugs," said one Princeton undergraduate. But, he added: "The supply of pot in the city has shrunk in the last few years and that has cut the amount that circulates on campus."

The declining supply of marijuana at Wesleyan in Connecticut has doubled the price to $20 an ounce since last year, according to users and dealers.

LSD, mescaline and hashish "no longer constitute a profitable market" at the University of Connecticut, according to a dealer. And another dealer said speed was available but the demand was down.

Drug prices on most campuses vary somewhat, depending on availability, demand and quality. Marijuana, for example, can be bought for as little as $15 an ounce and as much as $50. The price of hashish ranges from $80 to $110 an ounce. LSD may be had for $1 to $3 a tab and speed for up to $2 a tab. Cocaine by the "spoon" - actually about a quarter of a teaspoon - goes for $20 to $40.

At Yale, the demand for all drugs, including marijuana, has fallen off sharply. Many dealers have gone out of business and kegs of beer are more apt to be found at parties.

"I don't think we've got a drug problem here," said Bob Wilhelm, the master at one of Yale's 12 residential colleges. "I'm more concerned now about the liquor problem. I think it's fairly easy to become unattached to grass or hash, but it's quite a bit harder with liquor because of the constant availability."

Quaalude Use Gains

At a number of colleges, one of the most popular drugs this year is Quaalude, the brand name of a depressant sold at drugstores with a physician's prescription. A recent shipment of 20,000 Quaalude white pills reached Vassar and, within three weeks, was reported to be dwindling. Several students needed medical attention in the days following the shipment's arrival, including one who attempted to commit suicide.

The pills, selling from 35 cents to a dollar each, are said to slow the heart's beating and create a psychological dependency. Laboratory tests have indicated that the use of the drug by pregnant women can cause birth defects. Users say the drugs cause drowsiness and a tingling sensation in the extremities.

Quaaludes and other depressant pills known as "sopers" are said to be a rage on a number of campuses with popularity spreading, particularly among white, middle-class students and veterans of the war in Vietnam, according to drug counselors.

The popularity of Quaaludes is indicated by sources at Long Island University's Brooklyn Center, who say that as much as 5,000 pills a day are sold in the Student Union Building.

A Vassar psychiatrist, Dr. Ernest Shaw, recently wrote an article for the school newspaper warning of the dangerous effects and potency of Quaaludes. After reading it, one user said: "Tell Dr. Ernie his comments were fair, but Quaaludes are still fun."

Funding a Problem

The comment indicates only one of the numerous difficulties that campus drug counselors are confronting. Another is money. A counseling service at Syracuse University received $30,000 from the state's Narcotic Addiction Control Commission this year, but N.Y.U.'s downtown campus counseling service, New Morning, lost its funding.

Last year, a drug center called Alternative was opened and financed by the student government at Hunter College, but the center was closed last spring after a lawyer informed the director that his organization's files could be subpoenaed if law enforcement agencies were so inclined.

Often, drug counselors and school administrators talk in vague terms about drug problems, and it is clear that any information gap exists on many campuses. Mr. Martin, the dean of students at Colgate, for example, readily acknowledges that most of his information about drug traffic on campus comes from hearsay or from students concerned about other students.

Take It Or Leave It

The Commuter Assembly has a budget of about $17,000, which it is having a hard time finding ways to spend at this time. The way the financial situation is on this campus now, this is a wasteful situation.

This isn't to say that the commuters aren't entitled to the funds. They get them on a per capita basis just like any area government. But the commuter situation is different. There aren't as many ways for them to spend their money as there are for on campus area governments.

The Commuters Assembly should find a way to use this money. If they can't, there are a few good uses that it can be put to. For instance, it can be donated to a charity, such as the Belchertown Friends Association, or it could be given to the Belchertown parents to aid their struggle to improve conditions at the school. Both are worthy causes, and we doubt that most commuters would object.

If it isn't given to a good outside cause, how about giving it back to the Student Activities Tax Fund? It would then be used to help keep student taxes down, or it could be given to another student group to aid them.

As was previously stated, the money belongs first to commuters, and as such they should be given a chance to spend it. But if not enough commuters are interested in having a voice in the spending of the funds, they should be used for another cause. There certainly are enough things that need help both on and off campus.

Be A Citizen, Not Just A Voter

The problems of the elderly in our society are enormous. They face increased health bills and greater threats to their security coupled with a shrinking income. Government programs to aid the elderly have often proven ineffective. Social Security does not provide a senior citizen with the necessities for a meaningful life even when it supplements other income. Housing developments have often turned into instant slums. They have often been built in bad locations, cost too much, and been poorly built.

The Amherst Redevelopment Authority has produced a carefully planned program for the redevelopment of parts of the downtown area. This plan, known as The Boltwood Walk Plan, will provide some essential services for the senior citizens of Amherst. It will contain housing and health services and be within walking distance of downtown stores.

The area to be redeveloped is the block behind North Pleasant and Main Streets. That's the block behind Quicksilver. Most of the buildings on North Pleasant and Main Streets will not be taken by the Redevelopment Authority. Some buildings on Main St. will be removed, however. When the project is complete it will benefit all age groups, not just the elderly. Housing for moderate and middle income people will be built. Community facilities have be developed. Additional meeting rooms and space for organizations like the Boys' Club will be provided. More space for commercial establishments will be created. In fact about 15,975 sq. ft. of space will be provided for stores and other businesses.

The advantages of this program are numerous. It cuts across "economic and social lines" to supply housing to the aged. The housing is within walking distance of stores, community facilities, and health care. The new community facilities will provide an obvious benefit to the town. New housing for middle and moderate income groups is necessary in a town like Amherst. Rents are expensive here and hit the low and moderate income groups more than anyone else. New commercial facilities will revitalize the downtown area. Shoppers will return to Amherst Center. Additional parking space will also be provided. The development of this area in a single program will prevent the patchwork development that has occurred in many other communities.

Traffic and parking problems may be increased by this plan. Parking for residents of the area will be provided. Second cars and visitors cars will have to be parked in public parking areas, however. Parking for shoppers in metered lots will be increased from 70 to about 125. The planners hope to avoid traffic problems in the residential area by creating a system of one way streets. Traffic around the redeveloped area will increase. New shoppers and the new residents of the area are bound to increase the traffic congestion in the Center.

The future of the Boltwood Walk Plan will be decided next Monday in a special election. A special Town Meeting passed provisions for the start of the project. The project has been challenged and will appear on a referendum next Monday, Nov. 27. The questions being voted on provide money and land for the project. The polls will be open from eight to twelve. A vote for the project would be a wise vote.

Many people feel that students should not be allowed to vote in the towns where they go to school They say that students are not interested in town affairs. Rep. Louis Morini is attempting to disenfranchise students from their college towns. If students don't vote in this special election we will substantiate the claim that we do not care about Amherst. The Town Clerk didn't think that The Boltwood Walk Plan effected us very much. We turned out in large numbers for the national elections. Vote in this election and prove that we care what happens to Amherst. We vote here, we might as well be citizens here.

Blasts From The Past

With all the talk going on about required courses, everybody seems to have a different opinion as to what course the university should take. Therefore, I took it upon myself to travel back into time and ask various famous Americans what they think about the problem. The first person I chose to interview was our sixteenth president, Abraham Lincoln.

Fishman: "Mr. Lincoln, could you give me a brief history of the theory behind having required courses?"

Lincoln: "Four score and seven years ago, our forefathers..."

Fishman: "Excuse me Mr. Lincoln. I don't think you understood my question. Let me ask you another one instead. Do you think the problem concerning required courses will cause a split between the students and the faculty?"

Lincoln: "A house divided between itself could not stand."

Fishman: "Uh, well thank you Mr. Lincoln. Its' been a pleasure talking to you."

I then ventured further back in history to the Pennsylvania home of Benjamin Franklin, where I met with the following response.

Fishman: "Mr. Franklin? Mr. Franklin?!"

Franklin: "Yes, what do you want?"

Fishman: "Well, I want to ask you how you feel about required courses at the University of Mass."

Franklin: "I have to go to the bathroom. Could you come back later?"

Fishman: "I'm afraid that's impossible. You see, I'm traveling in time."

Franklin: "Go fly a kite!"

This having been an apparently fruitless effort, I then traveled to the Virginia plantation of George Washington, where I was able to ask him a few questions.

Fishman: "Mr. Washington, the idea of required course has been debated for some time. I'd like to ask your opinion on the proposed solution that the number of required courses be cut down."

G.W.: "Cut down!! I cannot tell a lie. I did it with my little hatchet."

Fishman: "I was referring to the number of required courses at UMass in Amherst."

G.W.: "I'm sorry, I don't believe in getting involved in the policies of foreign governments. Where is this Amherst, anyhow?"

Fishman: "Massachusetts."

G.W.: "Oh! Well, they're having some greater problems up there with the Tea Tax right now. I don't think they can be bothered.

Fishman: "Yes. Well, thank you Mr. Washington."

Exhausted from traveling so much in one day, I returned to the present. It was then I realized that someone can't be asked to judge on something that is beyond that person's time, and that old ideas must step aside in order to make way for new ones. Don't you agree, faculty members?

Taste Buds On A Spree

Students from many foreign countries are banding together to take American taste buds on a tasting spree of exotic flavors from seven different countries around the world-Armenia, China, Denmark, India, Nigeria, Peru and Venezuela.

And Scandinavia lends the term "Smorgasbord" to describe the presentation of the feast, a super buffet of a variety of foods.

For a quick run down on some of the dishes on the menu: the Armenians offer us Doma, which is vegetables- cabbages, tomatoes or peppers may be used-stuffed with rice and lamb.

The Chinese have their famous fried rice and egg rolls.

What's cooking in the Danish kitchen?-uncooked herrings in a delicious sauce, exclusively Scandinavian, and Frikadeller, a meat ball preparation with beef, veal, pork, milk, mushrooms and spices.

The cooks of India offer us dishes which are favorites dating back to the Moghuls-the dynasty that left the world the Taj Mahal-Pulao, made with rice and lamb and delicately spiced, and chicken curry which is as Indian as the Taj Mahal.

Nigeria has fried plantains (cousins of the bananas) and Moin moin, beans ground with other ingredients and traditionally cooked wrapped in leaves.

Peru, the world's largest producer of fish, accordingly offers us Seviche, a dish of fishes cut in small pieces, cooked in lemon juice and onions.

Venezuela lists a chicken salad with green beans and asparagus, best eaten cold.

And to top off the feast we can look forward to some exquisite, mouth-watering Danish and Armenian pastry.

The menu given to me says nothing about exotic drinks such as, perhaps, Tahitian coconut milk or Japanese Sake. Perhaps everyone will have to bring his own flask of California wine.

Such a collection of exotic dishes under one roof is, of course, rare and should offer something to tickle the most fastidious palates.

The Smorgasbord will be held December 2nd at 5:30 p.m. The place will be announced later.

Veil Of Paranoia

Beginning with this semester, a dream of unity in Southwest became reality with the creation of a black corridor in John Adams. This floor was to be an alternative to the negative, anti-black atmosphere found in the majority of residence halls. Yet, since its inception, the black corridor has been the target of malicious, demigrating attacks, constituting a campaign of harassment, verbal sniping and slander. Around the campus, it quickly became common rumor that the 11th floor was a drug center, refuge for non-students, and focal point of criminal activity.

As the semester progressed, the tale circulated that the campus police had the floor under surveillance, even to the extent that an informer was in residence. At this point, the veil of paranoia settled upon the floor-members. People were afraid to talk, act or live naturally, for all were consciously aware of the danger, implicit or otherwise, that was continually present. A confrontation was expected and people were fully aware of the seriousness of the situation. Our enclave of united black energy, thought, and culture was being threatened. At the present time, this threat still exists, yet is superceded by the horror of the situation at Southern U.

It is our feeling on the black corridor that the university at large, campus police and administration be set straight at this time, on the sensitive affairs with which we have to deal.

Community Sends Letters

Dear Senator Brooke:

I am writing to you at the specific instructions of a group of Black faculty and students of Smith, Hampshire, Mt. Holyoke, Amherst Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

We are sure that you share our dismay and anger at the murders of two of our Brothers at Southern University last week. As Black faculty and students, we are doubly concerned that this tragic event be fully investigated by some impartial agency, possibly a committee of the Congress.

As a Black man and a major figure in the Republican party, your voice will be a most powerful one in raising this call. We think that it is of particular importance that this call be raised, and that you should be the one to do so, at this time. A rigorous and careful investigation of the incident, originating from the Republican Party and/or the Administration, will make it clear to local law-enforcement agencies that the so-called "conservative mandate" of the recent election is not a signal for the use of unrestrained and lethal violence against unarmed members of minority and Black communities.

It is for this reason, more than any other, that we urge you to publicly call for such an investigation.

With every good wish for your continued success,

Sincerely,
The five-college Black community

Dear Senator Kennedy:

I am writing to you upon the specific instructions of the organization of Black faculty and students of Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire, and Amherst Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts.

We feel certain that you share outrage and anger at the murders of two of our Brothers at Southern University last week. We know that you feel, with us, that the unrestrained use of lethal violence against unarmed students can be neither justified nor excused.

We, therefore, urge you to call for publicly, and fight for, a full and complete investigation into the circumstances surrounding these two deaths. We are certain that your voice will be a most powerful and affective one nationally.

We are convinced that such motion must come from the Federal Government and the highest levels of the Congress quickly and decisively. If such a rigorous investigation does not occur, we feel that there are elements in local government and law enforcement who will interpret its absence as a clear mandate from the Administration and Congress that the use of unrestrained force and violence against Black and minority people has once more become fashionable.

We urge you, therefore, to condemn the killings and call for a full, complete, and impartial investigation.

With every good wish for your continued success,

The five-college Black community

From Third World Communication Comm.

The visible expressions of our sorrow, the tears that dampen our weeping faces and the rumbling movement of our internal spirit and soul, are shared with you, in this disastrous tragedy. Concerns and involvement from the Black and Third World population at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, and surrounding community areas, are shared with you, the students, families, and communities, of Southern University. We are receptive and willing to open direct means of communications with committees and organizations, in order to distribute facts and to convey information concerning the student movements and struggle to other Black Student college organizations and community organizations.

At present we are having meetings and discussions forming groups that will work with various committees that are concerned with issues such as: 1) Disarming campus police, 2) Legal and defense funds for Brothers and Sisters at Southern University College clearinghouse, for the placement of ex-spelled students (from various colleges where campus movements have displaced students) and 4) Setting up communication networks.

It is our feeling that these similar attacks on college students and communities, are not accidental. We charge that they are all a part of a National and International world conspiracy to kill and eliminate Black and Third World Liberation Movements. These actions must come to an immediate halt! This worldwide genocide must stop now!

With this incident, let us not only react to its effects, but let this occurrence, spark the fuel in us, that will continue the flames of a mighty fire. This fire must be the insurance that will prevent, protect, and produce, in the struggle for Liberation, positive gains, and mass involvement in the battle for freedom and life.

Power, Protection and Victory, are our hopes, may the student body, involve faculty, and total community of Southern University share this letter of concern. For the struggle there, is with us everywhere. It's effects are felt, for it is an extention that reminds us, of the work that we all have to do.

Power To Create A Victory

COMMITTEE ANNOUNCES PLAN TO MOBILIZE BLACK EDUCATION COMMUNITY

A Committee of Black faculty and students has been formed to organize support for the students of Southern University who are currently involved in a struggle with University and State officials.

Chaired by Brother Max Roach of the Institute of Pan-African Culture, the Committee will undertake three tasks:

1. Mobilization of all Black Studies Departments and Programs, and predominantly Black schools, in an attempt to provide bond money and legal assistance to Brothers and Sisters arrested at Southern University.

2. To mobilize the educational resources of the Black community to ensure that any students expelled from Southern University will have the opportunity to complete their education.

3. To organize some tangible expression of sympathy and support for the parents and families of the slain students.

"There is no reason," said Professor Roach, "why the Black educational community can not do this. Whenever something like this happens, the people involved, feel very isolated and vulnerable. This should not be. I believe we can set up a machinery that will correct this situation and which can be activated to deal with future situations of this kind, as they develop.

Involvement Sought On Northern Campuses

For white students on a northern campus, the murder of two black students, may have little or no effect on their lives. The connections between murder, systematic genocide and repression are clear-cut for black people confronted daily with these threats. To some it may still seem that white students and workers can afford the luxury of keeping aloof and removed from the struggle. But though the march of supression towards whites may be more subtle, less blantantly presented, it exists and is growing as the power structure moves to consolidate. There are many white members of our society already effected by this move--not just the four dead at Kent State but other students beat up and imprisoned for fighting for their rights, people made unemployed by Nixon's harsh economic policies, and people barely surviving on welfare payments.

Less obviously but just as completely, our educational institutions, in which we participate, maintain control of our lives and insure our silence. We confront this control daily as we are disgusted over university requirements and the dilemma of what to study since it is determined by the flux of the economy and the job market. Our choices are not our own. Our education does not belong to us, because we are not taking control of it. At Southern University, black students took control and were shot. More important the black leaders were removed and the university, the matrix of free thought, expression and initiation, is closed down.

It becomes more apparent everyday that it is not in the self-interest of white people in this country to stand by until Nixon moves directly on them. Racism is a powerful tool encouraged and exploited by the power structure in this country, dividing the people--keeping them angry and resentful of one another so that they will not attack the economic and political system. Recall how outraged the politicians were about "welfare abuse"--who tries to excite the people over the abuses of tax exemption for such fat monopolies as I.T.T. and General Motors? Where are the real abuses?

All people involved with any attempts to create a more humane society, must be aware of the importance of dealing with racism in order to effect social change. The brutal murders at S.U. can assure us that the white power structure recognizes that importance and is dealing with it.

As the Nixon-Agnew clique acts toward ending the so-called "era of permissiveness" by destroying the constitutional rights all of us, both black and white, chicano and puerto rican, women and young people will suffer. We are all connected in this struggle. There is a definite place for white people in the fight against racism and genocide. While Third World people struggle for liberation and survival, it is important for white people to be actively combating the racism in our communities, and social institutions. We need a United Front.

We feel that Monday's rally was a development in this direction. There were over 200 participants, many of whom were white: there were students, professors, members of the community, and representatives from various organizations such as VVAW, Valley Women's Center, Radical Studies Program, NAM, and Young Worker's Liberation League. There was a positive energy at that rally and a sense of collective committment to struggle; both essential to the building of a people's movement. Out of a sense of despair and grief over the blatant statement of "law and order" without regard to human rights and dignity we developed a positive statement and a number of concrete actions.

Mass Media & Black Students

FROM A BLACK STUDENTS POINT OF VIEW
By MICHAEL LEWIS

To show the clear stance of racism confronting Black and all the Third World Community here at the University of Massachusetts. I would like to bring to the attention of the campus community that today, Monday, the 20th of November, Black students had to march into the office, of the Daily Collegian to demand appropriate space for the purpose of informing the masses here of the racist attitudes confronting students of the THIRD WORLD, emphasizing particularly the outright murder of two Black Brothers at Southern University. When we confronted the staff of the Collegian, we were told that three pages would almost be impossible to receive. After the buck of responsibility had been passed, we were finally allowed appropriate space for our views. It was clearly shown that the Collegian in the tradition of the quote, "MANS MEDIA", would rather stress irrelevant cartoons of unreality such as Peanuts, pictures of triangular structures highlighting the Southwest complex, and in that same respect quell the blatant racist, atrocious, backward beliefs and myths that this country perpetuates and has been founded upon.

Since we the students faced opposition to get relevant news into the community on a (mind you) small scale, think what THE MANS MASS MEDIA COMPLEXES are keeping from the people. Therefore knowingly covering the true AMERICAN stance toward the advancement and enlightenment of all peoples.

Moving For The Cause

By BILL FOSTER

No matter how relevant or pressing the issue, there seems always to be a body of apathetic racists (and it's not that small) standing ready to dose the flames of positive movement. Harassment of Black students on this campus has finally come to a head. It has seemed almost like a pattern; shitty treatment for Third World students, bullshit negotiations, a cooling off of the repressive actions for a safe period and then back to the old plantation politic again. Too often this pattern takes place. Well it's time to break the caste mold, and set down some new rules. It's going to be fair treatment for everybody or fair treatment for nobody. But even as this call for community solidarity is put forth, we know what to expect.

Almost like clockwork we can expect a reactionary backlash from the administration and faculty and even the student body, in traditional form, moving against the forces of positive change. What cannot be expected is the consolidation of Black and White student forces to move for better conditions for everyone.

The truth underlying this situation is that people don't like to or refuse to make-up, particularly to ugly incidents which could have been dealt with effectively at the time they originated. But then again, have their definition of what constitutes an "efficient solution."

Some real questions to ba asked now are: 1) Will the UMass community at large wake up to the oppression taking place around them? (2) Will such organizations as the Campus Police cease their harassment of Third World Students (particularly in Southwest)? Will the School of Education that takes such pride in it's large Black Enrollment quit playing God by deeming certain individuals 'unqualified' on the basis of their political views? Will there ever be real Communication or genuine effort on the part of UMass administration to end the senseless repressive acts on this campus?

One effective way I see of dealing with the problem at hand is relating outrageous treatment experienced by Third World Students on campus. That's what it's all about. But after all the talking done, let's do some honest dealing. All right, this time, there's time for negotiation. But will there be definite moves towards feasible solutions or will there have to be another Kent State, Jackson State, or Southern University? Only this time using UMass students?

It's very easy to believe that anyone who pushes for social change is a revolutionary and the person who stands pat is pro-establishment; but it isn't that simple. It's like a stream that stops flowing and in a stagnant pond, all the fish die.

Black Community Seeks National Investigation

And so two more of our Brothers have been silenced, this time, at Southern University in Louisiana. How, and to whom do we express our outrage and sorrow? What can be done that will significantly affect the policies of this country, in regards to the blatant disrespect for the lives and bodies of students in general, and Black students in particular?

The responsibility to act is ours. Mr. Nixon and his administration refuse to as much as comment on the killings. Neither have any of the elected officials publicly expressed any emotions, not of condemnation, nor of support for these acts of murder. Nor surprisingly, they don't seem to care.

There is little we CAN do, as Professor Bracey, of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies stated at yesterday's meetings, except rally. Vocalize our concerns and attitudes. Write and send telegrams to those people who hold political offices--demand that they address themselves to the racist slaughters, the genocide of Black people in this country, the senseless murders of two Brothers in Baton Rouge, Louisiana last Thursday.

In an attempt, perhaps futile, the Black community of the University has called on the Senators from Massachusetts, as their elected representatives, to initiate a public investigation and articulate some kind of moral concern, from a position of political influence. The following are the texts of the telegrams which were sent:

Mr. President:

The Black faculty and students of Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire, Amherst Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts deplore the senseless murder of two unarmed, Black students at Southern University. We call upon you to bring to bear, the moral authority of your high office and recent elecoral mandate in publicly condemning this gratuitous and unrestrained use of lethal violence against unarmed Black students.

Coming at this time, such a statement will undoubtedly set the tone of the posture of local law-enforcement agencies towards Black and ethnic minorities during the next four years.

From the five-college Black community

Security Relations

In my three years at the University I have encountered, along with others, countless conflicts with the Campus Police in the form of harassment, insult, and suspicion. I feel that the continuous allegations imposed upon black students by way of police cruisers following us all over campus, being stopped continuously, and questioned for no reason at night, etc., are a direct result of the outright repression being utilized by the Campus Police as their way of expressing the racist attitudes infested in this campus. We, the Black community, have had enough, and are ready to take action.

UMass Relevancy---

To The Editor:

From my understanding the Daily Collegian is a University sponsored newspaper, which means it should be directly related to all events on Campus, which are relevant to its participants.

As far as I can see the Collegian has been used for all purposes except that one. Everyday in the Collegian you can find nature pictures, which have no direct bearing on any events; of great importance on campus. The majority of the spaces used in the Collegian are taken up by senseless advertisements of antiquated movies which have been seen over and over again and again!

My question is WHY isn't the Collegian being put to more fruitful uses?

James E. Adams

---And The Collegian

To The Editor:

As I have heard, the Daily Collegian is supposed to be a paper of the University of Massachusetts community. Anything vital to the community should be printed. You may have been successful in fulfilling the needs of the white community; however, you have not been successful in fulfilling the needs of the Third World Community. So, as a member of the Third World Community, I feel your paper, which should be our paper, is totally irrelevant. (A member of the Third World Community.)

'Don't Mourn, Organize!'

(The following resolution was passed by a New England Regional Conference of the New American Movement, meeting in Amherst, Mass., on the weekend of November 18th and 19th. NAM is a new national organization fighting for a socialist America.)

The murder of two black students at Southern Univerfity last Thursday has brought home to all of us what President Nixon meant when he called for the "end of an era of permissiveness." It means racist murder.

The murders at SU are typical of the response of capitalist society to black and working class struggles: unrestrained and racist violence. The Southern University students were fighting for basic rights: better living and studying conditions, better food and medical care, and for control over the political content of their education. Their struggle is part of a worldwide attack on the system which oppresses us and denies us power over our lives. This is why they were killed, and so many have been before. The Ludlow Massacre, Jackson and Kent Stage, Orangeburg, Attica, Vietnam.

The Students at SU call on us to take actions which express not only outrage and sympathy but solidarity in struggle. As Joe Hill said in his last message before his execution: "Don't mourn. Organize!" Let these deaths strengthen our commitment to the movement to [illegible] this system and establish a just and humane society. Let them be a call to action for all of

THE NEW ENGLAND REGIONAL NEW AMERICAN MOVEMENT

Call For Gun Ban

Black faculty and students met today with Mr. Saul Chafin, Associate Director of the Campus Security Force, in what was described as "the first of what has to be a number of meetings," a spokesman for the Black community said.

The meeting, which lasted three hours, was held in New Africa House at the request of the Black community, to discuss ways to improve the relationship between the campus police force and minority people on the campus

A direct consequence of the Southern University murders, the meeting was requested by the Black community because of a concern that (A) a similar incident was entirely possible on this campus, so long as the campus police continued to be armed, and (B) that if such an incident were to happen here, the chances are that the victim would be Black.

The agenda of items for discussion included two broad categories of concern. The first was the charge of racist attitudes and actions on the part of the Security Force. This was defined as a propensity to stop, question, and otherwise harrass groups of Black students for no visible reason. This was most prevalent late at night, and a number of students reported that, on these occasions, the police officers approached with their hands on, or close to, their weapons

Residents of The Black Corridor of John Adams dormitory also charged that residents of the corridor were being subjected to harrassment in the form of repeated questioning and interrogation whenever incidents took place in Southwest which warranted police attention.

The second concern of the meeting was the question of the carrying of guns by the police. The Blacks questioned whether it was either necessary, appropriate, or wise to have a lethally armed police force in an academic community.

On the first question, Mr. Chafin said that the police had the right to "run a routine license and registration check" on any motorist at any time. Further, he stated that they had the legal right to interrogate anyone, if they had reason to believe that that person was, or might reasonably be involved in a matter under investigation. Mr. Chafin also said, however, that the campus security did not have any policy or practice of stopping people selectively on a basis of race. He said that the police log could be examined to find out if there was a preponderance of Black people being stopped by the police.

On the question of the Black Corridor of John Adams, Mr. Chafin said he had no knowledge of any special attention paid by the police to those students, but that an examination of the police log would indicate whether or not there was any basis for these charges.

Mr. Chafin pointed out that, in none of the cases of student deaths, i.e., Southern University, Orangeburg, Jackson State or Kent State--were the campus police involved. He said that the campus police carried weapons as a matter of state law and University policy, so that any discussion of this question had to proceed on the highest policy-making level of the University. He also pointed out that there was no instance on record of the campus police having used these weapons. The present policy of the force was that these weapons were to be used only "for the protection of the officer's life, or the life of someone else."

Speaking for the Black committee, Mike Thelwell, of the W.E.B. DuBois Department, said, "It is not really necessary to go into the police records to establish a pattern of harrassment of Blacks. What would be proof on a campus of 26,000 whites and 1,000 Blacks, if 50% or 30% of the people stopped by the police are Black? It should be enough for the University that a segment of the community feels themselves to be harrassed, and there is no question that the students feel that way, and I believe they are. I am very hopeful that some particular procedures can be established, which will make possible, a better relationship between Blacks and the Security Forces of the University."

The committee decided to develop a plan, which will be presented to the administration early next week.

Another Lynching, Another Day

Orangeburg has happened. Jackson State has happened. And now Southern University has happened. The shots ripping through our minds with each fleeting thought of another Black life gutted out at near-inception.

But what of perception.

We carefully delineate the plague of the sickness "America". We beat our breasts in anguish and sorrow. And the disease of our liberalism goes unscathed. Tomorrow will come and we can then go on to the business at hand: we can argue the forces of our nature--we can maintain our never-ending search for the Blacker- than-thou-I'm-more-committed-than-you chieftain.

And in our search, we'll have a rally. We will show (for today) our commitment. And the world will know that we are...committed. We shall send out armies of words to combat the bullets of oppression. We shall commit ourselves to our words, for they are truly...committed.

Our liberalism is an epidemic.

For we are liberals. No less liberals than the white liberals upon whom we visit pretend hatred. For we are their brothers moreso than our own. Our values are the same. As are our name, our philosophies and our duration. For we spend our time on "causes"--all very momentary--to which we can "lend" our energies and our talents. And all the while the "reason" goes untended. How many of us were continuing the struggle of the Jackson State Blacksouls before the newest lives were claimed for Baton Rouge.

THE REASON IS US.

And the us is a collective unsure breath that died last Thursday in Baton Rouge as it did so many times before. Reincarnation is unproven and even cats only have 99 lives. How many more of these last "lives" will it take us to do our work.

And yet...even as I speak now, I call up my own impotence. I hear myself saying "We die in battle, and battle in death." But the point remains...

WHO SHALL REVERE THE BLACKSOUL.

Third World Alliance

Oppressed Peoples of the World UNITE!

The murder of the two brothers at Southern University acutely reflects the wretched realities of Third World peoples existence under the yoke of racism and imperialism. The Southern University atrocity should be viewed as another link in the chain of tragic events which have afflicted Third World people since the advent of the colonialists in the Western Hemisphere.

In a time when the initiative of Third World people has lost much of its momentum due to unprecedented levels of repression (e.g. Attica, Jonathan Jackson, George Jackson, Fred Hampton, Mark Clarke, Ruchell Magee, Bobby Seale, Rep of New Africa (in Jackson, Miss.), Black Muslims (in Baton Rouge, New York City, Los Angeles) Erika Huggins, Angela Davis, Native Americans (in D.C. at B.I.A.), Billy Dean Smith, etc., etc., etc.), the Third World Alliance unites in solidarity with the Third World students at Southern University who justifiably struggled to redefine Third World existence politically, socially, economically, etc. in the face of formidable odds and reactionary efforts.

Realizing the potential "danger" that these Third World people represented in their demands which called for "a redefining of the institutions as they relate to the total development of Black and Nixon's law and order lackeys have senselessly and brutally moved not only to suppress the revolutionary actions of students at Southern, but to engender an atmosphere of fear and intimidation, and to create a precedent for similar actions across the nation by murdering unarmed Third World People. Clearly, the vanguard potential that Black institutions embody is the major reason for the national effort to destroy Black institutions. Neo-Colonial administrations and minimal funds have not been enough to crush the revolutionary spirit of Third World students involved in struggle. We understand that these past unsuccessful endeavors are reasons for the attempts to incorporate Black institutions within existing White State institutions. This is a trend that has actualized in some parts of the South already.

Reactionary forces in this country, i.e. pro-Nixonites have attempted to negate the growing constituency of revolutionary forces by insisting that these actions are attributable to "outsiders," e.g. Black Panthers, Republic of New Africa people. The Third World Alliance, along with the students at Southern University understand that all Third World people are "outsiders" in that we are victims of the tyranny by the "insiders" who exploit and dehumanize the people of the world. The situation at Southern University has to be viewed in its totality--against the background of AmeriKKKa's preoccupation with violence. In a society where John Wayne is perceived as a hero and the dominant ideology is the "only good Indian/nigger is a dead Indian/nigger." Third World people become the most vulnerable target to satiate such a cannabalistic mentality.

Understanding the significance of what has transpired at Southern University can reveal many similar existing or potentially existing situations on the campus of the Univ. of Massachusetts. Many questions have arisen over the past few weeks involving the tactics of harrassment and intimidation by the campus police and their intended targets, the Third World community on campus. These local realities must be viewed in a context wherein we understand that such circumstances and conditions could lead to the culmination of another "Southern University Massacre." In order to prevent a possible occurrence of this kind, we, the Third World Alliance demand the DISARMAMENT OF THE UNIVERSITY EMPLOYED POLICE. We strongly oppose the presence of an ARMED "GESTAPO" in a setting that is supposed to have an atmosphere which is conducive to learning. The University community's acceptance of the continued possession of arms in an academic environment, despite numerous examples of the profound danger inherent in such a reality, will represent acquiescence in the face of growing facism and submission to the potential unrestrained and indiscriminate use of lethal violence against unarmed students.

We, the Third World Alliance, urge the entire Third World Community and other concerned constituencies to realize their commitment to the liberation of all oppressed people and condemnation of our continued dehumanization and oppression by assuming the initiative in the determination of our destinies and not allowing ourselves to merely react to the insane mentality and subsequent senseless atrocities of the oppressor. We further urge all Third World people to unite and organize for concrete and progressive action.

The present is the Time for Struggle.

The Future is Ours.

Paul W. Barrows

To The Editor:

The murder at Southern University was as sick as any premeditated murder anywhere. To some people it might have been a shock, but to members of the Third World Community it was no shock, we realize that this happens now, just as it's been happening for four hundred years.

I'm not going to cop a plea to cease with this obviously planned genocide, instead I'm going to say that if the University of Massachusetts can't express a genuine heartfelt sympathy for the Brothers at Southern University, then the incident really happened at Southern, but it was planned here.

Brother Theopholus

Why Do They...?

Why do policemen always stop cars filled with blacks just to see their license and registration, or in any dorm where a robbery takes place make certain to interrogate all black residents? Why badger a group of blacks standing on a street corner? Why do blacks who are suspected of committing a crime get a full scale write up on the front page of the daily paper? Why are a group of young Black high school students who try to put a Black studies program into effect called militants and suspended?

The answer to all of these questions is quite easy to figure out. If you go down South the answer is really very easy to find, seeing how it is written on gigantic billboards in plain language, with lights. Malcolm X once said that any place below Canada is considered the south. The police in the south have the power to shoot anyone they want. There have been many reports of Blacks being beaten up or sometimes killed in jails. In the north a policeman can't do as much as he could in the south, so he has to go through legal means of taking out his frustrations.

No one is saying that all policemen are racist, but what happens when you get two police in the same patrol car who happen to be racist. They can do almost anything that they want to, and get away with it.

Why do campus police at UMass. always seem to have their hand on their gun whenever they stop a Black person driving or walking on campus? Why does a campus police need a gun in the first place, when he has had no real need for one in the past? What could someone do that would make him deserving to be shot, when nothing has happened with campus police with the use of guns since the university has been in existence. How can you put a gun in a man's hand who is racist? A lot of these law-enforcers grew up in racist towns, such as Northampton where Blacks were not wanted to live twenty years ago. How can you give a gun to that kind of man say, from Northampton who is racist and give him the authority to use it as he sees fit. Get rid of guns and you will get rid of killings of Blacks on campus, like the incident at Baton Rouge. At this university there is no need for police to have guns, and there never has been.

Chandler: Control Own Institutions

The rally held in support of the students at Southern University and their demands and also the mourning of the deaths of the two Black brothers, who were murdered there, led to the voicing of other issues. One of the issues raised in particular is what appears to be the present denial of Paul Chandler into the School of Education's graduate program. Following a history surrounding Brother Paul's relationship to the School of Education we found it necessary to interview him, in order that other people in the community could become aware of his struggle with the administration of the School of Education.

The interview is as follows:

Q. Why do you think that the administration of the School of Ed. is trying to block your admittance?

A. I guess it is because of my political posture. You see, the School of Ed. administration reports to be non-political. Which to me, I feel, is a lie because any institution in this country and especially a School of Ed. is a political institution and supports the given political philosophy or ideology of the system that it is under. Be it capitalist or socialist.

Q. Why do you want to get into the School of Ed?

A. Education is my main area of study, and I feel that the School of Ed. is part of a master plan as to the thrust of education in this country. This thrust is centered around Third World people and their aim is to control the direction of educational institutions within our communities. I do not view the methods or objectives of the School of Ed.'s plan as progressive or beneficial to Third World people. Therefore my being there will enable me to critically analyze and write my thesis which directly deals with politics in education as using education as a means of suppression.

Q. Do you feel that because of your political posture you will always find yourself in situations like this?

A. Yes. As long as there is oppression and racism and ignorance, I will be in struggle. This struggle only becomes a problem to those who are the perpetuators of the above.

Q. Did the administration at any time support your candidacy?

A. Yes. They even at one time offered me a faculty position. This position was offered to me verbally by Dwight Allen, the Dean of the School of Ed.

Q. Were there any other people there when he made this offer?

A. The first time the offer was made it was done by phone. Following that conversation with Dwight Allen I met with him along with my adivising committee, at which time he repeated the offer.

Q. Did you accept the offer?

A. NO. I told Dwight Allen that he could not buy me. My reasons were because I felt that he was trying to get me off campus last spring.

Q. Why do you think he wanted you off campus?

A. Again, I think it was my positive political identity with the rest of the Third World people here. He also stated that I was not a "good citizen". Whatever that means. And also, that I caused him lots of trouble which I think he holds me solely responsible for the closing of the marathon last year.

Q. If you don't get into the School of Ed., what will you do?

A. I will continue to work for the liberation of oppressed people. Degrees are not important to me. What is important is that I continue to maintain my integrity and remain a servant of the oppressed always investigating and synthesizing current trends and information.

Q. Are you at a point whereas you are tired of struggling?

A. No, because I feel that there could be no development without struggle. Some people might misinterpret as my saying I love violence, but in fact, I deplore violence. Be it in a classroom, in Vietnam, in the community, or Southern University. My struggle is for the elimination of all the pests, violence being one of them. Therefore, I struggle for perpetual peace by employing whatever are necessary to accomplish this. I also feel that I don't want to just stay here and fight for a degree, but that hopefully I will serve as an example to other people going through the School of Ed. What I am trying to say is that through my experience, others will learn about the duplicity of Dwight Allen, the racism within the School of Ed., and that they have only two choices: (1) Either they be a part of the game of miseducation or (2) they struggle to expose and oppose its perpetuation. As I stated in my conversation with you earlier, that the School of Ed. is part of a plan as to the direction of education in this country. Harvard's School of Ed. will handle the philosophical aspect of this plan, School of Ed. will handle the implemental part that is why I say the School of Ed. is developing pedagogical pimps who are social vampires of the highest order.

Seize The Press

We as concerned Black students of the UMass community held a rally today at the Student Union, concerning the death of the two brothers at Southern University. After organizing ourselves we formed different committees to analyze what was said, and put their ideas in action. Someone made a suggestion that we ask the Collegian if we could have three pages to inform the UMass community of what was said.

So I took a trip upstairs to see if this would be done. I asked Don Bishop (a member of the Collegian's staff) if we could have three pages in the Collegian tomorrow, to let the Brothers and Sisters, and other concerned people know what was going on. He told me that it was impossible to give us the three pages. I asked him why. He repied that if I would have come earlier, then maybe, he could have given us a half page. I said to him that it was very necessary that we get these pages, because, what has happened at Southern University is happening here on this campus and should be made known to the student body and faculty. His reply was that it could not be done because he was in charge and there just wasn't any room. I told him that I, as well as other Black students help support this paper, and since the Collegian is for the UMass community, and since we are part of the community, we should have some say as to its use and direction.

He still insisted it couldn't be done. So I told him that I would be back in a few minutes with support from the other students to see what could be done to resolve the issue of who could use the paper and also who in fact is in charge. I went down stairs to inform the Brothers and Sisters that Mr. Bishop said we couldn't have our three pages. Hearing this upset a lot of people and, we stormed upstairs to demand our rights in support of the collegate, that the required amount of space be alloted.

When Mr. Bishop saw all of us coming into the Collegians office, he immediately changed his attitude, and said that he wasn't the one to decide whether or not we got the pages. He said that he had called the head guy and he was on his way over. After waiting for one hour, Mr. Gold (the head editor) finally arrived. We informed him of what was going on. At first he repeated what Mr. Bishop had stated earlier. We told him that if we couldn't get our three pages that there would be no Collegian printed for November 21, 1972. He immediately changed his attitude, and suggested that his staff add four extra pages to tomorrows addition.

I personally feel he was very cooperative in his decision, although his adding four pages show that he was unwilling to let us use regular space. My point is that the Collegian has never dealt with Black incidents as they really are, and has shown only a dim view, or negative attitude in reporting events in the Third World. And that they never intended to, until WE, as a Black community, demanded that TODAY and for now on, they recognize us just as they recognize the other students here at the University OR forever hold their print.

By any means necessary,

Bracey Calls For Defense Of Democratic Rights

At the rally held today to protest the murder of two Black students at Southern University, Assoc. Prof. John Bracey delivered an inspiring address on the problems facing the Black community at the outset of Nixon's second term in office.

Professor Bracey noted that a rally may not seem to be much but that it is a necessary response to insure that incidents like the Southern University affair do not go challenged. Prof. Bracey called for a defense of the "few democratic right" that we have left. "To fail to defend them" Bracey said "will signal the onset of a right repression even more intense than anything we have seen yet".

Prof. Bracey stressed that pressure must be put on the politicians who have a selfish interest in opposing Nixon's repressive policies. Senators Brooke and Kennedy and the Black caucus were cited.

Prof. Bracey's final point was that fascism was not yet here: Nixon did have to run for re-election, he was not crowned, he did not stage a coup d'etat. The task ahead for the Black community at UMass and across the nation, and for those segments of the white community who still oppose racism, imperialism and colonialism is to rally behind the struggle of the Southern University students, to cry out against the murder of the two brothers, to push those politicians that can be pushed, and to refuse to sit idly by as the nation pursues a course of racist genocide in Vietnam and of racist oppression here at home.

How Long, How Many More?

On November 20, the staff of the Daily Collegian were indicative of the type of response that Black people can expect from the white community here at UMass. There was a confrontation between the staff of the Daily Collegian and members of the Black Community that afternoon. The Black people were refused equal representation in the Collegian; and only after Black people came in a mass to the Collegian office were their demands for news space met. Questions can be raised as a result of that confrontation, questions that are pertinent to the future of Black people on the campus and fundamental to Black people around the world. (1) How many Black people must be killed before the white community, on a whole, becomes responsive to the needs of Black folks so as to take action upon those that are committing these offenses. And (2) What future course of actions can be taken by Black people so as not to allow this genocide to occur again?

We who are Black realize that it is not the entire white community that is committing this genocide; but we also know that it is because of an apathetic white community that the genocide can exist. If the white community became responsive to the needs of Blacks on the campus and in the country, these atrocities as man against his fellow man could not be achieved. If a level of humanity could be raised among white people by white people then these atrocities could not be achieved. The Black man legally was freed from slavery over a hundred years ago, but in reality, Black people are placed in a life and death situation that is worse than any slavery could ever be, the slavery of genocide, of ethnic elimination perpetrated by whites upon Blacks.

Another question that could be raised is "How shall Black peoples deal with the problem of genocide?" If indeed this crime is to be against Black people, Black people must arm themselves both mentally and physically so that these might not happen again. If the white man wants to kill us and ignore this among his society, then we, as Black people, must actively combat these problems if we are to survive. Often we are told that we must wait for equality, that we must look the other way during confrontations when a few of those "crazy niggers" start acting up. I propose that Black people no longer wait for the grace of the white man before we can claim what is legally ours by being human beings. The white community must be made to realize that Black people are people also, and that they have the same legal rights as the other members of the world. Brothers, deal with these questions now, for tomorrow might be too late. Who knows when the far awayness of Baton Rouge might become a reality of Amherst.

It's All Right Here

To The Editor:

Yesterday I was closeted away, doing those things of vital importance here at UMass/Amherst, i.e.,

1) Reflecting on the rhetoric debate
2) Studying so that my records would indicate what a dynamite person I am (should anyone care to know, although "grades don't matter" according to practically everybody)
3) pissed off at: another lousy Blue Wall Meal
   b) Nixon
   c) The War
   d) All of the above
   e) None of the above

Being a good liberal who reads the Times, I was also thinking about an article dealing with the attempt by the families of the four students shot at Kent State to petition congress for a satisfactory investigation of a heinous crime. Good liberals still talk about Kent State, but do they remember Jackson State? (Oh yeah. That case was closed some time ago wasn't it?) Brothers and Sisters, that case has been reopened and the scene is Parish County, Louisiana. If you have a good enough memory, you are already familiar with the name--if not, doing a little civil rights history will serve to jog your memory and reveal that there has been on-going oppression, repression, and what the sheriff would call "a little trouble with them niggahs" for as long as anyone can remember. Parish county only hits the news when black kids are kept out of white schools by force, or when two brothers get their bodies blown apart by 'unknown sources'. We don't have to worry about it though, because the National Guard is right there to protect National Interests and Amerikan Property. We are also very lucky that here at UMass we have a campus of 25,000 docile bodies. Otherwise, we might have the opportunity to know and understand 'first hand' what the brothers in Baton Rouge are trying to say.

It would seem that all of the demonstrations, all of the trials, and all of the Fred Hamptons who've gone down in the last few years of our brotherloving, enlightened, and liberated, educative past haven't served their purpose. Who were Cheney, Goodman, and Schwerner anyway? How many more will it take? There is a war going on right here in the streets at home, and it has just been given a vote of confidence for another four years. There is no justification of what has happened at Baton Rouge. What took place there November 16, 1972 cannot and must not be tolerated. The Brothers and Sisters there must be supported, for they stand as proof that as long as one among us is denied his or her civil rights, all of us are denied our civil rights.

Spare Us, MDC

To The Editor:

Yes, "once again we see the insiduous (sic) projection of racism in the Daily Collegian," (Oct. 17)———a free but irresponsible press.

If being featured in the Collegian means that we might be subjected to the generalizations, rationalizations, and lies of Yacundu Sukare, and used by the Third World Alliance for its own purposes, then please spare us from ever being featured in your paper.

And to Mr. Sukare——

Let us tell you who Marilyn Dyer is. She is not another Chris Conners or June Christie; she is Marilyn Dyer, a human being, like yourself, who deserves the right to be herself. She doesn't need inconsiderate opportunists making her look like a feminist or a racist. The same applies, by the way, to Max Roach and Fred Tillis.

Also, thanks for the half-baked half coverage of half the Jazz Workshop Concert. It was more than the Collegian wrote; or are you their music critic? Just a few corrections: 1) You made a fine judgement analysis of that part of the concert done by the Voices of New Africa, under the direction of Prof. Max Roach, but you gave Dr. Tillis no credit for his direction of the Jazz Workshop, which, you might remember, shared in the music of "Singin' wid a Sword in mah han'." 2) If I may quote Louis Armstrong in a letter in the book Hot Jazz, by Hughes Panassie, "I should say 'hot music' shall last forever. There'll probably be new names for it, that's all. There have been several names for it since I can remember way back to the good ol' days in New Orleans, La., when hot music was called 'ragtime music', 'jazz music,' 'gut bucket music,' 'swing music,' and now 'hot music.' So you see, instead of dying out, it only gets new names." So go ahead and call it "black vocal and instrumental music," Mr. Sukare, but remember you don't have to be black to make black music. 3) The person who played the greatest role in developing and organizing black music, if you will, was Joe Oliver, otherwise known as "King" Oliver, a black trumpeter; hence, "Duke" Ellington, and "Count" Basie. Max Roach is right, but talk about "a distortion of cultural, social, and historical reality or truths"...(No offense, Mr. Roach, we are sure your analysis was in context).

Finally, may we say that we and everyone else in the music department are vitally interested in finding the person best qualified for the post of Music Department Chairman. Please don't insult our intelligence by assuming that the terms "musical giants" and "best equipped" will automatically make our decision an easy one. Such fancy language is out of place.

And using a joyful musical experience such as last Tuesday's as an excuse for propaganda-throwing, is out of place as well. Shouldn't we be proud and build from there rather than try to tear down the real feeling of unity that was present that night? That, after all, is what music is all about. Or isn't it?

Spirit Of Rip-Off

To The Editor:

As the full impact of the Christmas season descends upon the campus, the already disastrous shoplifting situation is likely to get worse.

Two women were recently sentenced to six (6) months in jail at Framingham (which was suspended upon payment of a $200 fine) as first offenders for shoplifting articles of the value of about $1.59.

Persons under the age of twenty-one may expect to have to hire a lawyer (between $100 and $250 usually) if they are charged with shoplifting by a local merchant.

Please remember that the law permits a merchant to detain a person suspected of shoplifting for a reasonable period of time. Also remember that no matter what your intentions really are, shoplifting has occurred if you put any merchandise in a pocket, purse or bag even if you haven't passed through a check-out counter.

Every holiday season I have been called to arrange bail or counsel for students who have committed petty crimes and want to be home for Christmas. Very frequently they are required to appear in Court during the week after Christmas.

I have no wish to moralize on shoplifting. Those who do engage in the practice can expect a fairly strong likelihood of apprehension, subsequent conviction, payment of a stiff fine, possible jail time, and a pretty rotten Christmas. It's your thing to do or not to do. But it usually hurts much more than the satisfaction that is ever realized.

If anyone ever wondered why the Mental Health Service is located in Machmer Hall, rack your brains no longer, it's strategically placed. Right across the way are the offices of the Collegian and the Student Senate.

Looks like all the snow melted right under the skis of the winter freaks. Too bad. Had it lasted a little longer they would have had more chance to fall and feel foolish.

Overheard: "The parking office is really crafty. They issue more parking stickers than there are spaces, then they tag the cars that can't find a space."

We wish the letters on this page had been just a little bit longer. Then there wouldn't have to be so many of these damn Editorial Points to write.

It looks like the Patriots are going to have quite a shakeup when the season ends. Maybe a trade will be in order. How about Jim Plunkett for a coach who can stand the Pats?

Ever since the last time we complained, the lights in the middle of campus have been on every night. Is the pen mightier than the sword? Maybe the pen is just mightier than Physical Plant.

You're Wrong, Ed

To The Editor:

As I read through Ed. Bryant's article on the Rhetoric requirement (published Friday, 17 November), I couldn't help but wonder whether Mr. Bryant was consciously attempting to give us an example of Orwell's No-think. The reference to Orwell's book was obvious enough and the quality of the thought expressed in the article was certainly consistent with the No-think concept. But after rereading the article and noting the injunction to the Board of Trustees, I realize that Mr. Bryant's emulation of No-think is not conscious at all. I should therefore like to take exception to three of Mr. Bryant's points.

First, Mr. Bryant suggests that no one can legislate literacy and further, that no one should try. It is apparent, of course, that many countries do in fact legislate literacy; Mr. Bryant's early education, as well as my own and that of most readers of the Collegian was a product of legislation. The less apparent but more significant point made by Mr. Bryant is that no one should try to legislate literacy. If we look at the implications of this statement, it becomes chillingly obvious that Mr. Bryant advocates the same kind of mass ignorance that Orwell would surely have found repugnant. Realizing that education is the key to an equitable position in our society, are we to assume that Mr. Bryant would restrict that key by fostering the concept of selective education?

Mr. Bryant also uses an example of No-think in his equation of "correct usage" with "censorship." As Mr. Bryant certainly must realize, censorship deals with what is being said whereas correct usage deals with how something is being said. But more important, just as with his comments about legislating literacy, Mr. Bryant seems to advocate a policy of educational subjugation by suggesting that "freedom to abuse the language is an essential freedom." Why essential? Why freedom? Realizing that the abuse of the language often results in the inability of a person to effectively and clearly express his or her ideas to someone else, we must look again at Mr. Bryant's statement: if he feels that people should have the freedom to be misunderstood, to be incoherent, to be ineffective as individuals because they lack the ability to influence others through language, just whose freedom is Mr. Bryant concerned with and why is that freedom essential?

Finally Mr. Bryant suggests that the ability to communicate really isn't all that important, that it has been his experience that "most people survive with an imperfect knowledge of the language." I would ask Mr. Bryant whether "survival" is enough. After all, the cave men survived, animals survived; people in the ghetto today survive.

No, Mr. Bryant, survival isn't enough; minimum levels of competence are no longer adequate or acceptable, and your attempt to glorify the mediocre and to perpetuate a subtle variety of academic elitism is not going to fool the members of the university community. If you believe that the Rhetoric Department is not doing its job, then suggest ways in which the department can more effectively help the students--all the students--to master the language. But don't patronize the students on this campus by suggesting that mastering the language isn't important, unless you believe, or you feel the students believe, that only a few people should master the language and speak, and that the rest of society should just tag along behind and listen. And obey!

To the Editor:

I'd like to nominate Dick Allen as Sportsmen of the Year. Not only was he the American League's best hitter but he was the first of the Duane Thomas, Joe Don Looney school to reform his bad-guy image and help his team and himself in ways other than economic.

I stress the word "image". I don't think that Allen ever was a true "bad guy" in the same league with Ilie Nastase of tennis or Joe Don Looney. Not unlike Ted Williams, he struck back at badgering by the press and sometime sheer vandalism by the fans in Philadelphia, the worst in American sport. Unlike Williams, who used to spit up at the press box after home runs and shoot the bird at the Boston fans, Allen kept his protests to a dull roar, asking for salaries which he felt were proportional to his ability and past performances and scratching symbols in the infield when it was inevitable that he would be traded. So the press responded further, harder criticism, Allen scratched more symbols, and his problems resembled an inflationary spiral.

But in Chicago they stopped the harrassment, called him "Dick as he asked to be called, and he responded with the best season an American leaguer has had since Carl Yasztremski in 1967. And in his acceptance of the American League Most Valuable Player award he stressed that his accomplishments were team contributions rather than individual exploits Dick Allen has shown that with a little cooperation from press and fans, an athlete can more than meet them halfway.
